Negro Progress Being Slowed

Post-Herald

In regards to the segregation issue down South, the courts can not be partisan and at the same time hold the honor, prestige and dignity that they have always been afforded by the people of our nation. P. 12

But why do such organizations as the NAACP mainly operated out of the North wish to alienate and slow down the progress of the Southern Negro? That is precisely what such organizations are doing. Wed. 2-8-56

The Southern Negro no more wishes to mix in schools of the South than the white people do. And regardless of any decisions of law whether it be from Washington, D. C. or Birmingham, Ala., or any other point, the people of the South will retain white schools for the whites and Negro schools for the Negroes.

We cannot lay blame to any one political party on these recent court rulings. The judges that ruled on this issue were appointees of Roosevelt, Truman and Eisenhower.

PROGRESS FOR THE NEGRO

Times Herald

The resistance in some Southern states to the Supreme Court's anti-segregation ruling makes news that we often have to put on the front pages of our newspapers, but this is not the only kind of news that affects our Negro neighbors and fellow-citizens. The Census Bureau brings out some figures and conclusions that show that, in spite of some setbacks, we are moving toward equal opportunity.

The bureau reported on Wednesday that non-white residents of the United States were now holding better jobs than they did ten years ago at the end of the Second World War. The bureau finds a "steady improvement" in job opportunities for Negroes. It describes this evolution as one of "the most important social and economic developments of the past several decades."

The report still has to point to a time lag "in education, income and type and adequacy of employment" from which the Negro, because of historical circumstances, still suffers. Some day he will catch up and our children will probably wonder why it all took so much doing. Of course the white man finds it easier to be patient about the slow growth in the other man's opportunities. Yet for the Negro and the other colored races, and for all who love justice, there is no reason to despair.

ROLE OF NEGRO CHANGING FOR BETTER IN U. S.

Daily Pilot
Chicago, Ill.
Mon. 3-5-56

New York, March 4 [Special] —Conditions for Negroes in this country are improving, assistant Secretary of Labor J. Ernest Wilkins asserted here.

While Negroes still are subjected to inequality in employment, education, and housing, "the cloak of freedom is sitting much better on our collective shoulders these days," he said.

He added that "if there needs to be a little tailoring done here and there, I have no doubt that it will finally get done."

Wilkins spoke at a recent joint annual dinner of the National Urban league and the Urban League of Greater New York in the Waldorf-Astoria hotel.

The leagues presented awards to James Felt, chairman of the New York City planning commission, and Winthrop Rockefeller for their contributions toward "achievement of equal opportunity as a broadly accepted and respected component of the American democracy."

Felt is a director, former president and board chairman of the Urban League of Greater New York. Rockefeller is a trustee of the National Urban league.

Wilkins declared that "the image of the Negro as a poor downtrodden member of society, a victim of a mass inferiority complex, living in a vermin-infested slum, doesn't jibe either with the facts or with our ambitions and expectations."

Census Bureau Holds Negro Status Is Steadily Improved

Daily World Thurs. 3-15-56 P. 1
Atlanta, Ga.

WASHINGTON, D. C. — (NNPA) — One of the most important social and economic developments in the past several decades has been the steady improvement in the status of colored persons, the Census Bureau reported Friday.

("Colored persons" as used here includes Negroes, Indians, Japanese, Chinese, and other non-white groups).

"Colored persons" as used here includes Negroes, Indians, Japanese, Chinese and other nonwhite groups.

While colored people still lag behind whites in many respects, including education, income, and type and adequacy of employment, the report said, historical differences between them and whites have been narrowing.

Of the population of 102,946,000 whites not inmates of institutions, 58,793,000, or an average of 57 per cent of the whites 14 years old and over, were in the labor force in 1955, according to the report.

Of a colored population of 11,394,000, not counting inmates of institutions, 7,034,000, or an average of 62 per cent of colored persons 14 years old and over, were in the labor force.

The report pointed out that colored women have traditionally worked in larger proportions than whites. In 1955, 2,697,000 or about 44 per cent of all colored women were in the labor force, as compared with 18,110,000 or 34 per cent of the white women.

Colored persons quitting sharecropping and other small-scale farm work, said the report, has been a major factor in reducing the gap between the proportion of whites and colored people in the labor force. This gap has been as much as 8 percentage points in 1947.

Job differences are still quite large, the Census Bureau said, with colored people predominating in the relatively unskilled, low-paying fields, but there has been some improvement since World War II.

About 12 per cent of the colored people in the labor force are currently in professional, managerial, and other white-collar occupations, as compared with only 9 per cent shortly after World War II.

In the skilled and semi-skilled "blue collar" occupations, the report said, there has been no marked change in the past few years, but colored workers have generally held on to the gains made during World War II.

Unemployment rates have continued to be a good deal higher among colored workers than among whites, the report said. It added that statistics showed that colored workers in almost every industry group are more likely to be limited to part time jobs and less likely to get year-round employment.

To some extent, the report said, these differences are probably due to the concentration of colored workers in the less skilled occupations within each industry group.

The Census Bureau reported that there is saill a wide gap between the kinds of work typically open to colored and white workers. The proportions are reversed in the service and other unskilled nonfarm occupatious, which employ about 47 per cent of the colored workers but only 14 per cent of the whites.

Colored workers are relatively less numerous than whites in manufacturing industries, although the difference is mainly in the category of craftsmen rather than in the semiskilled or unskilled jobs.

Other industries in which the whites still hold a long lead are wholesale and retail trade and some of the higher paying service activities—finance, business services, etc.

Both colored and white workers show similar proportions in the public administration field, indicating a considerable improvement for colored workers in government.

Wilkins lauds progress in Texas; envisions new day

Afro-American P. 8

HOUSTON, Texas (NNPA) — Generations now being born will not know the limitations of jim crow sections of buses, third rate theaters, fourth rate restaurants, fifth rate schools and sixth rate jobs, J. Ernest Wilkins, Assistant Secretary of Labor, declared Saturday.

Addressing the Houston branch of the National Alliance of Postal Employees, Mr. Wilkins said the children of today will have new horizons of social and economic achievement and it will be partly their chore to provide world leadership.

Mr. Wilkins recounted the advances made by colored employees in the postal service and in the Post Office Department since the Eisenhower administration took office three years ago.

Baltimore Md.

IN HOUSTON, he pointed out, colored employees in the main post office now serve at the money order and parcel post windows, and a newly named assistant to the regional transportation manager for the Dallas region has personnel responsibilities for the New Orleans, Fort Worth, and Memphis districts.

"The respect shown by cities such as San Antonio for the recent decisions of the United Supreme Court barring segregation," Mr. Wilkins said, "is another example of how Texans are law abiding and fair and just Americans, and do not, contrary to the popular opinion of young television viewers, settle their differences with a six-shooter."

He added that "The progress made in Texas is important and should be nourished and helped to grow. For, wherever one group builds a place of privilege by oppressing some other group, there develops a chasm between them so wide and so deep that it is almost impossible to bridge it."

Negroes Have Same Intellectual Capacities As Whites Says Expert

Negroes have the same innate abilities, but environmental and economic factors often hamper them from expressing their full potential, declared a noted university professor of psychiatry during a panel discussion Sunday on the "Racial Aspects of Human Intelligence" at St. Mary's Dominican College.

Dr. Benjamin Pasamanick of Ohio University, chairman of the committee on reasearch of the American Academy of Child Psychiatry, stated that studies have proved conclusively that Negroes have the same intellectual capacities as whites.

Pointing out that the concept of Negroes as inferior beings grew hand in hand with exploitation of colored people, Dr. Pasamanick stated that an overwhelming majority of psychologists felt the evidence indicated Negroes were full the equal of whites in intellectual potential.

He explained that "intelligence tests" in reality tested the individual's past experience rather than his innate intelligence.

Emphasizing the importance of proper nutrition in bringing the child's capacities to full fruition, Dr. Pasamanick related that studies proved Negro babies often were smaller in weight and height than white babies, adding that where the babies apparently had received the same nutritional advantages with similar weight and height, they had very much the same mental apptitude.

In giving an example of the importance of environment, he said the northern Negro, in tests taken during World War I, did better than Southern whites. This, he added, was due to poor schooling prevalent in the South during that time.

Dr. William L. Kolb, professor of sociology at Tulane University, was chairman. Participants on the panel were Dr. Munro S. Edmonson; Dr. Irving Fosberg; Dr. Robert Lancaster; Dr. Harold Leif, and Dr. Joseph T. Taylor. The invocation and benediction were given by Dr. Henry Montecino, S. J., of Loyola University.

Race Relations In A Larger Picture

Editor Edward J. Meeman In The Memphis Press-Scimitar

RACIAL tension in the South which has resulted in some violence shows that things have been moving in a dangerous direction. The progress of the South was set back several generations by one great unnecessary conflict which clear thinking and right feeling, reason and patience on both sides could have avoided. We cannot afford another conflict, great or small.

It is time to stop and think where we are headed, and make sure we are headed in the right direction.

No race in human history has made such progress as the American Negro since 1865. That progress has been accelerated since 1933. The rate of progress was still increasing when came the Supreme Court decisions of 1954 and 1955. At first it was thought that these meant further progress for the Negro. But in the South, where most of the Negroes live, the effect has been different from what was intended and expected. Since these decisions, not only has a brake been applied to the progress of the Negro but there has been some movement backward. Race relations in the South have deteriorated.

In order that we may deal intelligently and effectively with the present situation, in order that good race relations may be restored in the South, and progress in improvement of race relations resumed, we need to put race relations in a larger picture.

LET both races look at the larger picture.

Today the biggest issue in the world is the struggle between communism, tyranny, slavery, atheistic materialism and militarism on the one hand and democracy, freedom, individualism and spiritual religion and peace on the other.

Those of us who want to win that great struggle cannot afford to lose our heads, be we white or Negro.

Put the questions now being debated between white Americans and Negro Americans against that background of danger which threatens to overwhelm both races, and there should be no difficulty in settling our differences peaceably and amicably.

We cannot win this struggle without the loyalty of our Negro people. Of our total population of 150,697,361 as shown by the 1950 census, 15,042,286 are Negro. That is a sizable and important minority. In the South the proportion of Negroes is much greater.

Thinking, patriotic white people will recognize that we cannot afford, by any lack of justice or goodwill on our part, to lose the loyalty of this minority.

Thinking, patriotic Negro people will recognize that the "equality" which communists offer them is only equality in slavery, poverty and torture. It is strong evidence of the good sense of the Negro people that only a few have failed to see through the deceitful temptations the Reds offer them.

All over the world colonialism is coming to an end and colored races, yellow, brown and black, are being lifted to a position of equality. American Negroes, too, are asking for equality. Modern science tells us that all races have equal potentiality for development.

NEVERTHELESS, in the United States, and especially in the South, while right-thinking white people want the Negro to have every opportunity for equal development, most of them do not believe too intimate association of the races is a good thing. There is resistance to forced desegregation of schools and swimming pools, and the like. Such resistance should be only by legal means, should never be in spirit of hatred.

We believe the Negroes themselves want to associate with their own people in school, church and social life more than some of their present leaders will admit. If Negroes do not prefer their own modes of life and entertainment, why does it profit white men to run all Negro radio stations?

We believe that once the Negro wins recognition of his equal dignity as a human being, once he is no longer treated with contempt but is treated with respect, instead of there being more mixing of the races, there will be less, because the Negro and the white equally will prefer association with his own kind.

Why should we withhold from the Negro the equal respect his heart craves? A man who belittles one of another race only belittles himself.

The problem we must solve is not easy. But there is no question that if the citizens who are men of good will and moderate views will take responsibility for what is to be done, we will do the right thing, and come through safely.

DuBois Urges Negroes to Note Race Progress

Noted Author Says 1957 to Usher in Many Centenaries

NEW YORK, (ANP) — W. E. B. DuBois, noted Negro author and lecturer, has urged Negro organizations such as newspapers, colleges and organizations to take cognizance that the year 1957 will usher in a series of centenaries important to the history of the Negro.

DuBois pointed out that 1957 marks the 100th anniversary of the Dred Scott decision; 1959 brings the 100th anniversary of the death of John Brown; 1963, the 100th anniversary of the Emancipation Proclamation; 1961-65, the 100th anniversary of the participation of American Negroes in the Civil War; 1968, the 100th anniversary of the death of Thaddeus Stevens, of the enfranchisement of the Freedmen and Freedmen's Bureau; 1927, the 100th anniversary of the birth of Paul Laurence Dunbar; and 1976, the 100th anniversary of the Bargain of 1876.

The noted Negro leader suggested that these dates should be marked and celebrated in history by Negroes, "but not as occasions for controversies or exacerbation of race hate."

Eagle P. 6

Said DuBois: "There are many other significant anniversaries which recall Negro history and the cultural tie of the black man with American history. If we neglect to mark this history, it may be distorted or forgotten. Already repeated efforts are being made to prove that slavery was not the cause of the Civil War; to minimize the part of Negroes in the slavery controversy and the war; to slander friends of the Negro, and to represent his enfranchisement as a serious mistake."

He said these occasions should be celebrated and dedicated to calm and scientific inquiry into the past, participated in by persons of authority, white and black, northern and southern.

"I suggest that these celebrations be varied in character, place and sponsorship; we have only to be sure that no important event or person is forgotten in these centenaries of the first participation in the first civilization of the U.S. of the Negro masses as free citizens," Dubois said.

He advised that colleges might celebrate jointly or singularly the birthdays of distinguished men; newspapers might issue special editions to recall great events; organizations might hold special meetings or alert their branches and fraternities to offer prize s for essays or even books on certain subjects.

Responsibility For Racial Progress Job Of All People

World Tues. 3-27-56

Birm, Ala.

BY KENNETH B. CLARK

Installment 2

"This is a time of hope, of challenge, and of excitement. We are on the threshold of substantial progress in human relations and full and equal rights. responsibilities and obligations as American citizens No force or combination of forces can stop this for the Negroes. If it is denied the Negro, it will be denied to all. This is the irresistable logic of the contemporary world."

"Yet there are those, many of them reasonable men of good-will and good intentions, who have counselled caution, timidity, or retreat. They are afraid that race relations are worsening and that if the Negro pushes too hard and insists now upon his full rights as an American citizen, he will lose more than he will gain. They preach a gospel of respect for the status quo and urge the Negro to be patient. They rationalize their willingness to have the Negro continue to suffer the stigma of segregation and bear the brunt of flagrant racial injustices by standing in reasonable language and soothing tones that progress in race relations takes time and must come about gradually; that it can not be forced by law, legalism or judicial decisions; and that one must change the hearts and minds of whites before the Negro can be granted his constitutional rights guaranteed other American citizens.'

"Some of those who express this point of view contradict themselves by pointing to the tremendous recent progress in the status of the Negro in America. They forget that this progress came about because impatient. The Negro started to move toward freedom, justice, and equality only when he became righteously impatient."

"Progress in race relation in America has resulted primarily from the clarity and firmness of the judicial branch of our Federal government . Since the early 1930's, the Federal courts have handed down decisions which have strengthened the constitutional rights and equality of citizenship of Negroes. These decisions have affirmed the right of equality of Negroes in voting, public accommodations, interstate transportation, public recreational facilities, teacher salaries, graduate and professional education the role of the judiciary in the enforcement of restrictive covenants, and in state supported elemenary and secondary schools. These decisions were made possible by the impatience of Negroes like you. Not one of these cases was initiated by a white person who was conscience stricken by the injustice being perpetrated against his Negro fellow citizens."

"The effective, and I believe complete, integration of the Negro in the armed services is the only recent, major, governmental accomplishment in America race relations that did not result from judicial action,. This was due to strong executive action, probably reflecting the imperatives for military efficiency in the modern world."

"Progress in race relations does not reflect any prior change in the "heart and minds" of the masses of prejudiced white citizens. Certainly nearly 100 years since emancipation is long enough for such ethical and moral changes to manifest themselves if they are of practical social significance."

"Those who argue against the power of law as an influence in race relations should read Professor Van Woodward's excellent book this distinguished white historian of John Hopkins' University shows convincingly that the pattern of racial segregation found in southern and some border states was imposed by laws passed during the latter part of the 19th Century and did not reflect "generations of tradition."

Portland Race Progress Told

Defender P. 2 Sat. 5-26-56

Chicago, Ill.

Dr. Norval Unthank, Portland, Ore., physician and surgeon, stopped in Chicago Tuesday enroute to Boston to attend a meeting of the National Council of the YMCA.

During his short stay, he visited the Chicago Defender and the Urban League where he saw his friend, Edwin Berry, who came here several months ago from Portland where he had headed the Urban League for several years.

According to Dr. Unthank, it was the Urban league in Portland along with the NAACP and a couple of other agencies, which led the way toward improved race relations in the city.

Before World War II, race relations in the city were horrible he said, and then with a huge influx of Negroes during the war, it became worse. At that time, the Negro population increased from 2,000 to approximately 20,000.

With the cooperation of industrials and some municipal officials, the Urban league tackled the problem; a study of the Negro was made and the improvement process began.

Today, Dr. Unthank says, all hotels in the city accept Negroes and the same is true in most restaurants, theatres and other public places. There is an improvement in housing and in job opportunities. Schools have always been interracial, he added.

The three Negro doctors in Portland serve on the staffs of white hospitals and Dr. Unthank is on the medical committee of one of the hospitals.

A practicing physician in Portland for the past 25 years, Dr. Unthank is a graduate of the University of Michigan, University of Kansas and Howard university.

On this trip East, he will attend the meeting of the National Tuberculosis association in New York city, May 20-25 and then go to Washington, D C., where he will attend the 30th reunion of his Howard class.

The YMCA council meeting in Boston is set for May 18-20. Dr. Unthank has been a member for the past five years. Before the regular meeting opens, an interracial meeting will be held May 17th.

Fortune Story Deals with Negro Economy

Eagle Tulsa, Okla.

NEW YORK — (ANP) — One of America's leading national magazines said in a recent article that the United States economy has been the chief source behind the gains of the American Negro.

Fortune Magazine editor Emmett Hughes said "during the past 25 years the gains of Negroes have not come through preachment, political action or Supreme Court decisions, but rather through the U.S. economy itself."

Hughes said: "the Negro has advanced farther during this time than in the 70 odd years since emancipation and he will "not be satisfied indefinitely with a second class economic life."

Thurs. 9-13-56

The magazine also reports that Negro leaders, fresh from legal victories on the school front, are now working toward a breakthrough in the arena of greatest resistance—housing.

Facts Are Revealed

The Negro population's total cash income after taxes is $15,250,000,000 and represents today a purchasing power almost matching the value of all merchandise annualy exported from the U. S. It denotes a market almost as great as Canada, and twice the size of Australia.

One in every three urban Negro families own their own homes, and recently Negro home ownership in cities has been rising much faster, proportionately, than white.

In no area of the Negro's life has his economic future been more harshly handicapped than in his education. A census study in 1952 revealed that while 33.3 per cent of Negroes above the age of 65 were unable to read or write, among youths (ages 14-24) the illiteracy rate had fallen to 3.9 per cent.

Thurs 9-13-56

Negroes in Colleges

There are more than half again as many Negroes in U.S. colleges and universities as there are subjects of Great Britain attending British universities.

But Fortune points out, there are still many dismal evidences of forces standing in the way of Negro progress.

Discrimination is still the norm in industry; "the dirtier the job, the more readily it is available to the Negro."

There is still much discrimination in unions, which, by and large, have not been the great champion of Negro rights that many liberals have been led to believe.

Quotes NAACP Leader

Fortune quoted one NAACP leader as saying "the CIO has "sold quite a bill of goods to the American liberal about its racial record."

The magazine added that in the South, labor unions more than any other institution (with the possible exception of the Roman Catholic Church) have effectively assisted Negro organizations in putting pressure on the barriers of segregation.

Of some 9 million privately financed housing units erected between 1935 and 1950, only slightly over one per cent have been open to Negroes. In the most crowded Negro block in Harlem, the population density is equivalent to crowding everyone in the U.S. into two-thirds of New York City.

The bleakest area of Negro life, Fortune says, is the Negro farm. The plight of the Negro farmer has been getting worse and worse for more than 30 years.

Cites Farmer's Problems

According to the magazine:

"The Negro farmer lacks, in the best of times, even enough knowledge of the law to acquire sound title to his land; oral leases are legally permissable in every Southern state.

"In a revolutionary time of mechanization, the Negro farmer is economically crippled. He lacks capital. He lacks credit. He lacks enough acreage to support mechanization. He lacks the technical skill to mechanize."

"In this mid-20th century, the American Negro is, in effect, acquiring his freedom in a most ancient way. He is buying it. His progress is due, not exclusively, but essentially, to conomic forces heeding no moral command but simply creating jobs where none previously existed."

However, Fortune says, that any faltering of the American economy will probably hurt the Negro far more deeply than the white worker.

"During the 1949 and 1954 recessions, unemployment rates were higher among Negroes than among whites in every industry and occupation group, the magazine observed.

The Negro holds "an especially high stake in the life span of the current boom," the article says, "for each year of prosperity means another year of job seniority, another year to strive for the skills that no machine can displace and above all—another year to force labor unions into still deeper commitments to defend the rights of Negroes as zealously as the rights of white workers."

ATLANTA — (ANP) — Dr. Rufus E. Clement, president of Atlanta university, has given the British people the other side of the story so frequently told abroad regarding America's treatment of its minority group.

Speaking over the British Broadcasting Company's network, Dr. Clement told a luncheon audience of the English-Speaking Union in London recently that the United States was making constan progress in its efforts to give full citizenship to its minority groups.

Concerning the treatment accorded Negro Americans, Dr. Clement deplored such developments as the Nat King Cole incident, the Autherine Lucy case, and the rise of Citizens Councils in the South. He said, however, that these were only one side of the picture and that there was another and more positive side which he would attempt to show.

He cited the elimniation of segregation in the armed forces, the extension of the franchise to Negroes in the South, the election of Negroes to political office, their admission to 12 southern state universities, and the acceptance of the Supreme Court decision by prominent southern leaders and organizations as being legally and morally right.

In the audience were several members of Parliament, as well as representatives of the press and labor.

His appearance before the English-Speaking club culminated a six-week visit of Europe.

In London, he and Mrs. Clement were guests at numerous social functions given by members of the government and private parties.

Dr. Clement has just returned to America.

INSTALLMENT I

"In awed admiration, I salute the Negroes and those white citizens of Montgomery, Alabama, who have shown the world that the passionate yearning of the Negro for full equality is not merely a pious wish. It has become the very substance of our lives. We are no longer willing to sit back and expect others to throw us the crumbs of hypocritical equality. We no longer sit back and accept their condescension, contempt and cruelty. We now affirm and demand our rights as human beings and American citizens. What is more, if there are risks, we are now ready and willing to accept them."

"To the Negro citizens of the South—to the Negroes of Alabama, Georgia, Mississippi, South Carolina, Louisiana, and Florida; to those of you whose daily life is a monument to the imperishable dignity of the human soul; to those of you for whom courage and dignity are as necessary for life as are air and water; to those of you who have chosen to remain in your homes and on your land without retreating and handing a victory to bigotry by default; to all of you, I come, not bringing the all too cheap gifts of advice, admonition, and glittering over-simplification of the real and complex problems which you face.

"I come from the North where it is easy to have courage and I see your courage. And then I come humbly because by your intelligent struggles you have made me proud to be a Negro.

"You have made it possible for me, in the North, to hold my head erect and look any man in the face.

"You have made it possible for us to say to the peoples of Africa and Asia and Europe and South America that we, the American Negro, are also a part of the world-wide struggle for freedom. We also are making sacrifices in order to overthrow the yokes of tyranny and injustice.

"You have made it possible—and this is literally true—for me to tell my daughter and my son that they can be proud to be Negroes. They need not cringe and cower under the stigma of inferiority which the racists seek to maintain around them. They need no longer doubt whether their people are indeed worthy of no more respect than they have been given. The proof of our equality is found in the struggles of the past 1[illegible] years. It is found in the simple human dignity of the rural Negro in Clarendon County, South Carolina whose refusal to be intimidated led to the first case challenging the constitutionality of segregated schools. Our equality is seen in the incisive reasoning of the lawyers of the N. A. A. C. P. who fought these cases through our Federal courts, culminating in the historic May 17, 195[illegible] decision. This decision will stand as a landmark in the tortuous path of men as they move toward the ideals of a democratic society. The Negroes equality is seen in the recent event in Montgomery, in Tuscaloosa, and in more communities to come. In all history human beings who have not demanded, worked, or sacrificed for their rights have become inferior and have been treated as such. Human beings who have accepted their stigmatized status without protest have become inferior people. There is no social tension when the oppressed group accepts inferiority. Conflict comes only when a group that knows that it is noti nferior is being treated as if it were.

"You have ushered in a glorious period of American history and a golden era of progress for the Negro. Take notice of this fact. Since 1954, over 200,000 Negro children who were previously relegated to segregated schools are now attending non-segregated schools in which they are learning to be free, equal, and truly competent American citizens."

"8. They threaten interposition and defiance of the United States Supreme Court and the whole system of Federal laws which govern the unity and cohesion of the United States."

"This will not work because they cannot have the advantages of being part of the United States while rejecting the obligations and responsibilities which this entails."

"They cannot interpose or nullify this decision without weakening the power and prestige of the Courts in decisions which are to their advantage. The Federal Courts have been vigilant in the protection of individual and property rights independent of race. Without these legal and judicial safeguards, a capitalist economy could not operate. They cannot be violated or flaunted in one important area and remain strong in others. If the Southern states are to continue its process of industrialization through attracting capital investments, it cannot become a region of lawlessness or legal capriciousness."

"9. Some of them appeal to the Negro for a reasonable accommodation to voluntary segregation. They offer to bribe him with the promises of brand-new schools and long overdue equality or physical facilities."

"If the Negro community is not vigilant, these appeals might work. If segregated schools continue, it will be because the Negro people permitted themselves to be bribed and hoodwinked by hollow promises."

"Such promises are now too late. Furthermore, they cannot be fulfilled. Negro schools—segregated by race—can never be equal. This is true not only because of important and complex psychological factors but also because of the more concrete economic factors. Those states in which there is the most intense resistance to the desegregation of the public schools are the least able to maintain economically a dual school system in which the Negro and white schools are equal in even physical facitities."

"Any Negro community that continues to accept segregated schools and segregation in other public accommodations will be saying to the world that the Negroes in that community have indeed been made inferior. The signs of their inferiority being their apathy, poor judgment, lack of courage and their willingness to doom their children to a life of hopelessness, stagnation and dehumanization. Such a community in 1957 would not have been worthy of our glorious history of ceaseless struggle of our ancestors for freedom; would not have been worthy of the unswerving dedication to truth and justice as such Federal Justices as J. Waties Waring and the nine Justices of the United States Supereme Coure; would not have been worthy of the example of an Autherine Lucy and the thousands of Negro citizens of Montgomery, Alabama."

"Such a community would have been an example of the degrading effects of past segregation—an example of the corroding apathy, indifference and moral emptiness spawned by enforced injustice. No matter what the cause, such a community would not have earned the respect and gratitude of its children or of human beings who love justice and democracy."

"What must now be the role of the Negro?

"Have no special qualification for wisdom."

"Can only summarize what I have observed in a study of human progress and constructive social change—in America, in Asia and in Africa."

"Constructive social change can come about in 20th century America—not through violence. The apostles of racial violence are self-defeating. The Negro cannot permit himself to even flirt with the idea of retaliatory violence. Violence creates more problems that it solves."

"Constructive social change cannot be brought about by wishful thinking, pious resolutions and empty generalizations by Negroes or whites. The very real contemporary racial problems must be met and solved in the real world. They will not disappear merely because they are iritating or because it would be convenient for some candidates for presidential nomination if they could be ignored. Problems of justice, morality and equality of citizenship are the problems of government and without them there would be little need for governments, politicians or presidential candidates. Progress in race relations in the South cannot be made by mass migration of Negroes from the South. This is socially, economically and practically impossible. Even if it were possible, social problems are not basically solved by escape. They are merely transplanted and postponed."

"Racial progress has been made and will continue in America to the extent that the Negro continues his firm, calm, courageous insistence upon full and uncompromised rights as an American citizen. He cannot retreat. He cannot voluntarily postpone these rights. The time is now. If he does not obtain these rights after 100 years since his emancipation from slavery, then he might not ever attain them. This is the propitious moment in American and world history. To temporize now is not "gradualism" but "backwardism," seen in the light of the relativity of social events and social progress."

Canada's 18,000 Negroes Fare Well In Boom Era

(World Tues. 4-17-56 B'ham, Ala.)

TORONTO—(ANP)—Gains made by Canada's 18,000 Negroes during the last decade are standing them in good stead in the economic boom which the country now enjoys.

A recent survey of the Negro in Canada shows that in the economic field he has broken down many of the barriers which, until recent years, barred him from rising above low-paying, unskilled jobs.

These advances have been attributed in some measure to a new attitude on the part of business, industry and the professions.

The entry of Negroes into professional fields, particularly white collar jobs, is considered a significant development. The sons and daughters of men and women who only a few years ago were restricted in their search of employment, today are able to take advantage of higher jobs and educational opportunities.

There is nothing in Canada that remotely parrells the Jim Crow laws in the southern United States. Racial barriers have not been broken down completely in this country, but the growing acceptance of colored persons in the main stream of the Canadian economy is regarded by authorities as heralding the day when no phase of business or industry will refuse to accept Negroes simply because of their color.

The fact that there are only 18,000 Negroes in all of Canada out of a total of close to 16,000,000 is said to be the main reason for the diminishing tide of racial prejudice

Neva Scotia has about 9,000 Negro citzens, who are descendants of the ports of Halifax and St. John from the British West Indies about 70 years ago.

Ontario has an estimated 7,000 colored citizens, 5,000 of whom live in metropolitan Toronto. The remaining 2,000-odd Negroes in Canada are scattered in the other provinces, chiefly Manitoba, British Columbia and Saskatchewan.

A growing volume of legislative enactment speaks eloquently of the Canadian public's desire to have Negro citizens treated fairly.

Responsibility For Racial Progress

Editor's Note: The speech made by Dr. Kenneth B. Clark at the Feb. 17 annual forum of Periclean Club concludes today. Dr. Clark is an eminent psychologist and professor at City College, New York City.

7th and Final Installment

"The Southern Negro needs allies. Now is the time for respectable decent white Southerners to show this courage. It is probably unrealistic to have hoped that he would have taken the initiative in the fight for racial justice before the Negro has awakened. it is time that truly liberal whites in the South and the North stand up and be counted among those who are willing to be involved in effective, intelligent and democratic action toward desegregation. This is not the time for platitudes, empty generalizations or pious equivocation. Nor is it the time where the cloak of respectability can be used to hide silence in the face of racial violence that is stridently eloquent when it comes from the pulpits of their churches or the platforms of their institutions of learning."

"The issues are now clearly drawn. The friends and the allies of the Negro must keep pace with the swiftly moving events. If I read the meaning of the present struggles of the Negro correctly he will not be content with his white friends merely interceding for him and certainly he will not be content with their continued friendship, he will be forced, reluctantly, to reject friendships offered on these terms.

"What of our Negro brother in the North. What can he do to help? I ask this question not in rhetoric but with an urgent desire for an answer. Already the NAACP has provided legal and other types of leadership. The NAACP need not apologize for the fact that its national headquarters is in New York City. The fact is that it could not operate in any community in the South unless individual Negroes in that community invited it to come to that community. In addition, it is dependent upon local leadership, legal talent, and support. Furthermore, the problem of racial justice in America is not regional--it is an important national and international problem.

"Some Northern Negroes are organizing programs to provide economic relief for Southern Negroes who are victims of economic reprisals. I know that A. Phillip Randolph is devoting almost all of his time to this problem. The National Committee for Rural Schools has been doing a monumental job of supplying clothing, shoes, books and pencils for children in rural areas of the South.

"What more needs to be done? How can we be more effective in this area? We want to help. We want to show how deeply we appreciate the sacrifices which you are making daily not only for your children and yourselves--but for our children and for us. We are grateful for the fact that through your sacrifices you will strengthen democracy for all Americans -- white, black or brown, Jew, Protestant or Catholic and in so doing you will assure democracy to all peoples throughout the world."

NEGRO GAINING ECONOMICALLY, LEAGUE IS TOLD

Daily Tribune
Thurs. 9-6-56
Chicago, Ill.

Now a Political Force, Dr. Douglass Says

BY ROI OTTLEY
[Chicago Tribune Press Service]

Cincinnati, O., Sept. 5—The economic and political progress of the Negro family in the United States was appraised today for the delegates to the annual National Urban league conference, by Dr. Joseph H. Douglass, program analyst in department of health, education, and welfare.

Douglass' report was received with interest by the 600 delegates because he is the great-grandson of Frederick Douglass, Negro leader of Lincoln's day who received high appointments under Presidents Grant, Hayes, Arthur, Cleveland, and Benjamin Harrison.

Dr. Douglass, holder of a Harvard Ph. d., declared that "Negro families have exceeded in most instances the rate of progress made by white families toward economic security, largely because of high employment and output levels, and a declien in racially discriminating employments policies."

Reach New Income Levels

This development, he said, was reflected in improved health and educational opportunities, full participation in the country's labor force, and new levels of income, savings, and consumption. However, he added, the Negro family still lags behind the white family.

The most recent and important long-run factor in the Negro family's search for economic security, he said, was the Supreme court's decision in 1954 declaring segregation in public schools was unlawful.

"This decision will surely have an increasing impact on future generations," Dr. Douglass said.

The pronounced trend of Negro migration to the northern urban areas, while improving the group's employment and income, is nevertheless subjecting the families to such social hazards as overcrowding, disease, and demoralization, Dr. Douglass said.

Feel Pioneer Spirit

But, he added, the Negro migrants are infused with a pioneer spirit and determination in facing unknown frontiers. The hope of a brighter future probably more than compensates for the difficulties and risks.

Dr. Douglass pointed out that "on farms, the Negro group has experienced a declining income position in recent years." In the south, he said, "the nonwhite family income position in recent years has not only failed to improve, but has actually declined in terms of its percentage of the income of the white family."

Future progress, he said, "is dependent upon continued high levels of national employment and output. Any serious decline in economic activity will result in a potentially greater economic setback for Negro families than for white families, because of the Negro's greater degree of marginal employment."

"Despite concentration in slum areas, the Negro family is rapidly improving its housing patterns thru increased home ownership and movement into more desirable neighborhoods," Dr. Douglass said.

More Homes Needed

"If the housing needs of the Negro population are to be met, probably 2,500,000 homes will have to be made available by 1960, thru new construction, conversions, and rehabilitation."

"But, the large concentration of Negroes in the industrial centers, is improving the group's effectiveness as a political force.

"To the extent that the group becomes organized, vocal, and acclimated to urban life ,its new-found political potential should result in improved social status.

"Educationally, gaps in status between young Negroes and whites," appear to be closing rapidly, and Negro workers are now found in wider distributions thruout the range of employment opportunities."

Tells of Labor's Help

Stanley H. Ruttenbergen, research director for the AFL-CIO, told the conference that "the American labor movement is leading the way in the integrating of the Negro into the labor force."

"We in the trade union movement point with pride to our accomplishments in bringing a measure of equal rights and opportunities to our Negro citizens," he said. "Labor, by its persistent efforts in the big mass production industries, has broken down discrimination against the colored worker.

"Equal status for Negro workers, the right to promotion, the right to equal job opportunities, while not completely won, is well on the way being broken down.

"The merger of the American labor movement has resulted in a united drive to attain equal rights and opportunities for all citizens. The constitution of AFL-CIO is clear-cut in its pronouncement that there shall be no discrimination because of race, color, creed, or national origin.

Fought for Court Ruling

"We were out in the forefront with other groups in fighting the white citizens councils' attempts to offset the Supreme court decision on desegregation in our public schools.

"The AFL-CIO will continue to fight for the improvement of the economic, social, and welfare status of all Americans as we strive for the goal of equal opportunity for all."

Special To The News

BIRMINGHAM, Ala. — Alabama's population of registered passenger cars will increase by more than 138,000 and there will be a gain of 56,000 families in the state by 1965, according to a study by Universal C. I. T. Credit Corp.

Charles A. Smith, Jr., of Birmingham, vice president in this area for the corporation, said his company's analysis of the expected growth in the state's population and in family income—without considering other important economic trends at work—points convincingly to higher levels of prosperity in the future.

Passenger car registrations by 1965, he said, should total more than 847,000, a 20 per cent increase over the 709,000 now registered.

The finance company official also forecast a population gain of about 7 per cent, or more than 218,000 persons, by 1965. This would bring the state's population to more than 3,362,000. As for families, he foresaw a gain of 7 per cent, raising the total to more than 877,000 as compared with about 821,000 families now.

Other encouraging factors in the automobile outlook, he said, are the rapid growth in two-car families, accelerated by the trend to suburban living; the sound record for credit repayment established by families purchasing cars; continued high levels of employmen, income and savings, and more aggressive selng by automobile manufacturers and dealers.

Modernization of highways and streets, including relief of city congestion and provision for more parking facilities, the finance company official added, are vital considerations in view of the expected growth in auto registrations.

Less than seven per cent of Alabama's individual wager earners paid more than half of the $12,712,000 collected from the state income tax in 1955.

A detailed survey of state income tax collections during 1955, compiled by Russell L. Hungerford of the State Revenue Department, indicates that of the 197,449 individuals who paid the tax last year only 13,553 were in the top bracket of five per cent, having earned $5,000 or more in taxable income.

Yet this group, representing only 6.86 per cent of the total, paid 54.02 per cent of the tax collected.

COUNTY LOW

One of the interesting features of the report was evidence that Montgomery County, on a percentage basis, had fewer individuals in the high income bracket than any other county in the state except Chambers.

A total of 13,329 individuals in Montgomery County paid state income taxes in 1955, yet only 248 of them reported a taxable income of $5,000 or more, for a percentage of 1.86.

Chambers County, which reflects the big but relatively low textile payrolls, reported 3,437 taxpayers including only 59 in the top bracket. The Chambers' percentage was 1.72.

Meanwhile, Choctaw County took top honors for the most wage earners in the top bracket. Of the 181 taxpayers in the county, 27 of them (14.9 per cent) reported taxable incomes of $5,000 or more.

78 AT TOP

Close behind was Monroe County which reported 78 taxpayers in the top bracket out of a total of 547 individuals. Percentage - wise, this amounted to 14.2 per cent.

Only 11 other counties could claim the distinction of having 10 per cent or more of their taxpayers in the top high income bracket. They were Lowndes 12.7 per cent; Geneva 12.6; Greene 11.8; Wilcox 11.7; Barbour 11.4; Washington 11.1; Pike 10.9; Hale 10.9; Lamar 10.4; Dallas 10.1 and Houston 10.

As far as total taxes paid was concerned, Jefferson County quite naturally was far out front. Residents of that county paid $4,573,000 in state income taxes on a total income of $435,942,000.

In fact, the combined total of Jefferson, Mobile and Montgomery counties exceeded the total of the remaining 64 counties of the state.

RECORD EARNINGS

Mobile's record was $166,568,000 earnings and $1,921,000 taxes paid; Montgomery individuals paid $1,065,000 in taxes on earnings of $88,108,000.

On the other extreme, Choctaw County, which lay claim to the highest percentage of big taxpayers, neverthless had the lowest total earnings of any county in the state—$1,330,000.

Choctaw's closest competitor for this unenviable position was Lamar County with total earnings of $1,412,000. Close behind was Cleburne with $1,460,000 and Bullock with $1,532,000.

BIRMINGHAM NEGRO BARRICADES STREET WITH OWNERSHIP CLAIM

Advertiser 7-25-56
Montgomery, Ala.

BIRMINGHAM, July 19 (AP)—The City of Birmingham doesn't think Mrs. Lizzie Blocker has any right to barricade a city street. But the 73-year-old Negro, who first barricaded Kappa Avenue last June, claims this is part of her property she bought more than 25 years ago.

Fri. 7-20-56

The city has filed a bill of enjoinder in circuit court, contending the property belongs to the municipality by "right of prescription."

It had been used as a street for some years before the woman claimed it as hers.

St Louis Group Discovers $10,000,000 Uranium

ST LOUIS — A man and wife team and a local Baptist minister have discovered and filed claims on uranium deposits worth anesti mated $10,000,000.

Sat. 10-13-56

The Rev Mr W E W Brown, pastor of the Leonard Avenue Baptist Church, has been named presi dent and manager of the newly formed St Lue Uranium Mines, Inc, with Mrs Louise Smith as secretary-treasurer. Mrs Smith's husband, James R. Smith is vice-president of the company.

Credit for the original discovery goes to Mrs Smith who went to Colorado in June 1955 following a uranium prospecting urged. She roughed it alone in the mountains with her Geiger counter and stake out the frst claims.

Returning to St Louis in October of '55, Mrs Smith consulted with the Rev Mr Brown, her pastor since childhood. As a result of this consultation, the three formed the present company and Mrs Smith returned to the site in June of this year.

The area now being prospected is in Rio Blanco county, just outside of Maeker, Colorado. The project consists of 65 claims filed of 20 acres each. The company was formed and incorporated under the laws of the State of Colorado September 1.

The Rev Mr Brown, who just returned from the area, said Mrs Smith had done "yeoman's work" at the site. He said she is still in Colorado "working lke a beaver."

Housewife Claims Rich Uranium Hit

Husband, Church And Pastor Aid In Mining Operations

ST. LOUIS, Mo.—(INS) — A 34-year-old St. Louis housewife was said this week to have discovered uranium sites in Colorado with a potential yield of an estimated $10 million.

Mrs. James R. Smith, wife of a post office clerk, is presently working the project in Rio Blanco County, Colorado, along with four or five members of the congregation of the Leonard Baptist Church of St. Louis.

The Rev. W. E. W. Brown, pastor of the church, who announced the find, was instrumental in obtaining some $4,000 to back Mrs. Smith in making preparations to mine the ore.

MRS. SMITH first went uranium hunting in Colorado in 1955. Since then she has staked out 65 claims of 20 acres each, all near Meeker, Colorado.

Rev. Mr. Brown said geologists have given him estimates upon the wealth of two of the claims at more than $10 million. The preacher showed this reporter three samples of what he said were uranium ore which he said were assayed at $15, $30 and $60 thousand a ton respectively.

AFTER MRS. Smith was assured that she had located potentially rich ore deposits, Rev. Mr. Brown and several members of the congregation of the Baptist church raised some $4,000 to purchase mining equipment. Because of a lack of available labor, four unemployed members of the church went to Colorado along with Rev. Mr. Brown to begin operations.

SO FAR the small group has mined some seven tons of ore which they understand is worth a total of $175,000.

A company known as the St. Lue Uranium Mines, Inc., is soon to be incorporated, according to Rev. Mr. Smith. The preacher is listed as president and general manager of the company with James Smith as vice president and his wife as secretary treasurer.

CREDIT FOR the original discovery goes to Mrs Smith who went to Colorado in June 1955 following a uranium prospecting urge. She roughed it alone in the mountains with her Geiger counter and staked out the first claims.

$15 Million Shopping Center Built On Site Owned By Former Slave

Black Dispatch Oklahoma City, Okla.

Feb. 10-19-56

WASHINGTON.—(ANP)—The history of the new $15 million Seven Corners shopping center here dates back to slavery days, centers around a slave, and tells a richer story than modern day fables of fairyland.

The 25-acre site where the magnificent new shopping center now stands was once a farm belonging to Frederick Foote sr., who was born a slave in 1800 on the Fitzhugh family farm in Ravensworth, located in a section of Fairfax county now known as Annandale.

Foote was an industrious worker with lofty ambitions and was often leased by neighboring farmers when they needed extra help.

Once while working on the Miner farm just outside of Falls church, Fred Foote saw a parcel of land that looked good to him. He dreamed of having some land like that for his own some day.

When the Civil War broke out, Foote worked as a blacksmith for Union troops. The Federal government built Fort Buffalo overlooking the slope of land Fred wanted. He worked all the harder and saved enough money to talk business with Farmer Miner. He bought about 28 acres from Miner for $500, and set up housekeeping with his new bride, Margaret Foote. They had three sons and two daughters. Their farm prospered, producing peaches, apples, gooseberries, cherries, quinces, and all kinds of vegetables. His peach trees were so fine, the white folks in the area used to talk about "that big peach orchard on the hill."

The Alexandria-Leesburg turnpike and another narrow road known now as Wilson boulevard, were the only roads in that area.

Foote saw to it that his five children went to the free school in Falls Church every day. He wanted them to have a good education.

He was over 60 when he bought the farm, but it meant a new way of life for the ex-slave—and he wanted to preserve it for his children.

When he died in 1895, he left a will deeding the property to his five children, but forbidding them to sell or lease it. His widow and most of the children stayed on at home for years after his death. Black Dispatch

Mrs. Margaret Foote Jackson died in 1928, the children came and went from time to time thereafter.

The new destiny of Seven Corners was shaped when Arlington boulevard—then known as Lee boulevard—cut through the area in the 1930's. It ran right along the Foote farm, nicking off a few acres at the western end.

Development followed rapidly as the new boulevard brought flooods of traffic into northern Virginia. The neighborhood grew.

Mrs. Virginia Foote Jackson and Frank Foote still lived in the home place amid all the surrounding development. Mrs. Margaret Foote Jackson lived in Washington and worked at the census bureau. Forrest Foote had deeded his share of the original home place to his sister, Margaret, and started a farm at Linglestown, Pa. Joseph S. Foote had disappeared in 1912 and was declared legally dead in 1938.

The Foote brothers and sisters began to get countless offers for their land, but their father's will kept them from selling until taxes began to get too high to pay.

Finally, in 1952, Mrs. Margaret Foote Jackson went to court to see if the land could be sold. An order was entered in Fairfax Circuit Court authorizing the sale, and the land was sold to Kass-Berger, Inc., for $750,000 for the shopping center.

Feb. 10-19-56

Stories of the big sale were carried in papers all over the country, and Joseph Foote, who wasn't dead at all, showed up to get his share of the money. Virginia and Frank Foote got their share, but didn't live very long thereafter.

Their part of the money was passed on to their children. Joseph Foote returned to Chicago and bought a home.

Mrs. Margaret Foote Jackson, only one of the original five heirs still living in the area, has been able to retire from her job and is living in Accokock, Md., with her daughter, Mrs. Arnetta Foote Phillips.

She doesn't think her father would be displeased if he came back now and saw that the farm has passed from his family's hands.

She said, "He just wanted to make sure we always had a home, and he certainly did that for us."

Today the Foote farm is known as "Seven Corners" shopping center and compares with any shopping center in the country.

Fla. vet's $51,000 estate to be given to VA fund

Afro-American Baltimore, Md
Sat. 2-18-56

BRADENTON, Fla. (ANP)—Manatee County Judge Robert Hensley Thursday signed an order giving the $51,868.47 estate of George W. Puseley to the Federal Government and bringing the strange case to a close.

Puesley died on Feb. 21, 1954 in the VA hospital at Augusta, Ga. The estate was composed of veteran's pay, allowances, insurance and other benefits.

He enlisted in the army in World War I from Manatee County, which is the reason the estate was settled here. He enlisted as a white man and, after the war was found to be insane and was confined to the hospital.

AT THE TIME of his death, a search was instituted for heirs, and it was learned that Puesley was actually a colored man, having "passed" as a white man to enlist in the army and having been thought one up to the time of his death.

The estate would go to the general post fund of the U.S., a Veterans Administration fund—a trust used to purchase recreational and athletic equipment for various VA centers.

Millionaires Getting Short Report Says

Daily World
Atlanta, Ga.
7-4-56

By HUGH MORRIS

WASHINGTON,—(INS)— A government report indicated that the U. S. could be running short of millionaires.

The Internal Revenue Service reported there were only 148 of them in 1952, compared with 171 in 1951 and an all-time high of 219 in 1950.

At least, that was the number of Americans who filed returns listing income of more than one million dollars for those years.

However, the Nation's supply of millionaires was still more adequate in 1952 than it was a decade ago. In 1944, there were only 62 of them; 71 in '45; 94 in '46; 114 in '47; 149 in '48; and 120 in '49.

Who were they? The Revenue Service won't say, although one official narrowed the field by telling a reporter: "not me."

The Service's statistical review of 1952 income also showed that nearly 18,000 returns that year reported taxable earnings of more than $100,000.

That was out of a total of 56 million returns filed in 1952, of which only 44 millions required the filer to pay any taxes at all. Altogether, they shelled out 28 billion dolars an average of $649 each, which was an increase of $67 over 1951.

But getting back to the 148 millionaries, their aggregate income, after business deductions was 289 million dollars. They paid 180 million dollars of it in income taxes, for an average of $1,217,541 each.

How did they get the dough? only five million dollars of their income was in the nature of wgaes and salaries. Dividends accounted for 132 millions. Little items like business profits and rents took care of the rest.

New York State boasted the largest number of millionaires with 43 Pennsylvania came next with 17, followed by Illinois with 13.

Texas had 11, California nine, Delaware eight, Florida, Michigan and Ohio six each. Connecticut five Indiana and Virginia three apiece, New Jersey, North Carolina, Oklahoma and Rhode Island two each and Arizona. Maryland. Minnesota. Nebraska, Nevada, Oregon. South Carolina. Tennessee, Wyoming and the District of Columbia one each.

Growth In Savings Accounts And Loans Shown In Reports

Norfolk, Va.

A report released recently on the activities of Negro building and loan associations disclosed that seventeen associations had assets totaling $59,405,331 at the close of 1954. This was an increase of $13,782,331 since 1949. By 1954 the aggregate savings in these associations had increased to $50,236,901.

The report was based on a survey undertaken last spring among 17 members of the American Savings and Loan League to get a general picture of these institutions as of Dec. 31 1954. At the convention of the league in Los Angeles last November, the body instructed the president to secure statistics on the operation of members of the league. Data secured had to be compared with statistics which these institutions provided to the U. S. Department of Commerce for the year 1949. This comparison reveals that notable growth took place in the five year period ending on Dec. 31, 1954.

TODAY there are about 30 Negro-owned and operated associations in the United States. Their aggregate standing can only be a matter for conjecture.

Until a few years ago consolidated reports on savings and loan associations were regularly issued by the Commerce Department, as were reports on Negro-owned banks and insurance companies. With the change of Administration in Washington the office which formerly compiled these reports was abolished and the studies discontinued. Negro business people have suffered other disadvantages at the hands of the new Administration also. The information which follows is an attempt to fill the gap.

PERHAPS the most striking change in the past five years was the roughly 430 per cent increase in aggregate assets for the 17 reporting associations going from $13,782,495 in 1949 to $59,405,331 in 1954.

This tremendous growth was reflected in the value of savings accounts which amounted to only $11,036,614 in 1949 but had risen to $50,236,901 five years later. These savings were held in 19.541 individual accounts in 1954. There is no figure available for comparison with 1949.

MORTGAGE loans kept the pace. In 1949 the institutions surveyed financed $11,728,813 in mortgages, whereas in 1954 their loan portfolios held $50,188,469 in mortgages.

With respect to monies laid aside for reserves, comparative figures reveal a tendency toward greater conservatism. For example, in 1949, some $589,775 were held in reserve, while in 1954 reserves were $2,933,339. This increase of about 500 per cent in reserves stands well above the average increase of about 430 per cent in other categories in this report.

THE 17 reporting associations are divided as follows: 10 chartered by the Federal Home Loan Bank Board; five are state mutual associations; and two are state stock associations. There were only five federally chartered associations in 1949. All institutions in 1954 were members of the Federal Savings and Loan Deposit Insurance Corporation.

The 1954 dividend rate for the reporting associations showed a varied pattern. Only one institution paid as high as 4 per cent, but eight returned 3½ per cent, and two paid 2 per cent.

THERE WERE 117 individuals employed by the reporting associations — 99 on a full-time basis and 18 as part-time employees. One association hired 14 full-time persons; another, 12 fulltime and 2 part-time; 2 institutions, 10 full-time each, one of them using a part-time employee also.

The oldest reporting institution was a state mutual founded in 1888. In 1889, a second state mutual was founded. Prior to 1921, six associations opened for business and in the decade ending 1930, three additional associations were set up. During the depression — 1931 to 1940 — only one new association began business, but from 1941 to 1952, seven new associations came on the scene.

Robert Cole's Will Is Found

BY JIM FOREE

Speculation on whether or not the late Robert A. Cole wrote a new will in 1953 came to a dramatic end last week when the document was filed in Chicago Probate court.

The will, dated Jan. 15, 1953, names as trustees of the Cole estate the widow, Mrs. Mary Cole, Theodore R. Hawes, secretary of the Metropolitan Funeral parlors, Inc., and Atty. Edward B. Toles.

The three-year-old document was found in a safety vault at the First National bank. The box was opened after a contempt petition was filed in Probate court against Mrs. Cole and her attorneys.

PLEADED ILLNESS

Mrs. Cole, who previously had been appointed to the temporary position of administratrix, twice had been ordered to open the vault but had pleaded illness for her failure to appear.

Hawes and Toles had contended since Cole's death on July 27 that a 1953 will did exist; however, prior to Tuesday's disclosure, only an unsigned copy of a will dated 1947 had been found.

The trust estate is composed of the funeral parlors, the building housing the funeral establishment, the business of the Metropolitan garage, the building housing the garage, a country home in Cassopolis, Mich., and a building in Chicago Heights.

The trust is to continue until the daughter, Roberta Cole, now 16, is 30 years old, or in case of her death, until the son, Robert A. Cole jr., is 35.

TO BE DIVIDED

Upon expiration of the trust, the estate is to be divided equally to the widow, the son and the daughter.

Besides naming the above trustees, the 1953 will includes the following provisions:

1. That the property at 915 Hyde Park blvd., Cole's personal wearing apparel and household effects, including household furnishings and all jewelry wherever located, go to Mrs. Cole.

ROBERT A. COLE

2. That the trustees pay from the net income of the trust estate, beginning one year from the date of his death, to the widow whatever sum they deem "fit and proper for the proper support and education of my two children, Robert A. Cole, jr., and my daughter, Roberta Cole."

3. That the trustees shall pay from the trust estate, "beginning immediately upon my death, the sum of $250 per week for the entire period of this trust to my wife. . ." (Provision was made for the temporary termination of this payment.)

4. That sums be spent for the training of his son to carry on the funeral business. The will also specified that Robert, jr., be employed "in the operation of said business and to manage the same when it appears consistent with the profitable and successful operation of said business."

Supreme Court To Hear Case From Hutchinson

Sat. 1-27-56

Kansas City, Mo.

Washington, D. C. — (NNPA) — The United States Supreme Court Monday agreed to pass on the question of whether private property may be taken through condemnation proceedings by publishing one notice in the official city newspaper.

The case involves the property of Lee Walker, 80, who has a sixth grade education and has owned real estate in Hutchinson, Kas., for 49 years. He sought unsuccessfully in Kansas courts to enjoin the City of Hutchinson and its various officers from taking his property.

Mr. Walker claimed that the city of Hutchinson had never notified him of the action for condemnation of his property, but relied upon its purported power to bring such action by one publication in the official paper.

He contends that this "single notice" was insufficient to meet the requirements of the due process clauses of both the federal and state constitutions.

The American Civil Liberties Union is interested in the case. Attorneys for Mr. Walker contend that if the ruling of Kansas courts in this case is allowed to stand, any property owner in the United States—illiterate or educated, newspaper reader or non-reader, his address known or unknown—may be deprived of his property and compensation determined without notice and the right to be heard merely by publication in an official city newspaper.

Representing Mr. Lee are A. Lewis Oswald, a Hutchinson lawyer, and Herbert M. Levy of the ACLU.

$10,000 Awaits Unknown Heirs of Kentucky Woman

Call Kansas City, Mo. 8/
Jan. 9-7-56

LOUISVILLE, Ky. — A case of interest has come to light involving former residents of Kentucky and heirs probably residing somewhere in Tennessee, Missouri, Illinois, Kansas and the western part of Kentucky, involving $10,000.00 payable to valid heirs of the late Miss Sweete A. DeLoache, a former resident of the western part of Kentucky, near Paducah, who died at the age of 87 years in the city of New York in January, 1953, leaving an estate worth approximately $20,000.00.

Part of the $20,000.00 has been distributed to the NAACP, Salvation Army and other charitable organizations to which the eccentric spinster designated that part of her property should be turned over to these organizations after her death.

According to Charles W. Anderson, Jr., Louisville attorney, associated with Joseph L. McLemore, a New York attorney who is chief counsel in the case, it was the desire of Miss DeLoache, who was never married, that these organizations should benefit from her estate.

However, she made no disposition of the other $10,000.00, and Miss DeLoache, failed to name any residuary legatee or a person so named by her to receive the remainder of her possessions. Therefore, unless valid heirs come forth within the next few months, then the $10,000.00 will be turned over to the New York Comptroller as the surrogate may order.

After Mr. McLemore entered the case, he then had associated with him Charles W. Anderson, Jr., Louisville attorney, to endeavor to locate relatives of Miss DeLoache residing in the area embracing Kentucky, Tennessee, Missouri, Kansas and Illinois.

Some months ago Mr. Anderson located Charles F. DeLoache, 159 Sherborne Drive, Columbus, Ohio, who could not remember any family connection to Sweete DeLoache, but who referred Mr. Anderson to an aged aunt, 80 years old, who resided at Lancaster, Ohio, named Mrs. Jennie DeLoache Thomas.

Mr. Anderson made several trips to the Ohio city trying to establish Mrs. Jennie DeLoache's kinship or heirship with Miss Sweete A. DeLoache, but without success. Mr. Anderson discovered that while the names are similar, he was unable to directly connect the Ohio DeLoache family which originally lived in western Kentucky and northern Tennessee, although he stated that he felt there was some remote kinship but it could not actually be proven.

From the history of the DeLoache family it appeared that Sweete A. DeLoache had a sister named Mattie DeLoache who later married a man named Harris, and that she moved to Kansas City, Mo., where she lived for approximately 25 years before her death; that she had another sister named Martha J. DeLoache, and that there was a relative by the name of Cornelius Keyes whose whereabouts have not been determined. From the investigation of the heirs of Sweete A. DeLoache, it appears that the family was of fair or light skin, and prior to and during the Civil War lived on plantations in western Kentucky and northwestern Tennessee.

Mrs. Jennie DeLoache Thomas, now 80 years of age, recalls that her branch of the DeLoache family separated shortly after the Civil War or during the Reconstruction period, and that her father was George W. DeLoache, a son of Josiah DeLoache, and that Josiah was a large plantation owner near Memphis and that there were approximately nine children by him.

At the close of the Civil War when the slaves were freed, her father, George DeLoache, then about 10 or 12 years of age, was brought by his mother to Lancaster, Ohio, where they have resided ever since, Mrs. Jennie DeLoache Thomas being the last of the nine children, did have a sister named Ruth ho once resided in Kansas City, Mo., but even though the connection apeared close, there has been no one up to this time who has established uncontradicted kinship to Sweete A. DeLoache.

There have been many trails of the missing heirs of Miss Sweete DeLoache, but Mr. Anderson feels that the closest trail was the one in Ohio.

Mr. McLemore stated that he encountered many amusing and embarrassing situations while trying to find heirs. He said "that most people we approached were cagy and convinced that we did not have $10,000.00 to give away. They all believed that we were kidding them. I could be pleased and happy to see this money presented to a proper heir."

Miss DeLoache accumulated her fortune over the years by making wise investments. Only three months remain for claimants for this money to come forward before the money is turned over to the New York courts. After New York State becomes executor, persons with legitimate claims may present them for the next ten years, but there will be more difficulty in presenting the claims to the state of New York than at the present time, to the executors.

If anyone has any information to any of the heirs of Sweete A. DeLoache, Cornelius Keyes, Martha J. DeLoache or Mattie DeLoache Harris, they might communicate with Charles W. Anderson, Jr., Attorney at Law, 608 Walnut Street, Room 403, Louisville, Ky.

LOUISVILLE, Ky. — Louisville Attorney Charles Anderson disclosed last week, that he and a New York lawyer, Joseph L McLemore, are making a nation-wide search for the relatives of the late Miss Sweete O DeLoache, who died in New York in Jaunary leaving as estate of approximately $20,000.

If your name is DeLoache, you might come into money- $10,000 to be exact!

A former resident of West Kentucky, Miss DeLoache, 87 years old at the time of her death, left part of the $20,000 to be distributed between the NAACP, the Salvation Army and other charitable organizations. However, she made no disposition of the other $10,000 which will be turned over to the New York State Comptroller unless heirs are found within the next few months.

If you have any information relative to the whereabouts of kinsmen of Mrs Sweete A DeLoache, or Mattie DeLoache Harris, please communicate with Charles W Anderson Jr, 608 W Walnut Street, Louisville, Kentucky.

La. Slave, Freed At 4, Dies Worth $340,000

Leefender

SHREVEPORT, La. — (ANP)— Last Tuesday closed the final chapter in the life of a 97-year-old Negro man who was born into slavery, never learned to read or write, but was worth more than $340,000 when he died.

Newton Smith was born on the McCain plantation here in 1859.

Last eek when Ansel Stroud, a white merchant, estimated Smith's land alone, he found that the 2,000 acres of top-grade cotton-producing earth is worth $340,000.

This doesn't include the mineral rights, pecan orchards or Smith's modest home.

FREED AT 4

Stroud said Smith was four years old when the Emancipation Proclamation gave him his freedom.

In 1895, Smith began farming after borrowing money from the late Frank McCain to buy two oxen. McCain was the son of the man who once owned Smith.

The next year, Smith bought two mules. Then, during his third year, he saved enough money to buy 40 acres of land.

Smith's farming operation grew rapidly and soon he realized he needed a bookkeeper. To meet this need, he sent his wife, Rosa, to school.

The ex-slave often did other kinds of farming work and at one time used 100 mules in his business, which included building levees clearing passages for highways and hauling jobs in oil fields.

ances said today, he was a wealthy man.

Ansel Stroud, a white planter and merchant from nearby Dixie, estimated that Smith's land alone, 2,000 acres of top-grade cotton producing soil, is worth $34,000.

MODEST HOME

And, Stroud said, that doesn't include the mineral rights, pecan orchards, cattle, farm equipment or Smith's home, a modest place that gave no indication of the owner's wealth.

Stroud said from personal experiences and from "old-timers" he had learned the following about Smith:

He was born on the McCain plantation near Greenwood, La., in 1859. Four years later, he was freed by the Emancipation Proclamation.

Smith began farming in 1885 after borrowing money from the late Frank McCain to buy two oxen. McCain was the son of the man who once owned Smith.

BOUGHT MULES

The next year, Stroud said, Smith bought a pair of mules. Then, during his third year, he saved enough money to buy 40 acres of land.

Smith's farming operation kept growing, and he soon realized he needed a bookkeeper. So, Smith, who never learned to write anything more than his name, sent his wife, Rosa, to school.

Throughout Smith's early years he went to McCain for loans.

Smith often ventured into fields other than farming. At one time he used 100 mules in his business which included building levees, clearing passages for highways and hauling jobs in oil fields.

GET-RICH-QUICK

"Get rich quick schemes" were his main weaknesses, Stroud said. During the early days of oil development in this area Smith reportedly lost considerable money on worthless oil stock. But he soon learned, Stroud said.

One of his outstanding characteristics was his "knack or handling the colored people who worked on his plantation," Stroud said.

His survivors include his widow, Rosa, and an adopted son.

Ayer American Sat. 12-1-56 Baltimore, Md.

SHREVEPORT, La.—Newton Smith, who was too busy making money to learn how to read and write, died Wednesday at the age of 97. P1

His neighbors were surprised to learn that his estate is valued at more than $340,000.

Smith, who was four years old when emancipation came, began farming in 1885 after borrowing money to purchase two oxen from the son of the man on whose plantation he was born.

IN 1886, he bought a pair of mules and in his third year he had earned enough to buy 40 acres of land.

When he died Wednesday, a local banker estimated the 2,000 acres of top-grade cotton-producing soil is worth $340,000.

This figure might well be doubled, he said, by the mineral rights to the land which were also in Smith's name.

In addition he owned pecan orchards, cattle, the latest in farm machinery and equipment and his farm home, a modest place that gave no indication of Smith's financial standing.

Branching out from farming, he at one time used 100 mules to build levees, clear passages for highways and heavy hauling jobs in oil fields.

He often took flyers on worthless oil stock, but was not long in learning how to spot a phony.

He is survived by his wife and an adopted son, to whom he willed his fortune.

Father and daughters in court over teacher's $35,000 estate

Afro-American P. 12 Sat. 9-21-56

Baltimore, Md.

BALTIMORE

For the second time since her death on December 28, 1954, relatives of Mrs. Estelle L. Arnold are in court to determine disposition of approximately $35,000 left by her.

William H. Langley, 2820 Ellicott Drive, brother of the late school teacher, has filed a suit against his daughter, Mrs. Ethel L. Williams, of Washington, for a share of a $10,253.11 savings bank account held jointly by the niece and aunt.

In his petition in Circuit Court No. 2, Mr. Langley says that prior to her death Mrs. Arnold caused the name of Mrs. Williams to be placed on the joint account.

He says that Mrs. Arnold took this action for two reasons: first, so that Mrs. Williams could draw funds for Mrs. Arnold in the event the latter became so incapacitated that she was unable to get to the bank; and second, that after her (Mrs. Arnold's) death, Mrs. Williams would have funds to provide for his (Mr. Langley's) needs.

MR. LANGLEY'S petition says that Mrs. Williams acknowledged these instructions from Mrs. Arnold, and from time to time has made certain distributions from the account in accordance with that agreement.

He charges, however, that the payments have been irregular and of varied amounts. He cannot, says his petition, depend with any degree of certainty upon receipt of the funds.

He asked the court to:—

Enjoin Mrs. Williams from making further withdrawals;

Restrain the Savings Bank of Baltimore, in which the funds were deposited, from disbursing to Mrs. Williams any of the funds; and,

Enjoin George W. F. McMechen, executor for the estate, from transfering or delivering to Mrs. Williams any property or funds due her from the estate.

Mr. Langley also asked the court to pass an order declaring Mrs. Williams trustee, instead of owner, of the funds, and that the trusteeship be for his benefit.

He also wishes the court to determine the amount of money to be paid to him and the time of payment.

RECORDS OF the Baltimore Savings Bank show that Mrs. Arnold opened an account on Oct. 7, 1953, in trust for herself and Mrs. Williams, joint owners and subject to the order of either.

The records also show that a month following Mrs. Arnold's death, Mrs. Williams withdrew the balance in the account, $7,533.

Mrs. Williams says that the document creating the trust contains none of the directions or authorizations claimed by Mr. Langley.

IN A WILL dated May 14, 1954, Mrs. Arnold left the major portions of her estate to Mrs. Williams and another niece, Mrs. Estelle Lindsay, of 1012 N. Eden St., this city.

The will included a bequest of $100 cash to Mr. Langley, and stated: "My reason for not being more liberal is his failure to extend such courtesies as I deserve."

Other bequests included $50 to a third niece, Mrs. Thelma Bantum of Penns Grove, N.J.; $100 to Madison Street Presbyterian Church; $100 to Provident Hospital; a diamond ring to Mrs. Lindsay and a Chinese vase and teakwood table to Mrs. Williams.

The will stipulated that all the rest and residue of the estate by shared by Mrs. Williams and Mrs. Lindsay.

The estate included properties at 1614 McCulloh Street and 832 N. Carey Street, and $6500 cash.

THE WILL also said "It is my desire that the two pieces of real estate be sold by my executor for the most money obtainable, and the proceeds be applied to any and all expenses incident to settlement of my estate and payment of such legacies as set forth."

However, when Mr. McMechen petitioned the court to sell the properties, Mesdames Williams and Lindsay filed a petition to prevent the sale.

IN SEPARATE petitions filed by them each said that they elected to take the property.

They said that they had agreed that Mrs. Williams have the Carey Street property and Mrs. Lindsay, the McCulloh Street property.

They pointed out that there was no need to sell the property to pay bequests and settlement fees because there was sufficient cash in the estate to meet all obligations.

THE COUSINS won this suit when the court ruled that the expression of Mrs. Arnold of a "desire" that a sale be made, was not a positive command or directive.

The court also ruled that the only duties entrusted to the executor under the will are to pay the expenses of administration, the debts of the deceased and the legacies bequeathed by her.

The Carey Street and McCulloh Street properties were each valued at $9,000.

Physician's will drawn up in 1947

P. 18

Baltimore, Md.

Sat. 12-1-56

BALTIMORE

A three - paragraph will, drawn on August 10, 1947, by the veteran physician, Dr. B M. Rhetta Sr., left his entire estate to his wife, Mrs. Clara Brown Rhetta.

While no estimate of Dr. Rhetta's worth is given in the will, in June of 1955 a legal report noted that the physician was worth over $100,000 at that time.

This report listed $50,000 in property holdings; $25,000 in bonds and savings; $20,000 in insurances and $20,000 in other assets and resources.

Under the will Mrs. Rhetta is given full power to sell, mortgage or in any other manner dispose of the whole or any part of the estate without court order.

THE WILL ALSO appointed Mrs. Rhetta executor without bond, but she has renounced the right to administer the estate in favor of their son, Dr. B. M. Rhetta Jr.

Letters of administration have been granted to the son, along with the probation of the will.

Dr. Rhetta Jr. posted only $10,000 bond, indicating that the bulk of the father's wealth may be held jointly with the widow or children.

The will also decreed:

"In the event my wife does not survive me, or surviving me, after her death. I hereby give, devise and bequeath to my three children, in cash or in kind, all of my estate of whatever kind to be divided 33⅓ percent each to C. Erovelle Brinkley, Dr. Helen L. Rhetta and Barnett Rhetta Jr."

MRS. BRINKLEY died 10 days before her father.

She, along with the son, was named to administer the estate in the event their mother predeceased Dr. Rhetta Sr.

The will was witnessed by their next door neighbors, Ossarew F. Gee and Mrs. Cassie E. Gee.

It was held in Dr. Rhetta's safe until his death on Oct. 2.

Dr. Rhetta, a practicing physician here for 47 years was 72 when he died in his sleep.

He and his wife were married in June, 1909

Grandma's Ticket Worth $140,000; Two More Win

Matron can now assist blind mate

Afro-American Sat. 6-16-56 Baltimore

A 40-year-old grandmother, a 55-year-old freight handler, and a matron whose 69-year-old husband is hopelessly blind won $140,000 pots of gold in the Irish Sweepstakes recently run at Upson Downs, Dublin, Ireland, it was learned this week.

"God bless our home!"

It may be sacrilegious to associate God in any way with gambling.

But—those words, "God bless our home," which are prominently displayed in thousands of households, were written on the back of an Irish Sweepstakes ticket that was worth $140,000 to a Newark, N.J., grandmother, last week.

"I STILL CAN'T believe it's true," cried the wife of a Chicagoan, who was interviewed after she had been informed that her husband had also won $140,000 in the derby on a ticket on the French horse, Lanvandin, which placed first in the derby.

"It's too bad this money couldn't have come to us before," a Cambridge, Mass., housewife, who was the third colored American to win the $140,000 first-place prize, told newsmen, Wednesday.

MRS. LAURA GEORGE, grandmother of 176 S. 11th St., told the AFRO that she earns $60 a week as a machine operator at the Chatham Electronics Corp. in Livingston, where she has been employed for five years.

When she was informed that she held one of the tickets for the top prize, Mrs. George said: "I'm not in the least excited. I won't believe it until I see the money."

THE CHICAGO winner, Wesley Bragg of 6130 S. Parkway, when told by telephone by his wife, that he had won $140,000, quipped, "That's nothing, sweetheart, I've won that much throwing dice."

Employed at the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad, at $65 per week, Bragg was said by his wife to have had two big desires for years that he can now satisfy—"to take a plane ride and go to Hot Springs for just one bath."

IN CAMBRIDGE, Mass., the one regret of Mrs. Katherine Moore, 54, is that the $140,000 came to her too late to be used in an effort to save her husband, James's sight.

Dr. Bourne leaves $60,000 to family

Afro-American P. 18 Baltimore Md. Sat. 8-11-56

FREDERICK, Md. — Dr. Ulysses G. Bourne Jr. has posted $1,000 bond, and will administer the estate of his father, Dr. Ulysses G. Bourne Sr., who died, here, July 17, at the age of 82.

The low bond does not indicate the value of the estate which is expected to approximate between $50,000 and $60,000.

The will, drawn on April 5, 1955, with the exception of bequests to his widow, Mrs. Laura Highly Bourne, divided the estate in equal shares among his three children.

In addition to Dr. Bourne, other children are Dr. Blanche Bourne Jordan of Washington and Mrs. Gladys B. Thornton of Baltimore. The will was probated in Orphans' Court here Monday.

THE WIDOW will inherit the home property at 235 W. South St. for life; the balance of an insurance policy after funeral expenses are paid, and one-fourth of the residue of the estate after bequests to the children are filled.

Dr. Bourne Jr. will receive property at 25-27 W. All Saint St.; one-third of the building and loan association shares owned by the father; all of his father's office furniture and medical equipment; a third of the personal household furniture and a fourth of the residue of the estate.

Mrs. Thornton will receive properties at 108, 110, and 112 Ice St., a third of the building and loan shares, a third of the furniture and a fourth of the residue.

Dr. Jordan will receive properties at 32 South Court St. and 115, and 117 Ice St., a third of the building and loan shares, a fourth of the residue, and a third of the furniture.

The three children will share the home upon the death of their step-mother.

The absence of any bequests to institutions and individuals who served him is explained by those close to the late physician who point out that his philanthropies during his lifetime were many, and in fact exceeded $70,000.

It is known for example, that a former household worker was given a house and substantial funds before his death, and a former minister of Asbury Methodist Church where Dr. Bourne was a longtime trustee, was gifted with land. Likewise, the physician's gifts to institutions and individuals were generous while he lived.

The will was drawn by Wilbur F. Sheffield Jr., attorney, and witnessed by his secretary, Miss Helen M. Waltz.

Dr. Bourne was this town's most prominent physician for most of the 50 years he practiced here.

NEWARK

"All we can say at this time is that the estate is 'quite' substantial. It will be a few more weeks before we can learn its true value."

This information was given Tuesday to the AFRO by an associate of Philip Mandelbaum, Newark lawyer, who with Mrs. Viola Taylor, 598 Jefferson Ave., Brooklyn were named executors of the estate of the late Mrs. Annie E. Whittington of 178 N. 10th St.

The successful pioneer real estate dealer, a native of Scotland Neck, N.C., died Sept. 1, at the age of 82.

Three nationally known civil rights, educational and youth organizations; two churches, a scholarship association, The Newark Evening News Fresh Air Fund, The Old Folks Home in Montclair and several relatives and friends in four states and Washington.

MRS. WHITTINGTON decreed that, after specific bequests have been fulfilled, "55 per cent of the rest of the estate be used to set up the A. E. Whittington Memorial for the United Negro College Fund."

This is "to be used as a scholarship fund, and the income given for needy colored children to help them in paying tuition fees in attending college.

"The fund is to be invested by the executors in sound investments only.

"In addition to the income, so much of the principal shall be used for this purpose as the trustees shall find necesary and proper in doing so."

4-year battle for $750,000 estate lost

Afro-American Sat. 5-26-56 Baltimore, Md.

JACKSON, Miss. — A four-year legal battle between colored and white alleged heirs to the estate of Sim Burnside was decided last week in favor of the whites by the Mississippi State Supreme Court. P. 3

The court upheld a lower court decision giving the estate to W. A. Burnside and other white relatives who claimed the estate after executors filed a will shortly after Sim's death leaving the bulk of it for a game and fish preserve.

LATER, TENNESSEE BURNSIDE and other colored members of the Burnside clan contested the court's action, claiming to be illigitimate children and rightful descendants of the wealthy bachelor.

They filed a petition asking the court for adjudication of the property as theirs, but the Chancery Court ruled that the white Burnsides were the lawful heirs. That decision has now been upheld by the Supreme Court.

Negroes Lose In Plea For Estate

Birmingham, Ala.

JACKSON, Miss., May 14 (U.P.) —A Group of Negroes claiming kin to a Neshoba County white man are not entitled to share in his $250,000 estate, the State Supreme Court ruled today.

Sim Burnside willed that his vast land holdings be turned into a wildlife refuge and left nothing to his relatives. A group of white cousins, however, succeeded in having his will ruled invalid on ground he was not of sound mind when he made it.

Tennessee Burnside and several other Negroes filed suit, claiming they were first cousins and closer kin than the 25 white cousins. Tues. 5-15-56

They said they were descendants of a former slave whom they said was the wife of Sim Burnside's father.

The Neshoba County Circuit Court denied the claim and the Supreme Court in a brief decision said the chancellor's decision in favor of the descendants of Joseph Burnside "is abundantly supported by the record."

The Supreme Court affirmed a life sentence given Negro Theldor Lang for the criminal asault of a Laurel white woman in her home on Aug. 4, 1954. Lang, a college graduate who taught for several years, was arrested one year after the crime when the victim told officers she saw her attacker on the street.

The court said the fact that fingerprints taken from a window ledge did not match Lang's was no ground for reversal because the victim testified her assaliant told her he had a "buddy' with him.

JACKSON, Miss. — (ANP) —A legal battle between white and Negro groups for the $750,000 estate of the late Slim Burnside, wealthy white lumberman and landowner, has been won by the white heirs.

The Mississippi Supreme Court upheld a lower court's decision giving the estate to the white Burnsides.

Following the lumberman's death in 1952, executors of the estate filed a will which left the majority of the estate for a game and fish preserve.

UPHELD CLAIM

The will was contested by W. A. Burnside and other relatives and a court order upheld their claim.

Later, Tennessee Burnside and other Negroes of the Burnside name claimed to be illegitimate children and rightful descendants of the wealthy bachelor and filed a petition for adjudication of the property as theirs.

The chancery court ruled the white Burnsides were the lawful heirs. The Supreme Court upheld that decision.

Special to The Commercial Appeal

COLUMBUS, Miss., Oct. 11. — John C. Phillips, 86-year-old Negro, and his 75-year-old wife can keep the old homestead. P. 31

The ruling was handed down by Chancellor R. P. Sugg in a lawsuit brought by the couple against Modern Home Improvement Co. of Jackson, Miss.

The Negroes claimed they thought they were signing a deed for four acres to their son, Edward Phillips, when a representative of the company got them to sign a paper, which actually was a trust deed for their 40 acres and home, plus a promisory note for $2,702.50.

The mistake was brought to light when the company sought to sell the property at a trustee's sale on Sept. 25. Chancellor Sugg issued a temporary injunction against the sale at that time, and said Friday morning he had made the injunction permanent. But they must deed to their son the four acres they thought they had already given him.

$10 million in uranium discovered

Afro-American Baltimore, Md

Sat. 10-13-56

ST. LOUIS, Mo.—A man and wife team and a local Baptist minister have discovered and filed claims on uranium deposits worth an estimated $10,000,000, it was reported here last week.

The Rev. W. E. W. Brown, pastor of Leonard Avenue Baptist Church, has been named president and manager of the newly formed St. Lue Uranium Mines, Inc., with Mrs. Louise Smith as secretary-treasurer.

Mrs. Smith's husband, James R. Smith, is vice-president of the company.

Credit for the original discovery goes to Mrs. Smith who went to Colorado in June 1955 following a uranium prospecting urge. She roughed it alone in the mountains with her geiger counter and staked out the first claims.

RETURNING TO ST. LOUIS in October of '55, Mrs. Smith consulted with the Rev. Mr. Brown, her pastor since childhood. As a result of this consulation, the three formed the present company and Mrs. Smith returned to the site in June of this year.

The area now being prospected is in Rio Blanco County, just outside of Meeker, Colo. The project consists of 65 claims filed of 20 acres each. The company was formed and incorporated under the laws of the State of Colorado Sep. 1.

The Rev. Mr. Brown, who just returned from the area, said Mrs. Smith had done "yeoman's work" at the site. He said she is still in Colorado "working like a beaver."

$106,000 AWARDED IN OFFICERS' SHOOTINGS

NEW YORK (ANP) — A total of $106,000 in damages was awarded in two separate damage suits against the City of New York growing out of shootings of persons by officers of the law.

Mrs. Olga Ramirez, 34, of 606 E. 13th St., won $66,000 in her $100,000 suit for the death of her husband, Jose, who was slain by an off-duty patrolman five years ago. The shooting occurred during an argument over a traffic accident.

Arthur Middleton, 48, truck-driver of 146-13 105th Ave., Jamaica, Queens, settled his $150,000 suit in Supreme Court for $40,000. He was shot in the back by a city detective outside a Harlem tavern four months ago.

Uranium finders win 1st round in $57 million suit

TRENTON, N J.—If their luck holds, two enterprising brothers whose recent announcement that they had discovered a rich uranium deposit at Raven Rock was debunked by state geologists, may strike it rich.

This possibility arose Friday when Vernon and Alvin Gatling of South River won an important decision in superior court in their $57,800,000 suit against Mr. and Mrs. Anton Schuck, owners of the land in Hunterdon County.

AN AGREEMENT between the Gatlings and the Schucks hammered out in the chambers of Superior Court Judge C. Thomas Schettino provided:

1. That plaintiffs and defendants would permit an expert to appraise the land to determine if uranium mining would be profitable.

The expert must be acceptable to both sides, but, should a disagreement occur over the expert, the court would appoint one.

2. THAT SHOULD the expert decide that the mining would be profitable, the Gatlings would be permitted to mine the uranium, with the Schucks receiving a royalty of between five and 10 per cent.

Judge Schettino set April 27 as the deadline for the expert's report on the value of the mine to be filed.

The Gatlings are asking $28,900,000 in damages for themselves, and a similar amount for the Gatling mining and development.

Defender P. 1 Chicago, Ill. Sat. 12-1-56

Will Gives Them $100,000 Each

Defender P. 1 Chicago, Ill.

NEW YORK — Three of Marshall Field's grandchildren involved in the celebrated interracial marriage of the late multi-millionaire's daughter, Bettine, to Eldridge Bruce, 33, Howard university graduate, will share with eight other grandchildren in a fortune estimated to exceed $32,000,000, it was disclosed last week.

Sat. 12-1-56

The three are Bettine Marshall Goodall, Mrs. Bruce's daughter by her first marriage, to Dr. McChesney Goodall, jr., a Yale university professor, and Gergory Eldridge Bruce and Catherine Bruce who were fathered by Bettine's second husband.

It was not made clear to what extent Mrs. Bruce herself shares in her father's huge fortune. Her brother, Marshall Field, jr., editor and publisher of the Sun-Times, is chief recipient in the will which was filed for probate in the Suffolk County Surrogate's court, Riverhead, N. Y., last week.

However, each of the 11 grandchildren is bequeathed $100,000.

Mrs. Bruce's marriage to the Negro student was revealed in 1953 when she engaged in a court fight with her former husband Dr. Goodall, to keep her family together.

At that time Mrs. Bruce asked court permission to take her daughter, Bettine, 9, to England where she and Bruce planned to live in Bromley Kent, a suburk of London. She revealed that she was expecting another child; and wanted her whole family to live in a non-segregated community.

She also disclosed that she had been married to Bruce for two years having married in the Virgin Islands, in December, 1952. However, they lived apart for the sake of her daughter, Bettine.

Bruce, the son of Roger Bruce of Washington, went to England to do work in child psychology in Hampstead.

Defender

Dr. Goodall opposed his former wife's taking their child to England on the ground that the interracial couple would not provide a "happy" home for the child.

Field, who was president of Field Enterprises, Inc., which publishes Parade Magazine, Chicago Sun-Times, Pocket Books and other publications, died at his Lloyd's Neck, N. Y., estate recently after a six-week illness.

"Stocks, bonds, notes and similar assets with a face value of over $30,000,000 and certain real estate, are bequeathed to the Field Foundation, Inc.

"Included in the $30,000, going to the Field Foundation, Inc., are certain senior securities of successful corporation which Mr. Field founded in 1944 to consolidate his publishing ventures; — Chicago Sun-Times, World Book, Childcraft, Parade, Pocket Books, Little Golden Books, Simon and Schuster.

MUSEUM BENEFITS

"Daumier's famous painting, "L' Amateur D'Estampes,' is bequeathed to the Chicago Art Institute.

"If Mrs. Field disclaims any of the real property, the disclaimed property goes to the Field Foundation, Inc. The residuary estate is given to Mr. Field's son, Marshall Field, jr. Mr. Field, jr., George Richardson, Carl J. Weitzel and John F. Wharton are name as executors.

"No estimate of the net value of the residuary estate can be given at this time. It can be stated that a substantial part of Field's inheritance from his grandfather's estate was given to his family and to charity during his lifetime.

CONTROLLING STOCK

"Included in the gifts to his famely was the controlling stock of Field Enterprises, Inc. the value of the charitable gifts is indicated by the fact that two real estate properties in Chicago given to charitable organiations have a value today of upwards of $4,000,000.

Brothers Insist Uranium Strike Real

Prospectors Rip Unfair Publicity

Sat. 2-25-56 Chicago, Ill.

Defenseless

By MALCOLM POINDEXTER

PHILADELPHIA (ANP) — Two brother geologists, who may have struck a million or more in uranium in Stockton, N. J., have meanwhile had their progress checked by several daily newspapers here which have done everything in their power to discredit the "find."

The brothers, Alvin and Vernon Gatling, plan "some action" as a result of the unfair publicity which sarcastilly sums up their potential wealth as a "pipe dream." One publication went so far as to say that the two Negroes are the "only ones" convinced that there is sufficient uranium near Stockton to work.

Another quoted a New Jersey state geologist, Meredith E. Johnson, as saying that there wasn't sufficient uranium ore at the site to be of any great value. Johnson, it turns out, is a political appointee whom most geologists report "makes decisions with the wind."

One, of local prominence said Johnson would say what he did without hesitation if he had not "been consulted first." Not knowing this, the Gatlings went ahead with their project unaided.

Despite the unfair publicity and sarcasm, the two think they have something. So does the U. S. Government which is making tests of pitch-blend dug fro mthe site. If there is much uranium located there, the Gatlings stand to earn about $1,000 a ton for ore testing 5 per cent. They have already run tests on their own that show the mine varies in uranium content from 0.9 to 7 per cent.

Alvin told this correspondent that the venture is "not a stock promotion" as reported by one paper.

"We have made a tentative diagnosis," he said, "after three years of study and research. We are certain that we have something, but just how much we won't know until further tests are made."

The brothers are graduates of Wilberforce college, Ohio. They came to New York in 1952 to study chemistry and law.

They first came in contact with uranium while reading geology books in the New York City Public Library. To further their knowledge, they went West, working mines and mills in Colorado and Utah.

As "free-lancers," they returned east. The Atomic Energy Commission gave them survey maps of Pennsylvania and New Jersey, and aboard a small Piper Cub plane they conducted aerial reconnaisance.

The most gratifying thing about their find, says Alvin, is the fact that experts seven years ago flatly stated that there was "no abundance of uranium in this country."

"I once read in a dictionary dated 1900," he recalled "that described uranium as a white metal not found in the U. S. It's a grand feeling to explore these things on your own and find out differently."

Whether or not their find turns into a real bonanza, the Gatlings plan to continue their work.

"You never know how much there is to be gained from these mines until you've worked them awhile," recalled Alvin, "so we plan to do just that."

Although Johnson reported "less radio-activity in a sample than there is on the face of a wrist watch," the Gatlings and the U. S. Government are convinced there's a great deal more. And most important, they're willing to find out.

Minister Acquitted for Refusal To Ride on 'Colored' Elevator

Herald Wed. 10-17-56 Miami, Fla. P. 11A

BIRMINGHAM, Ala. —(AP)— A Negro minister was acquitted Tuesday of disorderly conduct charges preferred when he refused to get on an office building elevator reserved for Negroes.

"I'll enforce the law," said Judge Ralph E. Parker, "but there's no law that says whites and Negroes must ride separate elevators." He dismissed the charges against the Rev. T. N. Nelson, 50.

The incident occurred in the Massey building, which has three elevators — two unmarked and one with the designation "Colored."

Bentley said that when building employes tried to get Nelson to move to the "Colored" elevator, he kept repeating, "main floor."

Police were called and arrested Nelson, carrying him to the ground floor on the "Colored" elevator that he had refused to ride. Bentley testified that white persons ride all three elevators.

BIRMINGHAM, Ala.—(ANP) —A report says that a downtown office building has abandoned its previous "racial segregation practices" on elevators since a Police Court acquitted a local Baptist church minister of disorderly conduct charges after he defied the jim-crow practices.

The Rev. Theodore N. Nelson, 50, was found not guilty of disorderly conduct in City Recorder's Judge Ralph E. Parker's court two weks ago. He was arrested Oct. 13 when he refused to ride an elevator "reserved for Negroes" at a place identified as the Massey Building.

Leaders of Bus Boycott Adopt 'Sit Tight' Policy

Journal Tues. 10-30-56 Montgomery, Ala.

Negro bus boycotters are "going to sit tight" and wait to see what the city of Montgomery does on threats to stop their car pool, the Rev. Martin Luther King Jr. said today. P. 2-A

The president of the Montgomery Improvement Assn. that coordinates the 11-month-old boycott said the car pool will continue to operate as usual. "We feel that we're within our legal rights" in running it, Dr. King said.

Last Friday the city commission said it has "plans of bringing action for an injunction to stop all activities which the city considers illegal at this time," referring to the car pool.

The statement was made after a pro-segregation, independent labor group demanded action to stop the car pool.

The next morning the backbone of the car pool, about a dozen new station wagons, were not in operation but yesterday morning they were back on city streets along with older private cars.

MASS MEETINGS HELD

King said two mass meetings were held last night for about 2,000 MIA supporters. "We felt we had to let the people know, to explain what was happening," the young minister said. No changes in car pool operations or general MIA activities were announced at the closed meetings, he said.

"We're just going to sit tight and wait to see what the city does," King declared.

The boycott in protest to segregated city buses began last Dec. 5. Last June four Negro women won a federal court deision that city and state bus segregation laws are unconstitutional. The decision is on appeal to the U.S. Supreme Court and King said when the appeal was filed by the city and state that the boycott would continue until city bus segregation is ended.

Negro here seeks $100,000 damages

A Negro who was arrested on disorderly conduct charges after demanding to ride on the white elevators at the Massey Building, has filed a $100,000 suit against the owners and operators of the building.

T. N. Nelson of 1504 23rd-st, sw, was cleared of the charges in Birmingham's Recorder's Court, when Judge Ralph Parker ruled there is no city ordinance prohibiting mixed elevators.

THE SUIT, filed in Circuit Court by Negro Atty. Orzelle Billingsley, charges that George Thomas and Tom Bentley, as agents for the other defendants, caused Nelson to be arrested on disorderly conduct charges, and imprisoned on Oct. 13.

He claimed that as a result of that imprisonment his nervous system was impaired, he was embarrassed, humiliated and his reputation suffered.

Judge frees cleric who refuses to ride jim crow elevator

BIRMINGHAM, Ala. — Refusal of the Rev. T. N. Nelson of 1504 23rd St. to ride a segregated elevator in the Frank Nelson Building did not constitute disorderly conduct, Judge Ralph Parker ruled last week.

In finding the minister not guilty, Judge Parker noted in Recorders Court that there is no law against colored and white persons riding the same elevators in Birmingham.

Police arrested the Rev. Mr. Nelson Saturday after he boarded one of two elevators reserved for white persons on the seventh floor of the building, refusing to ride the third marked "colored," used at times by both races.

The Other

The Mobile Press

Many Northern white people — not necessarily those connected with NAACP —have seemed to enjoy immensely the spectacle of NAACP and its associate pressure groups ruthlessly striving to impose their will upon the South.

Perhaps word from Gloster B. Current, director of NAACP's organizational activity, that things are not as he thinks they should be in the North will cause these people to look at the racial picture in their own back yards.

It is easy for one to look across the fence into someone else's backyard and suggest changes. So often in such cases, we lose sight of what's going on in our own domains.

Manifesto

The Tuscaloosa News

Action of nearly 100 Southern members of Congress in signing a formal statement of principles on the segregation issue should remove all doubts as to the seriousness of our problems.

Many outside of the South have realized that the issue was not a simple question of legality and morality.

So, for the time it may gain to help us adjust to the inevitable changes and adjustments that will come, the action of the Southern lawmakers was excellent. But let's not misjudge it as a remedy that will completely remove this problem, and make it unnecessary for us to face up to it and all its painful adjustments.

Wilson's

The Monroe Journal

The University had no other alternative than to expel Student Leonard R. Wilson, who apparently was expecting and welcoming his dismissal.

His recent actions show not only an absence of good manners but a complete lack of common intelligence as well.

Conduct from people with the caliber of Wilson's apparent attitudes and ideas have and will continue to add more friction and stress to the increasingly alarming segregation issue.

Timely

The Lafayette Sun

This newspaper, like most of the other Southern newspapers, believes that the Supreme Court overstepped its authority in its recent ruling outlawing segregation. We further believe that the NAACP and the pious Yankees who practice segregation in reality while propounding integration in theory, are stirring up trouble here in the South that can never benefit the Negro.

We would, however, issue a timely warning to our readers. Watch out for the demagogue. He will probably come in the form of a politician who wants to use the issue to promote his candidacy for office, and he may come in the form of an unknown who loves to see his name in print one way or another.

Local Editor Gains Support In Race Issue

By AL LANIER
Associated Press Writer

A Southern editor and a northern Negro leader both charged here today that racial disharmony is prevalent in the north as well as the south.

Grover C. Hall Jr., editor-in-chief of the Montgomery Advertiser, said racial unrest in the north is even more significant because of relatively few Negroes "and they start out with equal equality and theoretical acceptance."

Gloster B. Current of New York, who directs the program and organizational activities of some 1,600 branches of the National Assn. for the Advancement of Colored People, had this to say:

"In the north we struggle with the subtleties and hidden aspects of discrimination and segregation. In no community in this nation where there is a sizable Negro population can you say the problem of race relations have been completely solved."

Hall made his comments in a letter to James A. Welchsler, editor of the New York Post, which was reprinted on the editorial page of the Sunday Advertiser. Current's remarks were included in an address today to bus boycott leaders at a Negro church.

MAP EXISTS

The Advertiser editor, whose late father won a Pulitzer prize for fighting the Ku Klux Klan, said a New York Post columnist told him an official map exists showing how school districts in New York "are gerrymandered to achieve segregation."

Noting that dozens of reporters from all over the world have covered the Montgomery Negro bus boycott story in recent weeks, Hall proposed that Welscher assign the columnist, Murray Kempton, to him for a week in New York "to get something of the New York story for Alabamians."

"Since all the New York reporters are down here doing the Alabama story, I propose to help fill their vacuum in New York," Hall added.

The Alabama editor said, with few exceptions, New York papers "merely peck" at stories of racial discrimination in the North.

"However, they are characteristically pietistical kibitzers or hell-mouth gluttons when it comes to race strife under the Dixie Magnolias," he said.

'JIM CROWISM'

Current, the NAACP leader, said recent racial unrest in the South has brought the "dirty aspects of Jim-Crowism" and mob violence "out into the open."

"The nation does not like what it sees," Current continued, but "this is all to the good for during the present conflict a lot of soul-searching is going on, and that ultimately means something constructive will be done."

In all the "exciting conflicts of recent months," Current said, "the real story" of continued desegregation in border states is being missed.

"Where integration has been tried the evidence clearly demonstrates that it is workable," he said, adding that opponents of desegregation are "fearful this positive evidence would destroy the myth of 'white supremacy'."

FIGHT OUTLINED

Outlining the fight against integration by state legislatures in the South, Current declared in an address prepared fo delivery at the Bethel Baptist Church here:

"They can legislate until doomsday. None of these bills are going to stop the freedom train as it moves toward the distant station of full integration."

He said opponents of racial integration are using economic pressure, intimidation, terrorism and violence, but White Citizens Councils have learned that "Negroes don't beg anymore. They have been working and saving their money. They learned discipline, not to trade with a merchant who was a member of the council."

Current also noted "a disturbing tendency on the part of our liberal friends and others to speak of the extremists on both sides. They equate the NAACP and the White Citizens Councils.

LOVE PEACE

"The NAACP does not consider itself an extremist group," Current continued. "The program we are following a loyal American one. We abhor violence and always work within the democratic framework. That is more than can be said about the White Citizens Councils in their present activities.

Current said attempts to label the NAACP as a Communist group or a northern organization are ridiculous.

He said both former President Truman and President Eisenhower have spoken at NAACP gatherings, and that 45 per cent of the NAACP's 300,000 membership lives in the 17 Southern states and the District of Columbia.

The NAACP official said "the entire world applauds" the Montgomery bus boycott which has been in effect here since Dec. 5 in protest to racial segregation.

"The protest is a significant new device to be used elsewhere to obtain proper treatment and justice," Current predicted.

Commenting on the case of Negro Coed Autherine Lucy who was expelled from the University of Alabama, Current promised: "Negroes are going to attend the University of Alabama some day, and that day is not far away."

Noting that this is an election year, the Negro leader said the two major political parties will not be permitted to "avoid" the civil rights issue.

Current said the "split personality" brought on in the Democratic party by "its Southern wing and Northern liberals" renders it "impotent on civil rights."

On the other hand, he said, the Republican administration has "failed' to show firmness in their present civil rights crisis."

South Race Relations In Rapid Deterioration

CHAPEL HILL, N.C., March 11 (AP)—The upward trend in race relations has "turned downward" in the past year and a half and threatens southern economic progress, Charlotte Editor C. A. McKnight declared tonight.

McKnight stressed he was not implying there had been any measurable slowing of the dynamic economic forces at work in the south.

"Yet none but an incurable optimist," he added, "can fail to realize that the rapid deterioration of race relations in the wake of the Supreme Court decision is already a large cloud on your regional economic horizon, one which blown by the strong winds of emotionalism and group hatreds could well darken for a long time our bright material future."

McKnight was one of three speakers who discussed segregation issues at the opening session of the Carolina Symposium of public affairs.

Dr. Benjamin Mays, president of Morehouse College in Atlanta traced the historical and legal background in tonight's theme, "A Report on the Supreme Court's Challenge to the South."

Maj. L. P. McLendon, North Carolina educational and legal leader said the greatest present danger in southern race relations is that "good people in the South will lend their influence as a front for secret organizations and even punitive governmental action.

"By no process of reasoning can we arrive at the conclusion that the South can, by any plan of intervention, evasion or pure defiance, nullify the constitution as interpreted by the Supreme Court," McLendon declared.

He said conduct of southern whites and Negroes in the next two years "will largely determine the 'deliberate speed' with which compulsory segregation is forever abandoned."

McLendon declared "it is unthinkable that we would maintain our traditional belief in compulsory segregation of the races at the cost of destroying our public school system."

McKnight, discussing the trends of readjustment in the south today, said that northern newspapers are showing increased signs, in editorials, of understanding the plight of the "southern moderate who finds the middle ground fast shrinking from beneath him."

It is time for the NAACP and its backers "to withdraw the pressure in highly sensitive areas" so that emotions may subside and some of the misunderstanding be cleared up, McKnight said. He said that NAACP should "turn its talents to improving human relations in areas where compliance is feasible."

At the same time McKnight said, "district federal judges should begin exercising more liberally the considerable latitude permitted them in the implementation decision"

Segregation Blame Placed On President

NEW YORK, March 11 (AP)—Charles Abrams, chairman of the New York State Commission against discrimination, today blamed President Eisenhower and Atty. Gen. Herbert Brownell for the failure to enforce the Supreme Court's decisions outlawing segregation in public schools.

Speaking on a transcribed radio program ("Let's Find Out", CBS) Abrams said:

"The greatest problem facing the nation today is the restoration of morality and respect for the Supreme Court's opinion."

"When the Supreme Court rendered its opinion on segregation it caused a rattle throughout the nation and not an upset. I believe the failure of the segregation law, the Attorney General to aid the Supreme Court was a factor in the failure of the segregation law, as well as the (Autherine) Lucy case.

"The people don't seem to understand that a court cannot enforce a decree, it is the problem of the executive branch."

Abrams said he would like to see the President make clear to the nation that there would be federal intervention when civil rights were affected.

"The President must take the initiative," he said. "It is an unfortunate thing when civil rights are being made a political issue."

Abrams said he believed "The South as a whole is law-abiding" but that the "crackpot and the marginal mind are the ones responsible for the trouble in the South."

Madison Draft Board Chairman Quits

Fri. 9-28-56

An unidentified North Alabama draft official has commended Gen. Lewis B. Hershey's action in the Fred Gray induction case while another draft board member announced his resignation yesterday.

State Selective Service Director James W. Jones revealed yesterday that "one board member from one North Alabama county told our field clerk he thought Gen. Hershey did the right thing in ordering Gray's case reopened."

Jones refused, however, to name the draft official. "The reports we get from the field are considered confidential," the draft director said, "and I don't feel it would be just to let that information out."

The resignation of a Madison County draft official was announced yesterday from Huntsville. Peyton Drake, chairman of the board, said he sent a telegram to Jones on Sept. 21 resigning in protest to handling of the Gray case. Drake's resignation raised the total resignations since Sept. 17 to 14.

Gray, a 25-year-old Negro attorney and bus boycott leader, was scheduled to report for military induction on Sept. 17. Hershey, national selective service director, postponed indefinitely the attorney's induction by ordering his case reopened. Hershey said he took his action based on "new evidence" that Gray is now a full-time preacher and a part-time lawyer.

When ordered to report for induction by Montgomery County Draft Board 51, Gray was preaching part-time at the Holt Street Church of Christ. He has been a leading figure in court cases involving de-segregation.

It was Hershey's order to reopen the case that prompted the 14 resignations. One member of Montgomery County Draft Board 151 resigned Aug. 15 when Gray was permitted a 30-day postponement of induction.

Jones said yesterday that a field clerk turned in reports of 17 Alabama county draft boards whose members stated they had no intention of resigning.

"Most of the counties were in North Alabama," Jones said. Two local draft boards in Montgomery—149 and 151—have reported they have no intention of resigning.

In addition to protest resignations, the three-man Bullock County draft board has ordered all inductions halted until Gray is drafted. They created a new draft classification—"FG"—into which they reclassified five Bullock County men scheduled for the October draft. "FG" stands for Fred Gray.

Alabama Board Asks Draft Probe

Constitution Atlanta, Ga.

Mon. 10-1-56

MONTGOMERY, Ala., Sept. 30 (AP)—A congressional investigation of the Selective Service System has been asked by an Alabama draft board as a result of the induction postponement for Fred D. Gray, a Negro.

The Autauga County board today made public letters sent Thursday to Alabama's two senators and U.S. Rep. Kenneth Roberts asking the investigation. The board also appealed to Alabama's other 82 draft boards to support the request.

At the same time the Autauga board notified the state Selective Service director it is holding up draft calls "until this matter is settled."

The letters to Sens. Lister Hill and John Sparkman and to Roberts said:

"Recent action by the Selective Service System resulting in the indefinite postponement of induction of a registrant . . . has greatly increased the difficulty of proper administration by all local boards in this state of their affairs."

H. M. Gipson of Prattville, Autauga board chairman, said the letters "did not name the case most prominent lately. We want to avoid any such issues as that.

DRAFT BOARD UNREST SPREADS IN ALABAMA

Madison County Chairman Quits, Scores Folsom

Fri. 9-28-56

HUNTSVILLE, Ala., Sept. 27. —(UP)—The chairman of the Madison County Draft Board quit Thursday with a blast at intervention in the Fred Gray case and against Gov. James E. Folsom for purging assistant state Selective Service Director James T. Johnson.

Peyton Drake became the 14th official to quit, but the first in North Alabama, as tempers continued to wax hot in the Gray dispute.

As Drake announced his resignation, the Randolph County Draft Board notified national director Lewis B. Hershey it will quit as a group if he cannot assure draft boards he will go along with their decisions and rulings made by the appeals agents.

Gray, the controversial bus boycott leader at Montgomery, was reclassified by the Montgomery board and ordered into the Army this month. The NAACP immediately protested to Mr. Hershey and branded the Negro's draft as an attempt to "get even" with the boycott leaders.

General Hershey ordered Gray's induction postponed indefinitely for consideration of "new evidence." This precipitated a chain of resignations and drew a declaration from the Bullock County group it is through drafting local men until Gray is in uniform.

Mr. Drake, chairman of the three-man board here, said "I cannot go along with politics in the selective service system."

He said also he had been a good friend of Colonel Johnson, whom Governor Folsom booted from the state without explanation this week. Mr. Johnson is being transferred to Atlanta.

At Wedowee, the Randolph county board said General Hershey must back up the decisions of the local boards and appeals groups or "we see no need for existence of these boards."

The 25-year-old Gray claims he is an active minister but the Montgomery board said he spent all his time practicing law. He serves the boycott group as special counsel.

Cutoff draft board refuses to join fight

MONTGOMERY, Ala., Oct. 6—Draft board officials at Bessemer, Ala., have refused to support a move for a congressional investigation into Selective Service procedures, it was learned here.

News

And at Luverne, Ala., Alton L. Turner, draft appeals agent for Crenshaw County, declared, "There is not a local board in Alabama which can now conscientiously induct anyone into the armed forces."

These were developments in the controversy over the draft postponement of Montgomery Negro Atty. Fred Gray.

Turner made his statement in a letter to U. S. Selective Service Director Lewis B. Hershey. Turner told Hershey he won't be a part of a "forced draft system tainted with political favoritism."

Birmingham News

Hershey had ordered an indefinite postponement for Gray, who claimed deferment as a part-time minister. He was active in the Montgomery bus boycott.

Bessemer refuses

THE AUTAUGA COUNTY draft board started a move last Monday for a Congressional inquiry into draft procedures. Letters asking the probe were sent to U. S. Sens. Lister Hill and John Sparkman and U. S. Rep. Kenneth A. Roberts of the Fourth District. Letters also were sent to 83 Alabama boards.

Local Board No. 70 at Bessemer notified the Autauga board it would have no part in pushing for an investigation.

The Bessemer board replied, "This board is not familiar with the facts surrounding your charge of improper administration (in

ALTON L. TURNER . . . Assails Hershey

Alabama) of the Selective Service Act of 1948 as amended.

"This is to inform you that this board has no difficulties in what we believe the proper administration of the act."

Cites pressure groups

THE LETTER was signed by Van D. Jones, a member of the Bessemer Board.

The Luverne official who charged "favoritism" replied to a letter from Hershey, who refused to accept Turner's resignation.

As to a reference in the National Selective Service chief's letter about the absence of pressure from various organized groups during the 16 years he has held office, Turner observed:

"Your resistance to such pressure prior to the Fred Gray case accents the power of the NAACP block vote in Washington.

"Beginning of end"

"YOUR ACTION is the beginning of the end of our Selective Service System.

"There is not a local board in Alabama which can now conscientiously induct anyone into the armed forces.

"The responsibility for this situation rests squarely on your shoulders."

Turner said so long as any pressure organization "can dictate the policy of the Selective Service system, the people of Alabama cannot, and will not, participate therein."

Turner, a graduate of the University of Alabama law school in 1950, was soon after named Crenshaw County Solicitor. He took part in the 1954 Phenix City vice clean-up as a legal aid to Maj. Gen. Walter J. Hanna.

Folsom Gets Johnson Sent To New Post

Advertiser 9-27-56

Col. James T. Johnson received orders yesterday relieving him as deputy selective servile officer in Alabama and transferring hm to Atlanta, while rumors persisted that his transfer stemmed from the ice Director James W. Jones had the Gray case.

Johnson, who has been state or state deputy selective service director for the past 13 years, will be transferred to Atlanta on Oct. 1.

The transfer orders resulted

COL. J. T. JPHNSON
Transferred

from a request by Gov. James E. Folsom to move Johnson from Alabama as "surplus."

Rumors that the removal request stems from Johnson's activities in the Fred Gray draft case or from plain politics have been denied by Folsom.

Johnson will become the regional field officer for the Regional Selective Service Office in Atlanta. "I feel that the new position is a promotion," Johnson said, "but I would much prefer to stay here."

Folsom wrote to National Selective Service Headquarters on Aug. 7 asking for Johnson's removal. The contents of the letter or the reasons prompting the governor to ask for Johnson's removal have not been disclosed.

On Aug. 7, Fred D. Gray, 25-year-old Negro attorney and legal spokesman for the Montgomery bus boycott, had been ordered by his local draft board to report for military induction.

The Negro attorney had already appealed to the State and Presidential Draft Appeals boards without success. State Selective Service Director JAMES W. Jones had already refused to reopen Gray's case—with Johnson's acknowledged backing.

Then Gen. Lewis B. Hershey, national draft director, ordered a 30-day postponement of induction followed by an order to reopen the Gray case.

Advertiser 9-27-56

The order was protested by state and resulted in 13 resignations by draft officials.

Sources close to the governor admitted that Folsom was "upset" over Gray's induction. But the governor has denied vigorously that his request to have Johnson transferred stemmed in any way from tht Gray case.

POLITICS BLAMED

In some quarters, politics has been blamed for Johnson's transfer. Johnson joined the Alabama draft board in 1940 as chief of the manpower division. He held the rank of captain at that time.

In 1943, in Governor Sparks' administration, he was made state selective service director. When Folsom was elected to his first term, Johnson was demoted to deputy director.

Johnson, who is credited with building Alabama's record of never having missed an induction quota in peace or war, was raised agin to director in Governor Persons' administration. When Folsom was re-elected in 1954, Johnson was again demoted to deputy director.

Johnson has refused several requests from Gen. Hershey to return to Washington in a higher selective service post due to his wife's illness. A victim of rheumatic fever, Mrs. Johnson has been advised by physicians to remain in a warm climate.

"MERELY VOTED"

But Johnson said he "has never actively cupported or opposed any candidate for political office." He said he "merely voted as a citizen."

Johnson said he has never been called in by the governor and told the reason for Folsom's request Johnson be transferred.

Johnson was born in Faunsdale, Ala., on Oct. 12, 1900. He received a degree in electrical engineering from Georgia Tech. At the same time he was commissioned as a lieutenant in the U.S. Army.

Not called to active duty, Johnson worked as an engineer with the Alabama Power Co. in Birmingham from 1925 to 1936. From 1936 to 1940 he was assistant division superintendant of the Alabama Power Co. in Montgomery.

In 1940 he was called to active duty and assigned to the Alabama Selective Service Headquarters.

Johnson is the father of a 19-year-old girl and six-year-old twins. He said he will leave his family in Montgomery "until the end of the school year so as not to interrupt their education." Johnson's daughter is enrolled in Huntingdon College.

A Mother's Letter To Gen. Hershey

EDITOR, THE ADERTISER—Today I am writing Gen. Hershey a letter (copy enclosed) in protest to the action that he has found it so necessary to take. While I do not flatter myself that it will cause him to change his opinion, I do hope that other mothers, who have not done so, will so bombard him with their protests that he will wish that he was not a general, at least in the part of the service that he now fills.

I also wish to compliment both Bullock and Autauga boards for the stand that they have taken.

Chesson, Ala. MRS. J. J. JOLLEY.

Adv. 10-12-56

General Lewis B. Hershey,
Washington, D. C.

Dear Sir—

For some time I have followed the news of the personal interest that you have taken in the deferment of an Alabama draftee. This, the action that you have taken, and this action over the decision of the board, prompts me to write this letter.

Since Alabama shares equally with Russia the attention of all Washington I wish to bring to your kind attention the services of other citizens of our state.

¶My husband is a totally disabled veteran of World War I. He served overseas approximately two years. He also served on our Macon County draft board for many years. A thankless, unhappy and unpaid service. Incidentally, he draws no compensation.

¶ My only brother enlisted in the Army during World War II. He served in Europe throughout the war. He was then sent to Japan for two years. When the Korean war began he was sent there. He died in Korea, leaving a widow and two young children.

¶ Our oldest son, at eighteen, enlisted in the Air Force. He was killed in action when he was only 20.

¶Our second son, at eighteen, enlisted in the Navy. He served on Okinawa both through war and equally as bad a typhoon. Upon his discharge he entered college to study medicine. After three years of pre-med he was again called to active duty. This ended his medical career.

¶Our third son also upon finishing high school enlisted. He served in the Army two years. Fortunately he was not sent overseas.

Please do not get the impression that I feel sorry for myself. I am both happy and proud that we had no rabble rousers, no draft dodgers and not one either asked or expected deferment.

However . . . should the time come when another son of mine should be called, I shall expect you to see that he is deferred.

This is not to be considered a favor either given or received. I consider it only what is due. As for you, General, it will be only a matter of routine.

MRS. JAMES J. JOLLEY.

Negro Ministers Assert Segregation On Way Out

Montgomery, Ala.
Mar. 2-27-56

Negro ministers indicted last week in the bus boycott predicted from their pulpits yesterday that the protest against racial segregation would continue.

King said he recently visited Nashville, Tenn., and 90 per cent of the white students with whom he talked at Vanderbilt University said they were for integration.

He added: "We are in a great struggle and the consequences will be world-shaking."

Another indicted minister, the Rev. R. W. Hilson, declared from the pulpit that the bus boycott "has become a spiritual movement for us."

CITES PROTEST

He cited the protests made in Washington Saturday by bishops of his church and by other Negro church officials.

Hilson said his congregation at St. John's AME Church indicated the members strongly favor continuing the 12-week-old boycott.

King, preaching to a capacity crowd, urged Negroes to "just keep loving" the "enemies and don't lose faith in man."

"Our Christian faith says you can be changed," he said, declaring that "exploiting" and "prejudiced" men can be "lifted up to justice and fair play" by those who practice brotherly love.

NEW DUTY SENSE

During a visit to Vanderbilt University in Nashville last week, King said, 90 per cent of the students with whom he came in contact said they were "willing to accept integration."

He said some of the white students at Vanderbilt told him they were glad to see desegregation even though their communities and their parents are against it.

"Thank God there are people who can rise above their communities," King said.

The young Negro minister said Negroes through their boycott of city buses, have already won a victory that has given Negroes "segregation can't survive because everywhere "a new sense of duty."

The boycott began last Dec. 5 after Rosa Parks, a Negro seamstress, was fined $14 for refusing to move to the segregated section in the back of a bus. State and city laws require segregated seating facilities for whites and Negroes.

A two-car collision Sunday six miles east of Tuskegee claimed the life of Rosie Dukes, 53, of Grantsville, Ga.

Ohio Negroes Collect Funds For Boycotters

COLUMBUS, Ohio, Feb. 26 (AP)—More than 1,000 Columbus Negroes gathered today to raise funds for the defense of Negroes arrested in the Montgomery, Ala., bus boycott.

A spokesman for the local chapter of the National Assn. for the Advancement of Colored People, which sponsored the rally, said $2,128.38 was collected.

The money came from persons attending the indoor rally and also from Sunday Service church congregations in Columbus, said Barbee William Durham, executive secretary of the chapter.

GRAETZ SPEAKER

Principal speaker at the rally was the Rev. Robert S. Graetz, 27-year-old white pastor of Montgomery's Trinity Lutheran Church. He said he was "pleasantly surprised" at the number of Southern white people who have come to the support of Montgomery's Negroes in protesting segregation on city buses.

Rev. Graetz, who graduated last June from Capital University seminary here, is the leader of an all-Negro congregation.

He said since the start of the boycott Dec. 5, there were 99 Negroes indicted. He has received nearly 100 letters, he said, "most of them from white people," commending him for his stand on the matter of racial segregation.

Some letters, he added, contained money totaling more than $200—some of it given in behalf of the boycott but mostly as donations to his church.

State Racial Trouble Laid To 'Reds, Devil'

MOBILE, Ala., Feb. 26 (AP)—Rep. Frank Boykin (D-Ala) said today that "Communists and the devil" are responsible for Alabama's current racial troubles, and that he will reveal the names of 56 Communists back of racial disturbances in the state.

The Mobile congressman spoke to an audience of 500 or more at the dedication of a church sanctuary in suburban Prichard, Ala.

He referred to the recent troubles at Tuscaloosa, where rioting broke out when a Negro student was enrolled at the University of Alabama, and the bus boycott by Negroes at Montgomery.

Boykin said he plans to turn over the names of the alleged Communists to the Mobile Press Register on Monday. He said he hopes the papers will publish them.

(Alabama law places the responsibility for proof of such charges on newspapers which publish such names at their own initiative.)

The congressman, who is seeking reelection mentioned no specific organization or group in connection with the troubles or the list of alleged Communists. He declared that "We believe in colored persons who believe in God," but added, "The devil is behind the things going on in Montgomery and Tuscaloosa."

P.T.A official quits over integration

News, Feb 27
Thurs 1-26-56

MONTGOMERY, Ala., July 2 —(AP)—A protest to support of integration by the National Congress of Parents and Teachers was submitted in the form of her resignation Tuesday by the president of the Montgomery PTA Council.

Mrs. Betty Baldwin McLaurine said, "I cannot be any part of an organization that has an integration statement or policy as its ultimate goal." The local executive committee will have to act on her resignation.

Mrs. McLaurine said the National Congress has never acknowledged a resolution by the Alabama Congress passed in April that favored segregation.

2 Hanged In Montgomery: Just Dummies

Jackson, Miss.
Aug. 8-12-56

Montgomery, Ala., Aug. 8—The Montgomery court square Saturday was the scene of the double hanging of two dummies—one representing a Negro, labeled "NAACP," and the other a white man tagged "I talked for integration."

Police and several hundred spectators milled around the gallows, which was brought to the scene by men in a blue and white late model station wagon. The automobile sped away as soon as the scaffold was put into place.

The gallows was first reported to be the work of the Citizens Council, an organization dedicated to the preservation of segregation, but council headquarters denied any knowledge of the prank.

Police made no effort to remove the double scaffold, and citizens attracted to the scene seemed amused by the figures and walked on laughing.

A large, fancy sign on the gallows, reading "built by union labor," was believed to be a stab at the AFL-CIO endorsement of integration.

Montgomery has long been a hotbed in the segregation-integration struggle. Last December Negroes began a violence-marked boycott of Montgomery buses in protest against the arrest of a Negro woman who refused to move to the Negro section on a bus.

Alabama Bar condemns race ruling of court

Birmingham, Ala.
Aug. 12-12-56

BY EDWIN STRICKLAND
News staff writer

The 79th annual convention of the Alabama State Bar Assn. adjourned Saturday after throwing itself officially into the fight against racial integration.

A strongly-worded resolution condemning the U. S. Supreme Court's racial decisions, was unanimously adopted by the more than 300 lawyers attending the final session at Tutwiler Hotel.

Meanwhile, the Bar Assn. elected John D. Higgins of Birmingham as president for the next year. He was elevated from the vice presidency by acclamation.

JOHN D. HIGGINS
. . . Heads state bar

Bernie Jones of Evergreen nosed out Walter P. Gewin of Tuscaloosa for vice president. By custom, the vice president becomes president the following year.

Next year's convention will be in Montgomery.

A resolution adopted by the association called upon the Legislature at its next regular session to give "substantial" salary increases to justices of the Alabama Supreme Court and Court of Appeals and to circuit judges throughout the state.

Fight is pledged

THE RESOLUTION putting the association squarely into the segregation fight condemned the U. S. Supreme Court's racial rulings, calling them in direct conflict with the Constitution and the many decisions previously rendered by the court itself.

The bar pledged itself to use "all honorable and legal means . . . to contest such recent decisions . . . to the end that our freedom as guaranteed and intended by our Constitution be maintained and that confidence in the stability of that great document be restored."

By separate resolution, the bar thanked Joseph F. Johnston, Birmingham attorney, for his speech Thursday on the racial rulings of the U. S. Supreme Court.

The talk, the resolution declared, revealed "extraordinary thought, study and preparation." There were suggestions that the Bar Assn. have the state for certain chancery and equity matters. The committee is to make its report to the bar commission, and its findings may be acted upon at next year's convention.

The bar also declared itself in favor of legislation allowing circuit judges, traveling on business of the Alabama Assn. of Circuit Judges to be paid expenses from public funds.

Pays judges' expenses

IN ITS LAST business session the bar appointed a five-member committee to make a study to see whether uniform bar rates should be established throughout the state.

Atty Jones, the new vice president of the bar, has long been a member of the bar commission, and one of the most active workers in affairs of the bar for the last 30 years.

Pres. Higgins is a major general in the Army Reserve, and the senior member of the Birmingham law firm of Taylor, Higgins, Windham and Perdue.

South and its schools

The United States Supreme Court failed to consider many factors when it handed down its decision abolishing segregation in public schools, a Birmingham attorney told fellow lawyers here today.

Joseph F. Johnston, speaking to an annual meeting of Alabama State Bar Assn., said only one thing is certain today and in the foreseeable future:

"The federal courts have the power to destroy public education in the Southern states, but there is not enough power in the entire federal government to compel their people to send their children to integrated schools to any substantial extent."

ONE OF THE MAIN factors the Supreme Court did not take into consideration was the "social tension, ill-will and disorganization created, Johnston declared.

The attorney said the ruling placed a charge of "gunpowder" in the South. He said there is still "ample constitutional authority in the states to direct the removal of the gunpowder."

Johnston said "aggressive attempts to use the federal courts as instruments for social revolution contrary to the tradition of the Southern states can be resolved by constitutional and peaceful means."

FURTHER CITING the Supreme Court's "misunderstanding" of the segregation problem in the South, Johnston said:

"The sharpness of the public reaction and the measures which are being taken and responsibility proposed in the South with respect to schools clearly indicate the measure of the court's misunderstanding of the depth and intencity of the determination of the white people not to mix socially, whether in schools or homes, and the explosive peril inherent in any attempt to force integration."

"It will be tragic if the court cannot be made to realize that it is here dealing not with a matter of mere inconvenience or passing prejudice, but with an organic social force that lies at the heart of the political organization of every Southern state and community."

STATE SEN. ALBERT BOUTwell, a member of the Birmingham Bar Assn., briefed the state attorneys on a study being made for a tax revision in Alabama.

Some things being considered in the study, he said, are how the tax burden is divided, if there is equal distribution of taxes in the divisions, if present statutes are designed to impose equal taxes for all and what can be done to see that everyone gets fair treatment.

He pointed out that the state relies heavily on consumer taxes, which is Alabama's main source of income. Consumer taxes currently are at higher maximum rates than in other states, Boutwell said.

It Depends on Who's The 'Rebel' In Alabama

By Tarleton Collier

MONTGOMERY, ALA.—It has been pointed out in this series how political competition forces all candidates to take the same line and level on racial issues. Any real talk of solutions is prevented. In fact the idea seems to be a need to show that no solutions are called for because no problems exist. Or perhaps, if there is a problem, it consists only of ways to rebuke and restrict the Supreme Court.

This shows up clearly in the Georgia contest between Herman Talmadge and M. E. Thompson for Walter F. George's seat in the U. S. Senate. But this kind of pressure does not have the same quality of bitterness that goes into the social pressures to keep intact the pattern of segregation.

In Alabama these social and economic persuasions have become efficient. They are designed to batter even the mild moderates into conformity through sheer weariness.

The case of Dr. C. M. Dannelly, superintendent of the Montgomery County school system (city and county) is a good example. Mr. Dannelly, a native Alabaman, is one of the most distinguished local school superintendents in the country. He was president of Kentucky Wesleyan College more than 20 years ago. He has been a vice-president of the National Education Association, a university professor of education. Besides his Ph.D. from Yale University, he has a string of honorary doctorates (in laws, letters and humanities).

Dr. Dannelly is also one of the outstanding laymen in the Methodist Church. He comes naturally by his zeal for Methodism. Dannellys for generations have stood out in the Alabama and General Conferences as ministers, presiding elders and lay leaders.

At the General Conference in Minneapolis this summer he won to a crown of practically a lifetime of devoted labors. He was named as vice-president of the Judicial Council, a nine-member board which is the highest level to which a layman may look. It is the court of appeals on church legislation, supreme over rulings even of bishops and church courts.

Methodist eminence was not new to Dr. Dannelly. He had been president of the General Sunday School Conference of the church. He first went on the Judicial Council in 1952, but his elevation to the vice-presidency was new. When he got home from Minneapolis, the felicitations were widespread.

Then it was suddenly discerned that the Judicial Council's president, J. Ernest Wilkins, U. S. Assistant Secretary of Labor, is a Negro. In view of the community attitudes in Montgomery and Alabama, citadels of the White Citizens Councils, it seems now only natural that the hue and cry should begin.

The Montgomery Board of Education heard a demand that Superintendent Dannelly be dismissed. There was an alternative demand that he resign either as superintendent or as a member of the Judicial Council.

The Montgomerian who told me about the Dannelly incident, and who himself has been the object of W.C.C. reprisals, said the Board of Education stood by its superintendent. He said the board was, in fact, the only public agency that has even slightly moved to dispute the White Councils' point of view. The Montgomery city administration has openly taken sides against Negroes in the bus boycott. Only Friday there came a dispatch saying that Montgomery police refused to take down the effigies of Negroes and a National Guardsman that appeared at three schools as they opened for the season.

The $100,000 fine levied by a local circuit court judge against the N.A.A.C.P. for refusal to turn over its membership list is another example of community attitudes, which make the stand of the school board in defense of Dr. Dannelly appear even more courageous. However, Dr. Dannelly lost little time sending to the Methodist authorities his resignation from the Judicial Council.

There is no point in speculating on his motives. He merely said in his letter of resignation (as reported in The Christian Herald) that "a climate of circumstances was created" when he accepted the post. But he is getting on in years, being near retirement age. His health is not the best. He could have been moved by a thought to divert the burden of pressures and irritations that almost certainly would have been turned upon his associates.

Those pressures, as my informant described them, amount to a terrifying and wearing experience for anybody who displays an idea that the segregationist view should be examined. In one form they consist of telephone calls that run on for hours, sometimes through the night.

"The organization seems to work in shifts," he said. "The agents are numerous and tireless. The messages run from the mild or even jocular to the viciously abusive. The exhausting thing is their endlessness.

"There is a saying around here that unless you are a federal judge or a retired Methodist minister you'd better keep your mouth shut on segregation. Younger members of the Methodist clergy who have shown a spark of interest in solutions of the problem have been shuffled around in new appointments, removing them from offended congregations."

Montgomery has been the scene of a number of dynamitings. One object of destruction was a Lutheran mission to Negroes which had been working helpfully and unobtrusively for years. Now, however, with incitements flaming, there is a pressure upon everybody, of whatever motive or calling, to conform to the pattern or take the consequences. Dr. Dannelly is not the only one, though he is perhaps the most notable.

NOTE: In a previous report on the Georgia senatorial race I wrote that before the announcement of Senator George that he would retire, Herman Talmadge made a statement critical of the veteran Senator and later recalled it. I had written that the statement "vanished."

The Talmadge campaign office informs me that this was an error as to both the criticism and suppression. It sends me a copy of the first statement. It differs from the subsequent statement by Mr. Talmadge announcing his candidacy principally in these excerpts as to Senator George:

"I had expected that he would comply with his oft-repeated statement that he would not seek reelection . . . and help Georgians send a young and vigorous representative to the Senate. Senator George . . . has earned the admiration, respect and gratitude of all Georgians. He deserves the right to spend his remaining years free from the demands, turmoil and tensions of the national scene. It is my hope that he will yet follow the wishes of his friends and accept his senatorial pension of $16,850 annually and enter into an honorable retirement."

Another paragraph of both Talmadge statements said identically: "I shall not seek office on the demerits of any individual or opponent."

In Querries On Stand—

Congressmen Point To Integration Fight

Post-Herald Mon. 7-16-56

BY GENE WORTSMAN
Post-Herald Correspondent

WASHINGTON, July 15.—Alabama's congressional delegation is sometimes not amused about efforts of Citiezns Councils to determine how the delegation stands in the integration dispute.

The councils apparently have been trying to put all public officials on record on the question.

One Alabama newspaper last week queried the congressmen on whether they belong to a council or would speak to a council group.

All the congressmen replied.

Two said they were members, and all said they haven't refused to speak to any Alabama group whenever their schedule would permit.

But what raises the ire of some of the congressmen is the fact that council members don't seem to know that the integration fight is an old matter.

Said one congressman, "We've been fighting it for years."

The councils began in Alabama only a year ago.

In 1951 when a civil rights bill came to the House, Southern congressmen say they weakened it with amendments.

It then was filibustered to death in the Senate.

"That's what the Southern people are trying to do this time," he explained.

Admittance will be by invitation only.

The 900 seats generally will go to VIPs of the party.

The idea seems to be that the Democrats are nominating Jenny Donke (for the Democratic donkey) for president.

White and black dummies 'strung up' in Montgomery

Birm. Ala.

MONTGOMERY, Ala., Aug. 4—(AP)—A blackface dummy and another figure made up to portray a white man who "talked integration" were hanged in downtown Montgomery Saturday while Confederate flags fluttered overhead.

One dummy bore a sign reading "NAACP"; the other sign read "I talked integration."

They were strung up on two scaffolds hauled to court square in the heart of the business district on a truck.

Police tore the gallows down on orders from Mayor W. A. Gayle and no arrests were made. The unidentified white men who participated in the demonstration drove off in the truck and a station wagon bearing the words "Alabama Labor News."

The labor paper, published in Montgomery, has been critical of racial policies of the AFL-CIO and has supported the formation of an independent Southern union. A sign on the gallows Saturday read "built by union labor."

A CONFEDERATE flag flew atop each scaffold and a trumpeter blew taps as the macabre ceremony ended. An officer in the pro-segregation Central Alabama Citizens Council said his organization has nothing to do with the incident.

Negroes in Montgomery have refused to ride segregated buses since last Dec. 5 and a three-judge Federal Court panel declared city and state segregation laws unconstitutional. The decision has been appealed to the Supreme Court and an injunction against further enforcement of the laws has been set aside pending the appeal.

Constitution change— Law is aimed at park seareaation

News P.17
Birm. Ala.

This is the second of three stories on the constitutional amendments to be voted on Aug. 28.

BY REX THOMAS

MONTGOMERY, Ala., Aug. 1—(AP)—A proposed constitutional amendment which slipped almost unnoticed through the Legislature may forestall racial integration in public recreation and housing in Alabama.

IF RATIFIED in the special amendment election Aug. 28, it will open the way for city and county governing bodies to sell or give away "public parks and playgrounds or other public recreational facilities and public housing projects."

Nothing in the amendment itself mentions segregation or integration. It merely adds a paragraph to section 94 of the state constitution which now says the Legislature cannot authorize a city or county to lend its credit or grant public money or property to private individuals or organizations.

THE PROPOSED change would add this stipulation:

"It is provided, however, that the Legislature may enact general, special or local laws authorizing political subdivisions and public bodies to alienate with or without a valuable consideration public parks and playgrounds or other public recreational facilities or public housing projects . . ."

BUT THE voters in each city or county would have to approve the transaction first.

For example, the Legislature could authorize, with approval of the voters, the sale or gift of a public swimming pool or golf course to an individual or club in an effort to get around court decisions prohibiting segregation.

The argument used by sponsors of the amendment is that the Supreme Court cannot regulate privately operated recreational facilities.

The same theory covers housing projects.

A SIMILAR law has been enacted in Mississippi and used in several cities where public parks have been sold to civic clubs and other organizations.

Each transaction under the Alabama amendment would have to be authorized by a separate legislative act and approved by the voters in a called election.

The amendment was passed by the Legislature on the closing day of the 1955 regular session, almost obscured by a Senate filibuster on another bill.

Crowd hangs two dummies in Montgomery

Birm. Ala.

MONTGOMERY, Ala., Aug. 4—(AP)—With Confederate flags flying, a group of white men hanged two dummies in downtown Montgomery Saturday in protest against racial integration.

One black-faced figure dangling on a scaffold bore a sign reading "NAACP." The other, portraying a white man, had a sign which read "I talked integration."

MAYOR W. A. GAYLE ordered police to tear the two scaffolds down after the men who had taken them to Court Square in the heart of the business district drove off.

Accompanying the truck was a station wagon bearing the name "Alabama Labor News." The labor paper, published in Montgomery, has been critical of the integration stand of the AFL-CIO.

ON THE FRONT of the gallows was a sign reading "Built by Union Labor." A Confederate flag flew at the top of each scaffold. As the dummies were strung up, a trumpeter played taps and an onlooker gave a Rebel yell.

Downtown shoppers watched the 10-minute ceremony quietly and moved on.

AN OFFICER in the Central Alabama Citizens Council, which advocates segregation, denied the council had anything to do with the demonstration.

Montgomery Mayor Says He Holds No Grudge

Post. 8-17-56

MONTGOMERY, Ala. — (ANP) — White segregationists who hanged two dummies in effigy on a double gallows in the courthouse square here were told last week by the city's mayor that he held "no grudge" toward persons who did [illegible]

[illegible] hanged by the segregationists represented the [illegible] white integrationists. [illegible] made the statement after a small group of men attempted to settle the racial situation with a mock hanging ceremony last week.

The mayor said: "Lest anyone hold any hard feelings toward me, I apologize for having the gallows torn down. No one will be arrested or prosecuted."

He explained there was an ordinance against the erection of signs in the courthouse square. He ordered police to tear down the double scaffold about an hour after it was put up last Saturday morning.

The gallows held a dummy in blackface labelled "NAACP," and a white dummy tagged "I talked for integration." A black crow stood atop each gallows and a large sign across the bottom read, "Built by union labor."

White Citizens Councils denied participating in the stunt, but Eugene F. Hall, director of the White Citizens Council, boastfully said: "It took us three weeks to prepare the two gallows."

He said the work was done by a new segregationist group who call themselves "The Committee on the Preservation of Segregation." He said the group has a membership of about 600.

Birmingham to be next scene

BY SAMUEL HOSKINS

BIRMINGHAM, Ala. — In all likelihood, Birmingham is next on the anti-segregation, time-table.

The offensive, when it is finally unleashed, will not be against jimcrow bus segregation alone.

It will also be aimed at housing and employment discrimination as well as segregation in schools.

The spearhead of the movement will be the Alabama Christian Movement for Human Rights, according to the Rev. F. W. Shuttleworth, president.

In an exclusive interview with the AFRO on Saturday, the Rev. Mr. Shuttleworth said: "We're determined to hit racial segregation in the head. We do not intend to fool around with its tail."

Afro-American

The clergyman - civic leader quoted the bus company president as saying: "We're willing to grant your requests, but we dare not at this time."

The requests, he said, were for an end of segregated seating, employment of colored drivers and courteous treatment of all riders, irrespective of race or color.

Sat. 8-18-56

THE REV. SHUTTLEWORTH stated the bus official pointed out that the company could not change its seating policy until and unless the state laws requiring segregated seating are abolished.

"We need a court decree before we can act," the minister said Mr. James declared.

"Get that for us and we will take down the bars and also hire colored drivers immediately."

CURRENTLY the ACMFHR s sponsonring regular weekly neetings where the possible anti-segregatiton moves are be- ng discussed in every detail, he Rev. Shuttleworth added..

"Within 30 days, we shall ave made some plan. We'll be eady to move."

He said the organization will upport any student who seeks) enroll in the University of .labama, adding: "We do not elieve colored students should iave to go out of the state in order to get an education."

STUDENTS are being encouraged to apply for admission to the Medical Center in Birminigham, he stated.

The conference with the transit company president, held the morning of Aug. 3, was also attended by the Revs. C. A. George, N. H. Smith, T. L. Lane and H. Stone.

The Revs. Smith and Stone were among the persons who issued the call for organization of ACMFHR.

THE ORGANIZATION was created last June after the State of Alabama outlawed the NAACP.

He defined the overall objective as: "Destruction of racial segregation in Birmingham and throughout Alabama."

The Rev. Shuttleworth is pastor of Bethel Baptist Church.

OTHER CO-FOUNDERS are the Revs. Smith, New Pilgrim Baptist; R. L. Alford, Sardis Baptist; G. E. Pruitt, Wilson Chapel Baptist, and Lane, Union Bethel Independent Methodist.

To date the organization has held nine public mass meetings, with an average attendance of 1,250. The official membership is placed at 3,000.

THE MEETING, held on Monday nights, rotate from church to church.

The meetings are opened with prayer services. Later there are "testimony periods," during which persons tell why they are supporting the movement.

"Testimony" usually relates some unpleasant experience with racial discrimination and/or segregation, it was pointed out.

The climax of the meetings are keynote addresses by ministers or outstanding community leaders.

IN ADDITION to its contact with the bus company, the organization has done the following:

1. On July 2 and July 10 wrote letters to the City Commission requesting its viewpoint on the bus segregation issue and whether or not it is opposed to the bus company's hiring colored drivers.

The letters have not been answered. But on each occasion news releases have appeared in the daily newspapers regarding contents of letters to city officials, it was pointed out.

2. On July 27 wrote letters to the Bruno Stores regarding hiring colored clerks, etc. in stores located in colored neighborhoods.

TO DATE no official answer has been received. The next likely move is to picket and boycott the stores.

On July 27 another letter went to the City Commission regarding the police department's putting on colored officers.

The City Commission has not answered.

Integration Opponents Hang 2 Effigies In Court Square

Ledger 8-5-56 Montgomery, Ala.

A small group of men attempted to stir the racial cauldron with a mock hanging ceremony at Court Square yesterday—but their efforts attracted little attention and police tore down the macabre gallows scene about an hour after it was erected.

A normal Saturday throng of shoppers and passersby expressed more curiosity than approval at the scaffolding from which hung two effigies—one painted black and adorned with the sign, "NAACP," and the other (representing a white man) wearing a sign, "I Talked Integration."

Among the onlookers was a small girl, apparently entertained by a rendering of "Reveille" on a trumpet by one of the demonstrators. "Mommy," she inquired, "is that all?" "I don't know honey," her mother replied. "I don't know what it's all about," she added.

A police officer commented "there was no unusual crowd at Court Square." There were plenty of people there," Lt. G. H. Owens said, "but there always is on Saturdays."

But the demonstrators—a group of about 12 men—apparently were serious about the ceremony. One of the group, when asked if was done as a joke or prank, replied, "Hell no. We did this to show how serious we feel about the segregation issue." He said the demonstrators were "union members and business men."

The men—most of whom were unidentified—took a mock gallows from a truck at 9:40 a.m. yesterday and placed it at the foot of the Court Square fountain while another man played "Reveille" on a trumpet. Two dummies were then taken from a tation wagon bearing the insignia "Alabama Labor News" and while the dummies were hung, one of the group sounded the Rebel yell and the trumpeter played "Taps."

Two of the participants were identified as Jack D. Brock, co-piblisher of the Alabama Labor News, and Eugene S. Hall, a director of the Montgomery White Citizens Council.

Brock said the ceremony had been planned for about a month. He said he received a telephone call from the Committee on the Preservation of Segregation (C.O.P.S) requesting his participation in the mock ceremony. "As we of the Alabama Labor News are among the leaders in the fight to preserve segregation," Brock said, "I offered my services to C.O.P.S."

Brock said C.O.P.S. is an organization of about 600 white persons pledged to preserve segregation in Montgomery.

The last issue of the Alabama Labor News, published by Brock and Homer Welch, carried on its first page an announcement for all Montgomerians to be present at Court Square at 9:30 a.m. on Saturday (yesterday). The publication, however, did not say what would take place at that time.

Hall who like Brock is a printer employed by the Advertiser-Journal, explained that "Reville" symbolized "the awakening of the South to its problem" and "taps" represented "the death blow we're going to deal the Sumpreme Court's integration ruling."

A sign beneath the mock scaffold bore the words, "Built By Union Labor." An informed source who refused to be named said this was in defiance of "Northern labor leaders who preach integration."

The source said the dummies and the materials for the scaffold were paid for by "local uniom members and business people." He said the mock hanging was rehearsed "several times" before it was carried out and added the scaffold was built "in a shed belonging to one of the unions involved."

The informant explained no union participated in the ceremony as such, but that representatives from several unions in Montgomery joined in as individuals. He described these as members of printer, carpenter and painter unions among others.

The source said the demonstration was not authorized by the city. At about 11 a.m., police tore down the scaffolding on the order of Mayor W. A. Gayle.

Hall, a local WCC leader, said the Citizens Council did not sponsor the program. "It would be correct to say members of the Council participated, but the program was sponsored by the Committee on the Preservation of Segregation."

Most of the crowd comments appeared to have been favorable toward the effigies, according to Hall. He said he heard one man say, "This should let everybody know how we feel about integration." He said another man, identified as a politician, said "I don't know if this (the hanging) is quite the right thing to do." Hall said a third man turned to the unidentified politician and retorted, "That's why you were defeated in the last election." Hall said the politician remarked he was in favor of segregation, despite his feelings toward the effigy hanging.

ALABAMA VOTES ON BIAS QUESTION

Wed. 8-24-56

BIRMINGHAM, Ala., Aug. 28 (AP)—Alabama voted today on whether to take drastic legal measures to preserve segregation in its schools, playgrounds and public housing.

Two proposed amendments to the State Constitution, frankly aimed at circumventing the Supreme Court's edicts ending legal segreation of whites and Negroes, drew the major attention in today's special election.

Early voting was light, despite considerable campaign oratory on both sides of the question.

The school amendment would provide "freedom of choice" for parents to send their children to schools serving only their own race.

It also would remove both the Constitutional provision for state-supported public education and the requirement for segregated schools. It would authorize the Legislature to abolish public schools in any of Alabama's sixty-seven counties and to finance private schools, presumably segregated, with public funds.

Protection for Board

School board members also would become judicial officers, protecting them from lawsuits.

The other amendment bearing on racial problems would permit cities and counties to sell, lease or give away public parks, playgrounds, swimming pools, golf courses or public housing projects. This was another effort to preserve segregation.

State Senator Albert Boutwell of Birmingham, one of the authors of the "freedom of choice" measure, said it would have the effect of keeping separate schools for Negroes and whites.

State education leaders split over the school amendment. Dr. Austin R. Meadows, State Superintendent of Education, opposed it as "weakening our stand against segregation" and ending the constitutional requirements for public schools and public school attendance.

The various White Citizens' Councils that sprang up in Alabama after the United States Supreme Court decision in 1954 outlawing segregated schools also were split on the "freedom of choice" amendment.

Some opposed it because it would eliminate the State Constitution's clause requiring separate schools for whites and Negroes. Others took the view that this state provision already had been ruled out by the Federal courts and that a new law was necessary.

Negroes took no public part in the "Freedom of Choice" campaign. The Negro vote in Alabama usually is less than 5 per cent of the total.

Governor's Plan Discussed

Special to The New York Times.

RICHMOND, Va., Aug. 28—A bill to plug a loophole in Gov. Thomas B. Stanley's segregated school program was among those introduced in the Legislature today.

On the second day of the special session to decide how to avoid integration legally, various measures were proposed.

The principal ones included those for the Governor's plan to withhold state funds from integrated school systems. A separate supplementary measure would tighten that program. It would prohibit localities from levying taxes to support integrated schools if they sought that alternative after losing state funds under the Governor's proposal.

A Service To The South

Advertiser P. 4-A

Dabney, The South's First Editor, Winds Up And Heaves Stove And Kitchen At The Pharisees

Fri. 3-23-56

Montgomery, Ala.

Editor Virginius Dabney In The Richmond-Times Dispatch

A SERVICE to the South has been performed by Editor Grover C. Hall Jr., of The Montgomery Advertiser in focusing nationwide attention on the manner in which Negroes have been grossly discriminated against in the North.

With the South under fire from panting sociologists roosting all over Yankeeland, it is good to have some belated emphasis on the fact that it ill behooves New York and Chicago and Detroit to be lecturing us about our "bigotry" and our "racism."

Editor Hall, who wields one of the most colorful of editorial pens, concluded that in view of the fact that reporters from all over the United States, and even from foreign lands, were barging into his office in Montgomery to write about the bus boycott, it might not be amiss for somebody in the North to say a word or two in the public prints about the far from "democratic" goings-on up there.

Since Murray Kempton, of the ultra-liberal New York Post, was one of those who had been chronicling the Montgomery boycott for his New York readers, Hall said to him:

"Murray, you birds are right to swoop down on this Alabama story. It is a big story for any American paper. But damned if it wouldn't be restful to me to go to New York and spend a week having you bird dog some unhappy race relations in the provinces."

HALL quotes Kempton as replying: "That's great. I'd love to work out with you in New York. I've been meaning to do a series on it myself."

Apparently the deal was closed. But James Wechsler, editor of The Post, got into the act at that point, and wrote Hall insisting that Ted Poston, Negro reporter for the New York paper, operate with Hall on the story instead of Kempton. When Hall protested that he knew and was friendly with Kempton, and wanted to explore New York's much covered up and camouflaged segregated areas and racial discriminations with Kempton, Wechsler retorted.

"I am sure you would not expect me to abide by Montgomery's segregation system in handing out assignments on The Post." In other words, he insisted that the Negro operate with Hall on the assignment. The latter has declined, terming Wechsler's proposal "an inadequate arrangement for obtaining this particular story."

Just why Wechsler objected to letting Kempton do the series that Kempton had planned already—and on which he could have collaborated to advantage with Hall—is unclear. It is unfortunate that the project fell through.

Ventilation of what the New York Times has called "the explosive issue of segregation in New York's own schools" certainly is overdue. It wouldn't prove anything as to the rightness or wrongness of what is happening in the South, but it would at least put the issue in perspective, and take the spotlight off the South as the only part of the nation which indulges in segregation.

AND while we're on the subject, there is that utterly appalling condition that has existed in Chicago for two and a half years because Negro families moved into a federal housing project. As Editor Hall points out, 100 policemen are on duty today to guard 24 Negro families at Trumbull Park, to keep them from being mobbed, but the story is played down in the Chicago press, and is not mentioned at all in most other Northern and Western newspapers.

One would suppose that Montgomery, Tuscaloosa and other Southern communities were the only places where race feeling exists, and that widespread segregation in New York City (the existence of which is hypocritically ignored), and years-long threats of mob action against Negroes in Chicago were unimportant phenomena.

The attention of the nation needs to be focused on the existence of festering sores in the North, no less than on those in the South. It is regrettable that the pungent pen of Grover Hall will not probe javelin-like into the far from ideal interracial situation beyond Mason and Dixon's Line. Somehow the facts should be brought out, so that the nation and the world can see that the South is far from being the only sinner in the field of race discrimination.

State Supported Racial Eyesore

ALABAMA

Montgomery, Ala.

EDITOR, THE ADVERTISER — I am not a native Alabamian, but I do come to Montgomery every other day as a trainman for the Western Railway of Alabama. I do not intend to be critical of anything or of anybody in Alabama but as a trainman on the Piedmont Ltd. and the Northbound Crescent Ltd., I am in position to see and hear comments of many eople. A lot of them in very high and influential positions, both in business and government.

During our trying times of racial controversy, whenever any solid citizen of the South sees anything that could be capitalized on by racial agitators, then I think that condition should be brought before some responsible citizen, who has either the power or position to do something about it.

So here is the condition and some of the things I have heard said about it, etc.

The regular meeting point of the Northbound Crescent and the Southbound Crescent is Cusseta, Ala., midway between Opelika and West Point, Ga.

The Northbound goes into the siding at this point for the Southbound. There is a little two-story wooden building, in very bad condition. It actually has a very definite lean, as if it would fall down in a very stiff breeze.

This building, with an awful muddy yard and road just in front of it, is used as a school for Negro grammar school children.

Practically every day we have some Northern peole and all the porters on the train making remarks about the disgrace of forcing children to enter such a building. Also they think that such conditions are typical of school facilities for colored children. Also they are taking many pictures of it.

It seems as if the two teachers are part of a conspiracy to gain sympathy from those travelers by letting the children out to stand in front of the school and the porters and travelers are always throwing off money, newspapers and probably other literature off to these teachers and children.

For the NAACP this school couldn't possibly be more strategically placed or be in a better condition for their propaganda purposes.

It is not my place to criticize the school policy of your good state, but I do believe it would be much better to remove this eyesore and political piece of dynamite if it cannot be corrected rather than let it be used as a typical method of Southern treatment of the Negro.

Also would like to tell you that I am an avid reader and supporter of you and your ideas. Every day I read your editorials and bring them back to Atlanta to let any and all of the people around me read about one solid Southern editor who edits a Southern paper for Southern people.

As you know we, in Atlanta, are not in that very fortunate position.

Boiling Mad

Editor, The Advertiser:

Your proposal to The New York Post as reported in the U.S. News is quite pertinent, and I assume was not received with joy bells by The Post.

Doubless you remember The Times lofty assault on Jim Eastland and his committee Jan. 3. Perhaps I was overly emphatic, but when I realize that the bigots of radio, press, pulpit, television, et cetera, whose vituperations are channeled through New York are the mental and spiritual descendants of the fanatical abolitionists of a century ago who in 1831 actually urged more and bigger Nat Turner massacres, I boil over.

High cost of sessions

News

MANY OF THE senators and representatives are smarting under more and more criticism from the people back in their home counties and districts about the high cost of the seemingly never-ending legislative sessions.

There's one thing the voters back home can grasp and understand exceedingly well — the fact that each week the Legislature meets costs them and other taxpayers close to $50,000.

And the legislators are paid (at the rate of $30 a day each) on a seven-day week basis. So are House an Senate clerical help and other attaches. Combined pay to legislators and to those who work with them to keep legislative machinery grinding totals more than $40,000 a week.

News P. 16-A

There're also travel allowances to the lawmakers. They are paid 10 cents a mile—to and from their homes—at the beginning and end of each session.

Sun. 4-1-56

When the present special session ends next Thursday, the total cost for all five extraordinary meetings, plus the regular session which lasted more than four months last year, will exceed $2 million.

Cost of the regular and three special sessions last year added up to $1,445,000.

B'ham

The two special sessions called by Gov. Folsom this year already have cost in excess of $480,000.

These costs are big reasons why the senators and representatives —at least most of them—want to get away from Goat Hill.

Ala.

Who are 'Nullicrats?'

DESPITE the fact that Gov. Folsom, as candidate for Democratic national committeeman from Alabama, is the central figure in the fast-heating primary races, he insists that his stumping tour is not a campaign foray.

He makes no reference to his candidacy in his "report-to-the-people" speeches and wants to leave the impression that any resemblance between these and political campaigning is purely coincidental.

Without making any direct reference to one of his opponents for national committeeman—Talladega Rep. Charles McKay Jr.—or to the White Citizens Councils, Gov. Folsom has been blasting away at both.

In his speech at Troy, Folsom said:

The governor was shooting at Rep. McKay, Sylacauga lawyer and head of the White Citizens Council there, as well as at many other members of the Legislature who voted for McKay's interposition resolution which had declared the U. S. Supreme Court integration decision "null, void and of no effect."

Incidentally, Houston Sen. Richmond Flowers and other administration leaders, including Sens. Broughton Lamberth, E. L. Roberts and Garet van Antwerp, introduced a resolution to rescind the McKay resolution. But the repealer, which was sent to the Senate rules committee (of which these four senators constitute a majority) still rests there.

Gov. Folsom, who has waged unrelenting war on Dixiecrats since the 1948 Dixiecrat revolt against Truman and Barkley added in this Troy speech:

"Nullification means lawlessness, riots and disorder. Nullification means secession.

"The faces you see today in the 'Nullicrat Party' are the same faces you saw in the Dixiecrat Party in 1948. But we will not let them destroy the Democratic Party in Alabama again."

Folsom or Boutwell slate

QUESTION ASKED frequently in legislative halls and Montgomery hotel corridors during the week was:

"Are you going to vote for the 'Folsom' or 'Boutwell' slate?"

This stemmed from a bristling verbal exchange between Folsom legislative leaders and Jefferson Sen. Albert Boutwell, one of the governor's sharpest critics, on WAPI-WABT'S "Legislative Report" program a week ago.

Boutwell charged Folsom has a "slate of candidates" but has not announced it publicly "because the people would resent the governor publicly attempting to put over a slate."

BOUTWELL SAID that Gov. Folsom "heads the slate" as candidate for Democratic national committeeman, with Rep. McKay and Gadsden Atty. Roy McCord, former legislator, as his opponents.

The Jefferson senator also said that Jasper Judge Roy Mayhall, who has stepped down temporarily as chairman of the State Democratic Executive Committee is Folsom's pick over Supreme Court Justice Davis F. Stakely, seeking renomination to the court.

Boutwell asserted that Supreme Court Justice James J. Mayfield Jr., is being backed by Folsom over State Sen. James S. Coleman Jr. of Greene for another associate place on the high tribunal.

And he added that Judge Roy an Bone, appointed by Folsom to the Court of Appeals, is supported by the governor over Montgomery Atty. Aubrey Cates Jr. and Birmingham Atty. William Conway.

Furthermore, Boutwell said, Folsom is backing John E. Drinkard, Cullman auto dealer and brother of State Conservation Director Bill Drinkard, in his attempt to unseat Jack Owen as Public Service Commission president. Billy Tucker, Birmingham insurance man and former Auburn football player, is the third candidate in this race.

Deny alignments

TWO CANDIDATES Sen. Boutwell said were "slated" with Folsom denied any such alignments. They were Justice Mayfield and Judge Hayhall.

Judge Mayhall, who stepped down temporarily as state Democratic chairman during the campaign (Vice Chairman Charles Pinkston, Montgomery attorney, will handle primary election tabulations and other duties during the interim), said "my candidacy is linked to no one except the people of Alabama."

Mayhall asserted further that because he has been a leader of "loyal Democrats" he has "invoked the enmity of those who would destroy the Democratic Party in Alabama."

And he added "it appears to me that they will do well to declare their own slate, rather than try to place my candidacy on the slate of any other candidate."

Mayfield hits back

THUS, THE "Boutwell slate" as some have chosen to term it, Coleman and Stakely are the only candidates linked to it, since they are the only other candidates in the high court races.

Mayfield said he had withdrawn from politics, but was forced back into the political arena by "my opposition."

He did not call his opponent, Sen. Coleman, by name, but slapped indirectly at Coleman and conservative forces backing the Eutaw lawyer's candidacy.

Mayfield also referred to Coleman's speaking appearances before White Citizens Councils, in pointing out that "under the charter of the White Citizens Councils, judicial and law enforcement officers are prohibited from membership."

Boutwell for governor

FOR SOME TIME, Sen. Boutwell, a legislative veteran and one of the outstanding members of the State Senate, has been talked as a likely candidate for lieutenant governor two years from now. The lieutenant governor presides over the Senate.

But more recently, Boutwell has been proposed for governor. Latest among those advancing the Jefferson senator for the governorship is Ed Blair, editor of the St. Clair News-Aegis at Pell City.

Among other laudatory things Blair has to say in a page one column proposing "Albert Boutwell for governor," was:

"I believe I can say without fear of successful challenge that no man in Alabama has risen in stature as fast and as far as Albert Boutwell, state senator from Jefferson County."

Native of Jefferson

AND HE ADDS: "True, Boutwell lives in Jefferson County. For some years, there has been a saying that no man from Jefferson County could be elected governor.

"I don't believe the people of Alabama care where a man comes from, be it Birmingham, Chisel Switch or Ishkooda. If he shows the ability, integrity and leadership that Albert Boutwell has shown, I think the people of our state would elect him governor."

ALABAMA TO VOTE ON RACE ISSUE

News + Observer

Sun. 8-28-56

Measure Would Prevent Mixing In Schools, Recreation and Housing.

Raleigh N. C.

MONTGOMERY, Ala., Aug. 27 (AP) — Segregation-conscious Alabama voters will decide tomorrow on two measures designed to prevent race mixing in the schools and public recreational and housing facilities.

One proposed constitutional amendment would give parents a "freedom of choice" in sending their children to segregated schools and empower the Legislature to abolish any grade or high school threatened with integration.

The other would permit cities and counties to sell or give away public parks, playgrounds, swimming pools, golf courses, or public housing projects if necessary to keep Negroes and whites from using them together.

A third amendment, also up for ratification or defeat tomorrow, would raise the corporation income tax ceiling in Alabama from 3 to 5 per cent to provide more revenue for the schools. Three other suggested changes in the state's organic law affect only local communities.

News P. 22-A

People can have conflicting conceptions as to how difficult problems in the field of racial relations should be met and still keep themselves free from bitterness and hatred. P. 22-A

They also can have very different ideas as to religion and still be bound together in a devotion to great basic principles and by a common spirit of good will and tolerance. News

On the other hand, it should be very clear to responsible citizens, particularly in the light of recent developments in Alabama and other states in connection with racial relations, that racial and religious animosities could involve frightful stresses and dangers. Sun. 3-11-56

Recent serious difficulties in our own state have suggested terrible possibilities. Numbers of our people are striving to prevent the growth of bitter feelings and fears and to strengthen the friendly racial relations and the religious tolerance that have so long and so widely existed in Alabama. B'ham, Ala.

Certainly no great imagination is required to conceive of deep tragedies, undermining the solidarity and strength and the spirit of good will and tolerance in this country if either party, in the coming presidential campaign, should in its own interest exploit racial and religious feelings and differences of viewpoints.

We believe the good sense and the generous, human feelings of the great majority of Americans will predominate even amidst the conflicting efforts, the strains and competitions of coming months.

But relatively few people can stir up a lot of talk and trouble in racial and religious relations in a time of high tensions.

The great majority should be vigilant to uphold the kind of spirit that is fundamental to true democracy, to racial good will, and to religion in accordance with the principles of human brotherhood and tolerance.

In a recently distributed news letter, Dr. Everett R. Clinchy, president of the National Conference of Christian and Jews, urged political leaders to "reject all racial and religious bigotry" in the 1956 presidential campaign.

"Such appeals are contrary to American principles, to the American spirit of fair play and good sportsmanship, to God's moral imperative for brotherhood," Dr. Clinchy said.

He warned that "hatred and bigotry weakens our national unity at a time when we are engaged in a critical struggle with atheistic materialism throughout the world."

He called for traditionally full and free discussion, for the facts and for what each candidate thinks about issues. But our people, he said, don't want such information obscured by racial and religious bias.

"We know," he continued, "that most Americans are loyal citizens, seeking the best interests of the nation. They vote that way, too. We also know that this nation of ours is made up of many religious and ethnic groups—each of them as patriotic as the other, each as concerned with the welfare of all the people."

This appeal is a summons to a serious responsibility facing every American.

ALABAMA BARS INTEGRATION; TENSION GROWS

Daily Tribune Chicago, Ill. Fri 7-13-56

Races Drifting Apart Under Pressure

[This is the fifth article in a series by the chief of The Tribune's Washington bureau on the political situation in the south.]

BY WALTER TROHAN
[Chicago Tribune Press Service]

Montgomery, Ala., July 12—If Alabama has any lesson to offer the nation, it is that integration of the white and Negro races is a long way off in the deep south.

A series of incidents has erected additional barriers between the races, and because no attempts are being made at understanding on either side, trouble could come. Neither side is looking for trouble, but agitators are inviting trouble.

Negroes are enlisting in the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People. A petition has been filed in the state Circuit court by whites seeking to force the N. A. A. C. P. to supply detailed information on its operations in the state.

Whites are joining Citizens Councils. These were launched feebly in the fall of 1954, but have spurted in recent months to more than 75,000 members. The N. A. A. C. P. claims about 12,000 members.

Councils Given Impetus

What gave the councils impetus and even respectability, altho some preach hate, was the Montgomery bus boycott by Negroes; the attempt of a Negro woman to attend the University of Alabama, and the attack on a Negro singer in the Birmingham city auditorium.

A state-wide association of councils has been formed with State Sen. Sam Englehardt, author of a state bill to balk desegregation, as executive secretary. But a rival group, the North Alabama White Citizens council, is blasting Englehardt as an integrationist. Ace Carter, editor of The Southerner, a white supremacy publication, heads the group.

King [left], Miss Lucy, and Cole

Fourteen followers of Carter invaded Montgomery over the week-end in an attempt to recruit members. They circulated mimeographed flyers declaring "The white man must again rule Montgomery."

Vow Boycott Victory

Carter's followers promised to end the bus boycott on white terms. They hit Englehardt's segregation bill as striking segregation from the state's constitution, because it would empower state school boards to assign pupils on the basis of 15 factors.

The bill, which was passed last August, would permit assignment of pupils to separate schools on such factors as "threat of friction" and "psychological effect."

Englehardt was astounded at being labeled an integrationist — sure political death in Alabama. He denounced Carter as "a rabble rouser" and said his stand against segregation is known to all.

The conflict between the citizens' groups inspired the Montgomery Advertiser to poll the state's congressional delegation to learn whether they would address meetings of the Citizens Councils, which staged the largest political rally in the state's history last February when 15,000 whites attended a gathering.

All Say They Would

All 11 members of the delegation said they would address such groups. Two congressmen, Frank Boykin and George Grant, said they are members of W. C. C. groups.

Those who signified they would address citizens groups included Sen. John Sparkman who was Adlai Stevenson's running mate in 1952, and Sen. Lister Hill, who is widely regarded as a southern liberal. In answer to a direct question whether they would speak before such groups, both said they stood ready to appear before any groups of their constituents.

Hill was recently renominated —tantamount to election here—for a six year term without opposition, but he knows how sentiment is running in his state. Both Hill and Sparkman will unquestionably be called upon to lend their names to council rallies and Alabamans are confident they will accept the call.

Side with Talmadge

Such action would find these recognized liberals keeping step with former Gov. Herman Talmadge of Georgia, now a candidate for the senate. Talmadge has been widely assailed for exploiting prejudice against the Negro in a disagreeable and violent fashion. Now he has strange company.

Perhaps no single event demonstrated the solidarity of the south more than the shoulder to shoulder stand of men who pride themselves on being liberals and men who are denounced as rabble rousers.

It may be that the annihilation Gov. James [Kissin' Jim] Folsom suffered recently at the polls is worrying politicians. Folsom has been supported by Negroes, labor, and farmers. He tried to woo the 40,000 Negro votes and keep the whites happy. He named a state commission of Negroes and whites "to bring about peace between the races."

Advocates Negro Vote

More importantly, he said he was for Negroes "having their rights." He said the only way he could see for Negroes to get their rights was "to give them the vote."

With White Citizens Councils of the Carter stripe campaigning against extending the vote to more Negroes and raising specters of intermarriage, Folsom took the worst licking of his career.

Whites are determined there shall be no mixing of races in the schools. Even Negro leaders foresee no general mixing.

"It will not be for a long time — not five years or 10 years," says the Rev. Dr. Martin Luther King, Negro Baptist leader of the Montgomery bus boycott, one of the direct causes of race tension. He is now advising Negroes to boycott all non-integrated schools in Alabama, which has infuriated whites.

How Boycott Started

The boycott started because a bus driver ordered a Negro seamstress to take a seat in the rear of a vehicle—the place traditionally reserved under segregation for the Negroes. When she refused, she was arrested.

Last February, tension erupted at the University of Alabama when Autherine Lucy, a 26 year old college graduate, became the first Negro student in the institution's 125 years. She was ordered enrolled after a court action. She was transported between classes in an automobile by university authorities. Everywhere she went she was greeted by shouts "keep 'Bama white." Stones were flung at the car.

The university's trustees suspended the Negro girl in the interests of avoiding more serious trouble. Her Negro attorneys countered with a court suit seeking reinstatement. Then the trustees expelled her for "outrageous charges" made against them in her suit. The girl left the university and has since married.

King Cole Attacked

In Birmingham, whites climbed up on a stage to beat Nat [King] Cole, Negro entertainer, who had come to sing in his home town. It must be recognized that many whites deplored the action, but did so at the risk of being accused of coddling the Negroes in their drive for integration.

Alabama has 2,079,591, or 68 per cent, whites to 979,617, or 32 per cent, Negroes. There had been some attempt at integration but it died as a result of the incidents.

100-Signature Letters Oppose Desegregation

Birm News 7-15-56

I would like to call to the attention of your readers the "100-signature letters" sent by the residents of the Marion Junction community to each of its congressional representatives. If this idea will "catch on" and other communities, civic organizations, and ladies' clubs will sponsor similar letters, we will soon discover many dedicated "segregationists" on Capitol Hill.

The letter of transmittal accompanying each "100-signature letter" is as follows:

"Enclosed is a letter signed by one hundred (100) of your constituents in the Marion Junction area urging you to vigorously oppose any and all appropriations to any federal agency using its funds to break down our customs of segregation in the South.

"The South, by the actions of many of its representatives in the Congress, has led the nation to believe it is willing to accept integration. Nothing can be farther from the truth.

"We implore you to fight with all the vigor at your command this unconstitutional encroachment upon states' rights.

"We have no intentions of letting the combination of radicals and impractical, misinformed 'do-gooders' bring political, economic, and social chaos to our section. We will defend without reservation the excellent racial understanding cooperation that has long existed here.

"In this fight be assured of our united and undivided support."

Judge Blasts Northern Agitators For 'Equality'

Post-Herald p. 6
Birmingham Ala.

THOMASVILLE, Feb. 28 (AP)—A South Alabama circuit judge charged tonight that "rabble-rousing Northern politicians" who fought economic advancement of Southern whites and Negroes are the ones now "loudly proclaiming social equality."

Wed. 2-21-56

Circuit Judge George Wallace of Clayton said in a prepared speech that politicians in the East and Midwest "ought to know a lot about discrimination because they come from sections wher e dwell the biggest discriminators that ever discriminated."

Speaking at a civic club meeting, Wallace pointed to the freight rate equality fight waged

by Southern states as an example of "Northern discrimination placed upon the backs of all Southerners, black and white."

"This fight which resulted in victory for the South was led by Southern politicians and leaders," Wallace said, "and has resulted in many new industries with thousands of jobs for our people, especially Negroes.

"If the politicians of the North had been so interested in the plight of the minority people in the South they would have joined Southern leaders in having these unjust freight rate restrictions removed."

Judge Wallace, whose circuit is comprised of Barbour, Bullock and Dale Counties, recently told a grand jury he would arrest any federal officer trying to investigate judicial procedures in his circuit.

On his recommendation, two grand juries have urged local officers to continue enforcing segregation laws.

Friends In The North

Editor, The Advertiser:

Advertiser p. 4-A

I have read the U. S. News & World Report article in which you were interviewed. I am a yankee who is ashamed of the hypocrisy of the North. The tragedy is too few people realize the problems of the other sections of the country. In this (Detroit) area the Negro problem is something that has been with us about, say, 15 years only. The combination N.A.A.C.P.-C.I.O. is ruthless and intolerant of all opposite views of the race problem. This group is working together to elect Southern congressmen of the "liberal" stripe, so that all barriers to a socialized state will be removed.

Thurs. 3-8-56

Here we have a different form of segregation. Older neighborhoods taken over by Negroes soon run down. The remaining whites find their properties run over, new neighbors running all into parties, vice palaces set up. Soon white women are accosted on the streets. Crime rises. In short, the Negro is not ready to mingle freely with the white. People in Detroit wonder about the bus boycott in your city—why you folks drive the Negroes to work.

Montgomery Ala.

These are some things you can do. First, the C.I.O. is spending a penny a month per member to promote civil rights. Why not have each C.I.O. member have his union stop sending a cent to the international union till it stopped (1) all agitation for civil rights; (2) spending one cent for civil rights.

In the key states of Michigan, Ohio and Illinois, there are as many Southern born whites as Negroes. Your people, through the intimacy of a letter, must write to your friends and relatives up here and request them to vote against all civil rights advocates and Negroes.

I say this not out of hatred for the Negro, but to prevent the South from being subjected to another carpetbagger occupation through the manipulation of the N.A.A.C.P. We whites are disorganized, the opposition is not. You have many friends up here.

For reasons of personal safety, I prefer to remain anonymous.

Taking A Stand

The Sylacauga News

In spite of the fact that segregation is more widely practiced in other sections of the nation, it is now all too apparent that the South is to be the whipping-boy, and that this serious controversy will be settled—if it is settled—south of the Mason-Dixon line. If that's the way the die is cast, we'll take our stand in Dixie.

It is not our idea to wave the Confederate flag, nor to fight again this Civil War, nor smother our tears in crinoline and old lace. We intend to create our own destiny with both the tools God gave us and those made by man, but let us face the issue as it really is.

If it is the intentions of the North to rededicate the Mason-Dixon line, then we'll take our stand in Dixie.

Negroes Want Equal Educational Advantages

In your paper of Feb. 20 a writer said: "The Negro shouldn't ever disregard the fact that God gave him his color, and he should be proud enough to keep it that way." Agreed, but isn't it a little late for this race to boast of a definite color? Look around, see the blonds, brunettes, redheads, some with blue veins and eyes, under the heading of Negro. Did God do that? Who's responsible?

News

It is a most damnable untruth to teach innocent youth that Negroes are seeking the mixing of the races. Sex is not the objective we seek. Ninety-nine and nine-tenths of Negroes are seeking the things we have bought and paid for in hard-earned money and taxes.

How long must we be herded into unsanitary places, stacked into small spaces on public conveyances, which are spacious, because we are Negroes? We've labored here untiringly. Why do all other races have the welcome mat thrown out for them no matter how dark their skins?

We do want equal educational advantages, we want signs taken down from at least an equal part of recreational places which are paid for in taxes.

We don't want charity from foreign countries, or sympathy. We have lived, slaved and made very good, side by side, in America or the land of the Indians. I am 100 per cent against desegregation in Southern schools, also any form of mixing any two races legally or otherwise.

Love And Tolerance Will Solve Problems

All my life I have considered Alabama the fairest state of all the South, but since the recent controversy at Tuscaloosa I feel that we have joined hands with the most unfair state of Mississippi.

How can we as American citizens and Christians take part in such a disgraceful act? I cannot help placing part of the blame for such acts on the parents who have taught only prejudice and hate instead of tolerance and love. On the other side of our thoughts we wonder what happened to the intelligence of the students. At their age is there no respect for the laws of Alabama or even the Supreme Court?

Thurs. 2-23-56

I can only say that to condemn a young woman for wanting to advance her education in her home state is the most unfair act of justice I ever heard just because of the pigment of her skin. To condemn her is to condemn her Maker, the Maker of all races and creeds. Until we learn to live with brotherly love instead of racial hate, there can be no peace on this earth. Love and tolerance is no hard job. It can be the answer to the world's problems. Is that so much to ask? With the help of God we can accomplish anything.

MRS. B. J. THOMPSON,

Negroes Want To Look At Flag Of Liberty Too

I have been reading so much about racial segregation, but if you all would just stop and think that God made us and the color of our skin. We didn't have anything to do with it.

When we all pray we say, "Our Father, which art in Heaven," why do you think a Father will do more for one of His children than He would do for another?

Our Negro men go to war. Does anybody ever say they should not go? What are they fighting for?

News

When we work, we don't get the pay it's worth. Our men have to pay tax. The poor colored people on welfare don't get enough money to have a decent living. The time has come for us to look at the flag of liberty too.

We go to the store to buy food. They don't say, "You are a Negro, your food is cheaper." Downtown if we want anything we have to pay the same price.

God is a just God. So let's all think about the golden rule. Think about this: If everybody in this world is just like me, what kind of world would this world be?

Better School Facilities Are Urged For Negroes

It is astounding to see how we, the people, in our confusion, will let out-of-state agitators, NAACP and Communist-inspired trouble-makers come into our state and interfere with our states' rights race question and other internal states' rights affairs.

Such interlopers should be arrested, brought to court and be made to show what business they have stirring up strife among our people. Our state laws prohibit them to do so. Let's enforce the state laws and keep the trouble-makers out. No such confusion among our races has occurred since the Civil War. We haven't seen any trouble yet to what we will see if this isn't stopped.

The white and colored people are living happily right now under our form of government—the colored people are satisfied.

and don't want any trouble and don't want to create any.

The colored people do not want to mix with the white people; God did not mean for them to do so. They want their own race and color to themselves. They want to go to their own schools, colleges and universities. Our state government should finance a plan now to build, as soon as practicable to do so, better schools, colleges and additions to Miles College and if possible to have a university—at least one institution of higher learning in order that the colored population may have equal rights and advantages.

READOPTION OF STATE RIGHTS PRINCIPLES

Wallace To Hit Intergration As Demo Platform Drafter

Montgomery, Ala.

By REX THOMAS
AP Staff Writer

The South, says George Wallace, must "let the world know" that racial segregation is "The only sane, sensible and non-hypocritical way in which our people can live in harmony together."

As a member of the powerful platform committee at the Democratic National Convention, the circuit judge from Clayton, Ala., says he will make every endeavor to get that idea across at Chicago.

"We have no apologies to make," Wallace declared today. "The great majority of the men and women of the South of both races are men and women of goodwill. They can solve and work out any problem between them withuot the aid of Midwestern and Eastern politicians."

As a member of the platform committee, the South Alabama judge has been instructed by the state's convention delegation to seek readoption of the State Rights principles carried in the party platform in 1928. It says:

"We demand that the constitutional rights and powers of the states be preserved in their full vigor and virtue. We demand a revival of the spirit of local government without which free institutions cannot be preserved."

Wallace, in an interview, termed the 1928 position a "positive approach to the matter of federal encroachment on states rights," and added:

"Those of us on the platform committee from the South must take the lead for the nation to fight any further efforts to weaken local government."

As a judge, Wallace recently threatened to jail any federal officer who might undertake an investigation of the courts in his circuit.

WALLACE

At Chicago, he said he will "oppose any of the so-called civil rights proposals;" any attempt to endorse the Supreme Court lecision outlawing school segregation; or any effort to tack a desegregation rider on new federal aid legislation, such as help for the schools.

Wallace said he plans to confer with Alabama's other member of the platform-writing committee, Mrs. Martha Roberts McBurney of Florence, and other members of the delegation about the segregation and related problems.

As for himself, the judge said he also will recommend:

1. A farm program "designed to stop the downward trend of farm income" and assure Alabama farmers "a fair price for cotton, peanuts and other agricultural products."

2. Any proposals "that I sincerely believe to be fair to industry and labor."

3. Expansion of the Tennessee Valley Authority and the REA, especially in rural telephone development, "to counteract the efforts of the present administration to weaken these agencies that have meant so much to the people of Alabama and the nation."

4. An expanded social security program.

5. Continued benefits to war veterans, especially those disabled.

6. A "Strong" anti-communist stand both at home and abroad.

But Wallace said he will devote his efforts primarily to segregation because, he declared, "The continued trend of the federal government and the Supreme Court to encroach upon the rights of the states is of paramount concern to the people of Alabama."

"The federal government's insistence that it knows better how to work out the problems confronting the people of Alabama and the South is a direct insult to our people," he added.

"Segregation is the way in which our people have lived side by side for generations in peace and harmony. It is deplorable that the federal government through its efforts to bring about integration of the races has caused the deterioration of the fine relations that have heretofore existed among our people."

And he said he will do his utmost at Chicago to prove that "the propaganda that has been purposely disseminated to the effect that those who believe in segregation are anti-Negro is a downright lie."

Alabama Unit Upholds Bus Separation

MONTGOMERY, Ala., April 19.—(UP)—The Public Service Commission Wednesday filed answers in Federal District Court to a suit brought by five Negro women charging that state and city segregation laws were unconstitutional.

Memphis, Tenn.

The three-member commission was named in the suit along with the City Commission, Police Chief G. J. Ruppenthal and the Montgomery City Bus Lines.

The PSC, through the attorney general's office, said in its answers to the suit that:

1. Separate but equal facilities are provided for the white and Negro races on all buses operated wholly in the City of Montgomery.

2. Separation of the races promotes the general welfare of both races and tends to protect each from violence and possible bloodshed.

3. There are no sociological and psychological factors present in this case which would tend to require integration on buses.

4. The general welfare of both races and any sociological and psychological factors present require and demand the separation of the races on buses.

The suit was filed Feb. 1 on behalf of five Negro women by Negro Attorney Fred Gray, who was later indicted for representing one of the women without her consent.

LIVINGSTON, Ala., June 21 (AP) —Probate Judge Wilbur Deaman ruled that a Negro woman and eight children were legal residents of Ohio and were deprived of their civil rights by being "forcibly sent to Alabama."

P. 1

Dearman instructed Circuit Solicitor Tom Boggs to ask both Alabama Atty. Gen. John Patterson and U.S. Atty. Gen. Herbert Brownell to investigate the alleged mistreatment of Martha Winston and her family.

Seven children and a grandchild who were exiled from Cleveland, Ohio, with her by court order, now are living with Mary Bowden, her oldest married daughter, at Coatopa, Ala.

Juvenile Court Judge Albert A. Woldman ruled at Cleveland June 7 that the children were not eligible for relief in Ohio because they had been in the state only four months. Ohio law requires residence of a year before a needy person may receive welfare help.

She testified at Cleveland that she went to the Ohio city because she couldn't support the children down South. She said she took the children there last October because "I didn't want them to grow up in the South."

To get the plight of the family before Cleveland court, the Negro woman was charged with neglect of six children under 16 by keeping them out of school.

The woman and her husband, James Winston of Coatopa, have been separated for five or six years. Dearman held that she was deserted by her husband.

Dearman ruled that his court had no jurisdiction in the case which was brought before him to decide who should have custody of the children. The father had offered to care for them.

The probate judge said the evidence showed that the Winston woman "was a citizen of Ohio because she had all the requirements of citizenship including the right to vote."

"Under Ohio law as well as Alabama law," he asserted, "when a father deserts a mother and the mother has taken care of the children, citizenship of the children follows that of the mother."

Dearman said the facts showed that the woman "went to the welfare department (at Cleveland) asking for help and the welfare department or some one in the department carried them before a juvenile judge and had a criminal charge filed againstt her."

Ask Probe Of Family Exiled From Ohio

World P. 1 Sat. 6-30-56

Birm., Ala.

LIVINGSTON, Ala. — (ANP) — Declaring that a Negro woman and her seven children and a grandchild were legal residents of Ohio when they were "forcibly sent to Alabama" several weeks ago, a probate judge here has ordered a probe into possible violation of the family's civil rights.

P. 1

Probate Judge Wilburn Deaman instructed Circuit Solicitor Tom

Boggs to ask both Alabama Atty. Gen. John Patterson and U. S. Atty. Gen. Herbert Brownell to investigate the alleged mistreatment of Mrs. Martha Winston and her family.

World P.8

Judge Dearman ruled that he had no jurisdiction over the eight children who were exiled" to Alabama along with Mrs. Winston under a threat of a jail sentence for her.

"I believe Martha Winston's only crime was asking her own state for bread for her children," the judge said.

"Yet for asking for bread, what did she receive? A jail sentence.

"I think the state of Ohio violated her civil rights when the welfare and policemen's forced her to leave Cleveland."

The family's plight gained nationwide publicity when Juvenile Court Judge Albert A. Woldman ruled at Cleveland June 7 that the children were not eligible for relief in Ohio because they had been in the state only four months. Ohio law requires residence of a year before a needy person may receive welfare aid.

Mrs. Winston testified at the time that she moved to Ohio because she couldnt support her family down south.

Jim Folsom Too 'Moderate' For Alabama Voters

Call P. 28
Fri. 5-11-56

BIRMINGHAM, Ala. — (INS) — Alabama Governor James Folsom's moderate approach to the segregation issue has been sharply rejected by Alabama voters.

Ardent pro-segregationist state Rep. Charles W. McKay Jr., defeated Folsom by a 3 to 1 vote margin or the post of Alabama national committeeman.

Kansas City

McKay of Sylacauga, is a leader of the White Citizens' Council movement in Alabama. He authored Alabama's resolution of interposition, which declared the U. S. Supreme court's school segregation decision "null and void" in the state.

Folsom, accused by his opponents of "doing nothing" toward maintaining Alabama's traditional system of racial segregation, termed the interposition resolution "hogwash." He said it would be as effective 'as a hounddog baying at the moon."

Folsom candidates for lesser state offices apparently went down to defeat with him.

Sen. Lister Hill apparently was nominated for another term, defeating retired Rear Admiral John V. Crommelin, by a two-to-one margin. Incumbent Congressmen Frank Boykin of the first district, and George Grant of the second, appeared certain of renomination, and other members of the state's congressional delegation were unopposed.

PLEADS WITH CONGRESS ... Rep. George Huddleston

Huddleston bill would ignore court rulings

BY JIM FREE
News Washington Bureau

WASHINGTON, D. C., June 5—Rep. George Huddleston Jr. today called on Congress to stop the Supreme Court's "gross invasion" of the law making powers of the Congress.

The Birmingham congressman proposed a bill that would allow federal and state courts to ignore any Supreme Court decision that "conflicts with the legal principle of adhering to prior decisions which are based upon considerations other than legal."

Huddleston told the House that he feels the Supreme Court has taken over legislative powers in its school integration decision and in its recent decision knocking down a Pennsylvania state sedition law.

WARNING that such "abuses" can mean the death knell of our constitutional system of government, the Alabamian said his bill would reaffirm the separation of powers in the Constitution for the Executive, Legislative and Judicial branches. It would have Congress declare that "established law of the United States shall be revised or changed only by legislative enactments or by constitutional amendments."

He charged that in the 1954 school segregation case, the Supreme Court tried to add a new constitutional amendment—one not proposed by Congress and one not enacted in the manner set out in the Constitution.

At the time of that decision, he continued, the law was well established that the doctrine of separate but equal school facilities comply with the 14th Amendment. In its ruling, he said, the court, in effect, adopted an additional amendment. He said the decision was contrary to established law of more than 100 years.

IN ITS recent decision in the Steve Nelson case, Huddleston said the court applied the "preemption" doctrine. It invalidated a Pennsylvania sedition statute, saying that the federal sedition law took precedent. Huddleston said this ruling obviously was contrary to the intent of the Congress which passed the federal law.

"It is time that we members of the Congress take steps to counter this great threat to our constitutional system of government. We must serve notice to the Supreme Court that it must limit itself to the exercise of judicial powers only."

He voiced the hope that Congress can halt the practice of the court to base its decisions on "socio-psychological and other non-legal principles."

Courageous Commissioners

Advertiser

Editor, The Advertiser:

I deeply appreciate the fine manner in which Mayor Gayle and his associate city commissioners are handling the Montgomery bus segregation matter. I am proud to know that there are at least some city officials in Alabama who have courage enough to stand up for our Southern customs and way of life.

If elected as a delegate to the Democratic convention from the state at large I will lend my best efforts toward nominating a presidential and vice-presidential candidate who will stand for the right things of life just as your fine city officials have done here of late.

Memories Of The Enlightened North

Editor, The Advertiser:

I read an account of your New York speech in the Pensacola Journal.

I am a Northerner, a native of New York, and after having grown up and gone to school there and in other states where they have desegregation, I want to go on record as being 100% for segregation.

I agree with you about the treatment of the Negro in the North. Any Negro is better off in the South.

When I was in grammar school in New Jersey a Negro boy won a scholarship which no one had exected to be given a Negro. Did he get it? No, sir. He didn't. The reason: The school did not admit his race.

I have never seen a Negro wedding announcement in a paper and I have never had a Negro school teacher.

The NAACP never tells these people that.

As a Southerner, living in this part of the country, both my husband and I have been interested and disturbed in reading the bad publicity given the South in the past several months.

Having spent the last two weeks in your city, I read with great inteset your series of articles on "Publish It Not In Askelon." You are to be commended for the fine spirit in which these controversial articles were presented. Accept the appreciation of a Southerner in the "Gateway to the South."

If these are printed in brochure or booklet I would appreciate receiving a copy. For this fine work you need to be nominated for the Pulitzer Prize. Folsom Allows History Is Full of Race Trouble

By JAMES Y. NEWTON
Star Staff Correspondent

MONTGOMERY, Ala., Mar. 10.—Gov. James E. Folsom stretched his long legs, leaned his 6 foot, 8 inch frame way back in a chair in his handsome Capitol building office, and allowed he had been reading considerable history lately.

"Big Jim," as he is called by everyone including himself, is not the student type. His interest in events of yester-year was kindled by today's racial crisis facing Alabama and himself, as the State's chief executive.

As a result of his historical research, Big Jim had concluded that racial troubles have been going on for a long time.

Back before the war between the States, the Governor said, there had been four notable crises, one attending the Dred Scott decision, another the Missouri compromise. The other two he couldn't recall off-hand, and he couldn't find a written memo that was somewhere in the papers on his desk.

GOV. FOLSOM
Does Some Research

Up Every 10 Years

"These things," said Mr. Folsom of racial crises of more recent times, "come up about every 10 years. In the 1920s there was the Ku Klux Klan, the Negroes and the Catholics. They were very successful, but along came the 1930s and we kicked them (KKK) out.

"Along about 1940," he continued, "there was the FEPC and the Negroes. That didn't get very far. In the late 1940s it was civil rights and the Negroes. Now it is integration and the Negroes and in 1960 it will be something else and the Negroes."

Big Jim gave the impression that, on the surface at least, he regards Alabama's and the South's troubles as something that history shows to be inevitable and will pass by without serious difficulty.

"No," he didn't think there would be another civil war, "this thing is not very serious."

Firmly Against Integration

What is the governor's personal view of integration in the public schools?

"It just won't work in Alabama. I personally am opposed to it at this time."

"There will be no integration in Alabama during my administration," Big Jim said with a "this is it" finality characteristic of many of his statements.

He pointed out he had three years to go in this, his second term. In campaigning for election he had promised there would be no integration and he intended to keep his promise.

The Governor philosophized that the situation in Alabama was little different from that in other parts of the world.

"There have been no riots in Alabama like those in Michigan, Chicago and New York," he said.

As a youth, Big Jim said he had worked his way "all over the world, and wherever I found two races I didn't see them associating together."

"No law can be enforced," he said of the Federal court decisions calling for an end of segregation of various types, "without the force of public opinion behind it."

In Alabama, he reckoned, the sentiment was about 70 to 30, percentage-wise among the people, against integration, "and not all the 30 per cent Negroes approve of it, by any means."

"I could issue a proclamation, but I'm not," Mr. Folsom continued. "If I issued a proclamation decreeing integration it wouldn't work and it would just mean trouble."

Big Jim has been roundly assailed by all sides of the racial issue. Some of the white citizens councils, angry because he entertained Representative Adam Powell, New York Negro Democrat, at the executive mansion, and because he proposed establishment of a State biracial commission to ease tension, have called for his impeachment.

Criticized in Lucy Case

Negro groups have been critical of the governor for not affording Autherine J. Lucy, Negro coed, what they called sufficient protection from mobs when she attempted to attend classes at the University of Alabama last month.

"When I was his age I wanted to kick everybody out," he commented.

The Governor was asked his opinion of the White Citizens' Councils which have been popping up all over Alabama in recent weeks like mushrooms.

He pointed out that race relations was a touchy question, one in which it was easy to stir up emotions on both sides.

"Races," he added, "just aren't overly fond of each other and that's true around the world.

"But I'm for the white man organizing, the black man organizing, the red man organizing, the yellow man organizing, and if there are any other colors I'm for them organizing, too," he answered with a grin.

Gov. Folsom indicated he didn't care much what his opponents think of him, although observers said his position on the race matter had edged over to the White Councils' side recently.

"I am never going to run for public office again when I get through this term," he declared, a prediction few down here believe.

"Now 47 Years Old"

"I am now 47 years old," he continued. "When I get through this term I'll be 50. It will be time for the younger folks to take over."

Big Jim has asked the State legislature to set up a bi-racial commission with a large representation of newspaper editors, to "round off the rough edges" of racial friction. But the legislators, busy sponsoring bills tightening segregation laws, have not taken kindly to the idea.

The Governor said he could create the commission by proclamation, but that a racial commission wouldn't do any good unless it had public support . . . "unless it's a two-way street it wouldn't be worth 15 cents."

The Negro, Mr. Folsom thought, had made a lot of progress in Alabama over the years in approaching a status of equality with the white man.

"A lot of changes have been made since 1856," he said, returning to his new venture into history. "At that time anybody who even proposed teaching Negroes could be fined and jailed. Now we provide them good teachers. There has been tremendous progress."

And Stay Out of Court

Mr. Folsom said his State had never been a party to Federal court suits, though these had been brought by other Southern States in an effort to preserve segregation.

"I have seen to that," he said, indicating legal action only causes trouble. "I want harmonious race relations in Alabama."

On the other hand, there has never been a suit by the Negroes against the State while he was in office—the Autherine Lucy case was brought during the four years he was out of office, he added.

If the supporters of interposition to nullify the Supreme Court school desegregation decision (the Alabama legislature has approved interposition) are sincere, they should be willing to have a popular vote on it, Big Jim said.

"Let them put on the ballot the question of whether Alabama should secede from the union," was the way he put it, "and let the people vote on it. Put up or shut up."

Would Favor Truman

"I would think," he said, "you folks could find enough race troubles to write about in South Africa, Kenya and elsewhere in the British Empire without having to come poking around down here."

Politically, Big Jim prides himself on always having been a "loyal Democrat," opposing any Dixiecrat movement, for example. He says President Eisenhower has slipped in popularity down here. Former President Truman is still his choice for the Democratic nomination this time, but he guesses there's no chance of him running.

"Truman could beat the living hell out of him [Mr. Eisenhower]," opined Big Jim who once had his differences with the former President.

As for the main Democratic presidential hopefuls, he professes no choice at the moment. He has just announced his candidacy for Democratic National Committeeman from Alabama.

"If I win," he said, "the Alabama delegation will go to the convention with no slate, no hate, uninstructed and undecided," he said.

SEGREGATION ISSUES PONDERED BY COURT

Arguments Of Negroes End In Montgomery Case

MONTGOMERY, Ala., May 12. — (AP) — A three-judge United States District Court panel Saturday pondered legal issues involved in a segregation protest which has kept Negroes off Montgomery City Lines buses nearly six months.

They heard arguments Friday in a suit by four Negro women who seek to have city and state segregation laws thrown out as unconstitutional.

Two of the judges remarked from the bench that they did not construe a recent United States Supreme Court decision in a South Carolina appeal as having decided the question.

There was no indication when the court will announce its decision.

This ruling, which possibly will be appealed to the United States Supreme Court, could lead to the first clear-cut court decree on the separate but equal doctrine as applied on city transit systems.

The United States Supreme Court April 23 refused to consider an appeal involving city buses in Columbia, S. C., after the Circuit Court of Appeals held bus segregation unconstitutional.

Lawyers are divided on whether the nation's highest court, by refusing to hear the appeal, ruled segregation on intrastate buses unlawful or whether it was a technical ruling requiring further action in lower courts before it is considered on the merits.

Folsom signs bill for segregation of park facilities

MONTGOMERY, Ala., April 18 —(AP)—A bill aimed at preserving segregation in Alabama parks and playgrounds even if it means giving the public facilities to private groups has been signed by Gov. James E. Folsom.

THE ACT will automatically go into effect if a proposed amendment to the state constitution is ratified by the voters in the special election Aug. 28.

The bill provides that cities, counties, towns and other subdivisions of the state could sell or give away parks, playgrounds, other recreational facilities and public housing projects.

They would thus come under private ownership and presumably would not be subject to the U. S. Supreme Court's anti-segregation rulings applying to publicly-owned projects.

Mississippi and South Carolina have already enacted similar laws.

The bill, sponsored in the recent special legislative session by Clark County Reps. Emory McNider and Marion Bradford, makes no specific reference to racial questions.

Where Are Alabama's Voices?

EDITOR, THE ADVERTISER—Is Alabama as completely devoid of leadership at the national level as it is at the state level?

It would seem so. According to a front page story in The Advertiser May 17, the white people of the state, acting through their Citizens' Councils, scheduled five meetings for May 17, the second anniversary of the Black Monday segregation decision.

It is interesting to note that Charles McKay, who so recently gave such a sound political thrashing to the state's No. 1 Buffoon, Folsom, is the only Alabama speaker at any of the meetings.

¶ Birmingham went to Mississippi for Tom Brady.

¶ Hayneville went to Georgia for Roy Harris.

¶ Phenix City went to Texas for Dan Smoot.

¶ Bayou LaBatre went to Mississippi for Merle Palmer.

Our senators and congressmen may say that they were not invited to these meetings, and this is quite possible. The questions are, does their past performance justify or warrant an invitation? Can't they, or any of them, hear the voice (of the people of Alabama) in the wilderness? Or can it be they have been away too long? Or can it be that they have all removed the wax from their ears, as did Senator Sparkman in 1952, the better to hear the Siren song of the Yankee political bosses who sing of great power and glory for those loyal Democrats who are willing to trade the racial integrity of their constituents.

Byline Of Undependability

Editor, The Advertiser:

Bob Ingram's report of Congressman Bell's speech at Selma last Thursday night proves once again how facts on the integration problem are being kept from the general public by press, radio and television. In my opinion the Associated Press is one of the worst offenders in this respect. Those of us who believe separate but equal facilities best for both races, best for the South and all America, are going to have to fight our battles by letters and word of mouth to friends, relatives and all those of open mind in this great struggle for preservation of this republic.

Consider The Long Shot

EDITOR, THE ADVERTISER—The XII and XX Amendments to the Constitution of the United States provide the method by which the President and Vice President shall be elected. To fully understand the following the reader should refer to these amendments.

Let's suppose:

¶ That the Northern Democratic convention meeting in Chicago shall find Soapy Williams, Humphrey, et al, ranting and raving and reviling the South, affirming that they do not need us to win. The decision of the Supreme Court on school segregation will be endorsed. A plank affirming their determination to secure for their wards, the Negro race, every advantage resulting from close association with white people. No states' rights plank will be adopted and the whole platform will be what the South does not desire.

¶ The Republicans will meet in San Francisco. Eisenhower's health will force him to decline to run, or if he does run, his vice president will really be the candidate. The convention also will endorse the decision of the Supreme Court, and proclaim their undying love for the Negro race.

¶ The states of Virginia, South Carolina, Georgia, Mississippi, and Louisiana will refuse to give their support to the Northern Democratic ticket. Alabama in protest will select an independent slate of electors which has already been qualified. These states have a combined electoral vote of sixty-one (61) and may be supplemented by several other Southern states.

¶ Since the War Between the States the Democratic Party has not elected a president without the vote of the South, Roosevelt excepted. A recent statement by Truman to the contrary is entirely false. In 1948 he received 303 votes, 194 from the North, and 109 from the Southern States. A loss of 38 additional votes would have defeated him.

¶ 266 electoral votes are necessary for election as provided by the Constitution. Without the leadership of Eisenhower the Republicans can not secure that many votes. Suppose the vote is as follows: Republicans, 260; Northern Democrats, 210; Southern Democrats, 61; Total 531.

¶ The Southern electors will meet and cast their votes for Senator Byrd of Virginia, or some other loyal Southern statesman. This will make Byrd eligible for election by the House of Representatives. The House, voting by states, will naturally be divided among the three candidates, as 25 states will be required to elect.

¶ The House will meet Jan. 3. The Southern block of congressmen will have the balance of power. Speaker Rayburn, being persona non grata to many Southern Democrats, the South will refuse to participate in organizing the Congress, but will submit the names of several loyal Southern congressmen, such as Smith of Virginia and Vinson of Georgia, giving the caucus the privilege of selecting any one of the number. I am assuming that the Democrats will have a slight majority in the House, as at present.

¶ If the House fails to elect, and the Senate, on account of the Southern senators refusing to participate in the voting, also fails to elect a vice president, under the law, the speaker of the House becomes President, and since we have elected the speaker, the President will be a Southern Democrat. So we had two chances to win. In the House we might persuade the Republicans or the Democrats to select Byrd in order to secure against the election of their opponent.

We in the South must organize if we expect to be recognized. All this is based on the assumption that the Republicans can not elect their candidate without Eisenhower, and the Northern Democrats have no chance without the South. Fellow Democrats of the South, "Think on these things." I am not a prophet, nor the son of a prophet, but "A voice crying in the wilderness."

Anti-Integration Bills Introduced

Post-Herald
Birm., Ala.

Rigid Screening Of Students Proposed

Post 3-10-56

MONTGOMERY, March 9 (AP)—Rigid new segregation proposals made their start through the Alabama Legislature today, aimed at stopping integration in college and in public parks and swimming pools.

In the wake of the recent rioting at the University of Alabama a bill was introduced in the House to give college authorities a weapon to use against any student whose presence would endanger the lives, health or welfare of fellow students or the college.

It would apply to any state-supported institution of higher learning.

Across the corridor, the Senate received a proposed constitutional amendment to give Alabama cities the right to dispose of recreational facilities.

Sponsored by Sen. Gerald Bradford of Clarke County, it would allow city governing bodies to lease or sell the property to private operators to get around Supreme Court decisions on segregation.

If passed by the Legislature, the amendment would be voted on at a special election already called for Aug. 28

The college entrance requirement measure was sponsored by Rep. Pat Boyd of Pike County. It authorizes the board of trustess or similar controlling agency to make an investigation of any prospective student or those already enrolled.

Purpose of the investigation would be to determine if it would be dangerous to life, health, welfare or property to permit the student to enter the school, remain on the campus if already enrolled, or to use dormitory or eating facilities at the college.

An adverse report would be grounds for banning the student from school, and if he refused to leave, the college could get a court injunction to enforce its demands.

Any student expelled under the proposed new law could appeal to court, with the trial judge given authority to empanel a jury to hear the evidence.

Violation of an order to leave the campus would be punishable by a $500 fine and 12 months in jail for each day the violation continues.

The initial application for enrollment would constitute a waiver by the student of any claim for personal damages growing out of an investigation by the school authorities.

In making the investigation, the college would have power to take sworn testimony and to subpena witnesses.

College authorities in carrying out the proposed law would be directed to take into consideration these factors:

The student's morals, conduct, health and personal standards; his home environment; the "possibility or threat of friction or disorder" resulting from the student's presence; the "possibility or threat of breaches of the peace or ill will or economic retaliation within the community;" the possibility of "psychological injury" to any students.

Mobile Woman Erroneously Identified As A Negro

Post-Herald
Birm., Ala.
Mon. 4-23-56

MOBILE, April 22 (AP)— Nine loan company officials indicted on charges they made false claims against a Mobile white woman were free under $300 bond each today.

The woman, Emma Mayton Davis, was erroneously identified by the Associated Press as a Negro.

The nine men surrended at the U. S. marshal's office on federal grand jury indictments returned Thursday. The indictments charged the companies filed claims on loans to the woman on which they had charged an interest rate which allegedly exceeded the legal rate.

State law limits the interest on a $100 loan to $8 a year.

The nine were charged with falsely swearing that their claims were "free from usury as defined by the laws of the place where the debt was contracted."

Mrs. Davis had filed as a debtor in the Federal Debtors Court last September. The nine firms later filed claims as creditors.

The indictment named these men:

James Comer Bryant Jr., manager of the First Loan and Finance Co., Mobile; Earl Bernard Chastain, owner of Prichard Investment Co.; William T. Dixon, partner of Sawyer's Credit Loan Co.; Robert Byron Eddins, manager of Dixie Finance Co., Eugene Emerson Holleman, superisor of Azalea Loans Inc.; Claudius Septimus Knapp, manager of Ford Finance Co., all of Prichard.

Walter Ray Merritt, manager of Southern Finance Co., Plateau; William A. Rozar, manager of T & C Finance Co.; and Byron Keith Salter, owner of Sun Finance Co., both of Prichard.

Judge decries charges segregation is unChristian

News Sun. 7-29-56

NEWVILLE, Ala., July 28—A member of the Democratic Convention platform committee today challenged anti-segregationists who say racial separation is "unChristian."

"The Christian faith is based upon love," Circuit Judge George Wallace of Clayton said in a speech. "The segregation system in the South is not based upon ill will, hatred, malice or racial prejudices as the propaganda agencies and the politicians and the do-gooders of other sections declare.

"THE SEGREGATION system is based . . . upon the convictions in the hearts and minds of the vast majority of our people that segregation is for the best interset of all concerned.

"Wherein is there anything unChristian about a system based upon what we know to be the best interest of both races? . . . We in the South do now and have heretofore approached our problems in the Christian manner because there is goodwill between the races."

However, he warned, "if the do-gooders and rabble rousers do not desist from their deliberate interference, this may cease to be the case."

WALLACE IS ONE of two Alabama delegates elected to the platform committee for the Democratic Convention. On other issues, he told the Pea River Electric Cooperative he will advocate:

1. A farm program calling for 90 per cent of parity for all basic crops and one that "will not discriminate against the South as the Republican program is doing at this time."

2. Continued support for PEA co-ops.

3. "Equitable limitations" on foreign imports "whenever such imports threaten the economic health of an American industry."

The latter obviously referred to growing criticism in the South of cotton imports from Japan.

TURNING BACK to the segregation issue, Wallace said that as a member of the platform committee he will "defend vigorously" the system he called a "sane, sensible and nonhypocritical program that has stood the test of time."

"We shall never submit to the destruction of a system that has made it possible for our people to live in peace and harmony with one another," he declared.

ALABAMA VOTES ON BIAS QUESTION

Times 7-29-56

Post 8-28-56

BIRMINGHAM, Ala., Aug. 28 (AP)—Alabama voted today on whether to take drastic legal measures to preserve segregation in its schools, playgrounds and public housing.

Two proposed amendments to the State Constitution, frankly aimed at circumventing the Supreme Court's edicts ending legal segreation of whites and Negroes, drew the major attention in today's special election.

Early voting was light, despite considerable campaign oratory on both sides of the question.

The school amendment would provide "freedom of choice" for parents to send their children to schools serving only their own race.

It also would remove both the Constitutional provision for state-supported public education and the requirement for segregated schools. It would authorize the Legislature to abolish public schools in any of Alabama's sixty-seven counties and to finance private schools, presumably segregated, with public funds.

Protection for Board

School board members also would become judicial officers, protecting them from lawsuits.

The other amendment bearing on racial problems would permit cities and counties to sell, lease or give away public parks, playgrounds, swimming pools, golf courses or public housing projects. This was another effort to preserve segregation.

State Senator Albert Boutwell of Birmingham, one of the authors of the "freedom of choice" measure, said it would have the effect of keeping separate schools for Negroes and whites.

State education leaders split over the school amendment. Dr. Austin R. Meadows, State Superintendent of Education, opposed it as "weakening our stand against segregation" and ending the constitutional requirements for public schools and public school attendance.

The various White Citizens' Councils that sprang up in Alabama after the United States Supreme Court decision in 1954 outlawing segregated schools also were split on the "freedom of choice" amendment.

Some opposed it because it would eliminate the State Constitution's clause requiring separate schools for whites and Negroes. Others took the view that this state provision already had been ruled out by the Federal courts and that a new law was necessary.

Negroes took no public part in the "Freedom of Choice" campaign. The Negro vote in Alabama usually is less than 5 per cent of the total.

Full Returns From Election Shows Strong Majorities

News Herald 9-2-56

BIRMINGHAM, Ala., Sept. 1 (AP)—Complete returns from Tuesday's special election in Alabama showed that the voters had taken a strong stand for racial segregation.

The "freedom of choice" amendment designed to maintain segregation in public schools was approved 128,545 to 80,777. An amendment useful in resisting racial integration of parks and playgrounds was approved 112,364 to 81,245.

The "freedom of choice" amendment eliminates the mandatory requirement for state-supported public schools. It also, among other things, gives the Legislature authority to close schools and turn them over to private organizations if that is necessary to prevent integration of white and Negro students.

The second segregation amendment authorized the Legislature to place state parks and playgrounds in private hands if necessary to preserve segregation.

Grant Charges 'Brainwashing' In Racial Verdict By Court

Advertiser Mat. 9-22-56

Montgomery, Ala.

The American people, including members of the Supreme Court, are to a cretain extent, being "brainwashed," according to Rep. George Grant, U.S. Congressman from Alabama's 2nd District.

Grant, speaking yesterday before the Montgomery Assn. of Life Underwriters, laid blame for this condition to the State Department. He reported that he had seen, about four years ago, a memorandum from that department to the Justice Department relating to the effect of conditions in America on non-white allies.

"We face very, very serious times. We must bring to the other people of the country (non-southerners) that this is a question of States' Rights and of upholding the constitution," he said.

In his off-the-cuff speech in the Whitley Hotel Lounge, Grant told the underwriters that he had seen Supreme Court justices at a segregated club in Washington. "You can be sure they bring their children and grandchildren to segregated pools and clubs," he added.

The Civil Rights law which passed in the House but was not voted on in the Senate, is, according to Grant, the most dangerous piece of legislation I've seen in my years in Washington." He expects similar legislation, he said, in the next sessiom, when it may be introduced early enough for passage in spite of delaying action.

James Thomas introduced Grant. Before Grant's talk, president James VonSeeberg discussed a proposed booth, at the county fair in October and appointed G. E. Cauthen and Vernon McGraw to handle arrangements. He also appointed George Smith and James Pinholster to provide manpower for the project.

Boycotters Appeal to Ike

MONTGOMERY, Ala.—Leaders of the bus boycott appealed to President Eisenhower to order a Federal investigation of anti-Negro "threats, violence and mass arrests" in the city and state.

White Minister And Family Escape Injury

Jour. 8-31-56

MONTGOMERY, Ala. — (INS) — The bombing of the home of a white minister who has supported the Negro boycott of buses in Montgomery has aroused fresh feeling in Montgomery.

Police Capt. E. P. Brown said the blast at 3:10 a.m. Saturday damaged the front of the home of the Rev. Robert Graetz, a white Lutheran minister who has a Negro congregation.

The explosion, according to Brown, ripped out windows, damaged the doors of the house and blew a hole in the front yard. It also blew out windows in a home across the street. Brown said it apparently was caused by two or three sticks of dynamite.

No One Injured

Graetz has been an active member of the Montgomery Improvement Association. The group supports the Negro bus boycott which started last December when a Negro woman was arrested for refusing to move to the segregated section in the back of the bus.

Graetz and his family were away from home at the time of the blast. No one was injured. Graetz, 27, is pastor of the Trinity Lutheran church. His home adjoins the church in the Negro residentia section.

The youthful minister has used his personal car to give rides to participate in the boycott.

Police Chief G. J. Ruppenthal said he was told by neighbors that the Graetz family has been out of town since last Sunday.

Sought Aid of Others

News 9-27-56

As program chairman of the Council, Graetz invited white clergymen of the city to attend last Thursday night's meeting to hear the Rev. Martin Luther King tell "his side of the story" on the bus boycott.

Ruppenthal said the explosion knocked out several windows in the pastor's home and blew the lock off the front door. He said it left a hole in the front yard "about big enough to put a two-gallon bucket in."

The dynamiting was the third such incident since the boycott began.

Others Were Bombed

The boycott had brought other outbreaks of violence in its early stages. In recent weeks the Negroes have operated their own "station wagon procession" to get supporters to and from work.

The last bombing in connection with the boycott was last January, when the home of Negro minister M. L. King was bombed. King is the recognized leader of the boycott and head of the Association.

Segregation Bills Keep Wide Margin

Post Herald Birmingham Ala.

Two amendments designed to preserve segregation in Alabama's schools, parks and playgrounds, maintained a wide margin of victory. 8-31-56

Tabulations of results of Tuesday's referendum slowed to a trickle yesterday, but there had been no doubt of the two measures passing since late Tuesday, when they showed a substantial lead.

Of 2495 of more than 2700 boxes in the state which so far have been counted, the school "freedom of choice" amendment is ahead 120,061 to 75,828.

Amendment No. 3 (parks and playgrounds), is ahead 105,298 to 75,826.

Amendment No. 1, proposing to increase income taxes on corporations up to 5 per cent, was being beaten by a count of 123,776 to 62,358.

The other three amendments are strictly local in application.

For the same number of boxes, herer is the count for those:

Amendment No. 5 (Marion County), for 38,533, against 90,257.

Amendment No. 6 (Franklin County), for 50,826, against 75,955.

Alabama Voters Ratified Amendments Tues. Aug. 28

Alabama voters ratified two amendments to the constitution Tuesday, Aug. 28 which were designed to safeguard segregated schools and parks.

The so-called "freedom of choice" school plan (Amendment No. 2) was approved by an unofficial vote of: For—104,379, Against—68,231

Amendment No. 3 which would empower the Legislature to dispose of public parks to prevent them from being integrated carried by:

Four other proposed amendments were rejected. Proposed amendment No. 1 would have increased tax on coroporations. This new revenue would have gone to the schools.

Amendments 4, 5, and 6 were local in application but they were rejected.

Segregation amendments increase lead

Two measures designed to maintain segregation in Alabama increased their already wide margin, as late tabulations filtered in.

ONE PROPOSAL, providing for "freedom of choice" for parents who wish to send their children to segregated schools, was passed with the biggest majority for any of the six amendments.

Of 2476 boxes counted of more than 2700 in the state, 119,229 favored the proposal, while 75,685 opposed it.

The other segregation amendment, designed to maintain separate white and Negro parks and playgrounds, passed by a vote of 104,808 to 75,653, based on the same number of boxes counted.

ANOTHER AMENDMENT proposing to increase the ceiling on income taxes of corporations to 5 per cent was defeated 123,198 to 61,841.

The other three amendments were strictly local in application.

Of 2476 boxes, Amendment No. 4, Auburn and Opelika ad valorem taxes was defeated 68,752 to 62,496.

Amendment No. 5, Marion County, was defeated 89,985 to 38,645.

Amendment No. 6, Franklin County, was defeated 75,679 to 50,966.

Main Difference Over Method Of Segregation

With respect to the recent voting on the Boutwell Amendment, I should like to say that it is my opinion that the vast majority of those who voted, either for or against the amendment, were voting for segregation. The difference was over method.

I have never seen a people so united in opinion and determination as are the people of Alabama on the question of segregation. The NAACP might as well throw in the towel where Alabama is concerned.

A Negro Minister Speaks

EDITOR, THE ADVERTISER — Those who are acquainted with the history of the United States can recall the rough sketch of a snake drawn in 13 separate parts, each part representing one of the 13 states which later became the United States of America.

A strange snake story was told the other day of a chicken snake that swallowed 12 rotten eggs, crawled up and wrapped himself around a tree, put on the egg crushing act, and set himself for an egg feast.

Instead of the expected palatable luxury, the rotten eggs all exploded in the snake at one time, bursting him wide open from head to tail.

This snake story can be compared with the United States of America today. The snake is the public, the eggs are the sedition and propaganda generated by the segregation and integration issues.

As soon as the people swallow enough of it, there is going to be a replica of the snake episode. Too much abuse of our judicial sovereignty will some day prove fatal to our entire existence as a free nation.

White citizens don't want integration and Negroes don't want segregation. The white race is afraid of what integration may do to their race but the Negro race already knows what segregation has done to his. Under the old segregation law of separate but equal, there has been much separation but little equality except in such things as taxes, poverty, sickness, and death. Under the old law of segregation, the whites are still white but the Negro has been mongrelized to such extent that a real thoroughbred Negro is almost extinct in America.

Whatever may befall segregation and integration, may God grant from this day forward that all races shall be protected from the rabies of racial debauchery. I don't believe that God ever intended for human species to mix any more than he did in lower animals.

I pray that God will hasten the day when there will be no lawsuits between the white and Negro races of any kind whatever, but in every walk of life there will be mutual understanding and brotherly love in every one's heart and mind.

Report Says Downtown Building Drops Its Bias

A report says that a downtown office building has abandoned its previous "racial segregation practices" on elevators, since a police court acquitted a local Baptist church minister of disorderly conduct charges after he defied the Jim Crow practices.

The Rev. Theodore N. Nelson, 50, of 1504 Southwest 23rd Street, Powderly, was found not guilty of disorderly conduct in City Recorder's Judge Ralph E. Parker's court, Monday, October 15, after he was arrested Saturday, October 13, when he refused to ride an elevator "reserved for Negroes" at a local downtown Building.

The Rev. Mr. Nelson was arrested on the seventh floor of the aMssey Building, after the elevator operator refused to carry him to the first floor.

Tom Bentley, Jr., of 2g00 North 18th Street, captain of porters at the building, said he called police after the operator called him.

Bentley said the building has three elevators operating. He said one is marked "colored" but both Negroes and whites ride it.

Another downtown office building known as the Frank Nelson Building still practices racial segregation on its elevators. It has seven elevators plus another elevator reserved for Negroes and freight. Only white riders are permitted to use the other seven. However, when the "reserved" elevator is not being used for freight transportation, some impatient whites who don't like to wait always jump on the "reserved" elevator with Negro riders.

Judge Parker agreed with Attorney Billingsley that there is no law against Negroes and whites riding the same elevators in Birmingham. "They do it here in the City, the City Hall, the County Courthouse, department stores and most of the large office buildings" Judge Parker further agreed with the young brilliant attorney.

Bentley said that Rev. Nelson did not cause any disturbance or use any profane language. He just kept saying "Main Floor," when the employees tried to get him to get on the other elevator.

Attorney Ingram Beasley, a passenger on the elevator when the Rev. Nelson got on was a strong witness in court asking for a conviction of the minister.

Women Electrical Workers Dispatch Scroll To Mont.

Daily World Atlanta, Ga. Wed. 6-13-56

NEW YORK — Pledging to work for the "common cause for economic and political equality" of working women, north and south, some 200 delegates to the Fourth National UE Conference on the Problems of Working Women meeting at the Belmont-Plaza Hotel here last week end, signed a symbolic scroll and dispatched it to the Montgomery Improvement Association in Montgomery, Alabama.

The annual women's conference was sponsored by the United Electrical, Radio and Machine Workers of America (UE) and addressed itself, in its two-day session, to discussing and drawing up a program on urgent problems facing working women in shops throughout the country such as, speedup, health hazards, need for political action, etc.

In a special order of business the Conference heard a report from Mrs. Marie Hoag of Cleveland in which she discussed the situation in the South and presented a huge scroll to the Conference, addressed to the women of the South, which was signed by the women delegates attending the New York Conference.

"The heroic fight of the Negro women of the South—as symbolized by Miss Autherine Lucy in her fight for equality and dignity in education and Mrs. Rosa Parks for equality of treatment and dignity in transportation—has been a major contribution and a deep source of inspiration to the fight of women for equality in our country," the UE message stated.

"Their heroic and dignified fight in defense of democracy and equality of treatment deserves the praise, sympathy and support of women and men everywhere.

"We trade union women of the electrical, radio and machine industry, along with the men gathered together in our fourth annual UE Conference on the Problems of Working Women in New York City on this 20th day of May, 1956, do hereby affix our signatures to this Scroll in tribute to and in pledge of sympathy and support.

"We recognize that the fight of trade union women for economic and political equality cannot be won so long as the Negro women are extreme victims of undemocratic treatment.

"We therefore pledge to work to make 1956 a year when our common cause for economic and political equality will be advanced."

Mobile Negroes organize to oppose segregation

News Fri. 6-8-56

MOBILE, Ala., June 8—(AP)—The only way to make democracy work is to grant equal rights to Negroes, a minister told about 500 members of his race last night.

After the Rev. J. Echols Lowery and other speakers criticize segregation, the Mobile Negroes decided to form a committee of 100 to lead a fight against it.

They turned in nominations for the committee, which will be chosen before the next mass meeting is held.

The National Assn. for Advancement of Colored People, banned in Alabama by a Montgomery temporary court order, was praised in a resolution for its "great work."

THE RESOLUTION also said: "Men of good will everwhere are disturbed that many newspapers and political opportunists in the South are urging open defiance of our courts and inciting irrational thinking and hatred in confused minds. These sources are perhaps unwittingly giving aid to the destruction of the forces of law and order and creating a situation which may bring chaos to our beloved country.

"We call upon our fellow white citizens in larger numbers . . . to use their influence toward the end that the Christian principle of the fatherhood of God and the brotherhood of man may be established in the hearts of men everywhere."

Attorney Clarence Moses reviewed actions of the Alabama legislature, judicial statements and court rulings which he said had the purpose of nullifying the U. S. Supreme Court's decision barring public school segregation.

"We are not as bad as Mississippi," Moses said, "and the reason may be that we have a good governor." Alabama's governor is James E. Folsom, Mississippi's is J. P. Coleman.

A group of leading Mobile Negroes called the meeting as part of "a hold the line move to protect our fight for a first class citizenship status."

State should lead fight for South, says judge

News Birmingham, Ala. Sun. 5-27-56

CLAYTON, Ala., May 26—(AP)—Alabama should "lead the fight" at the Democratic National Convention to present the South's case against racial integration, Circuit Judge George Wallace said Saturday.

Wallace is a delegate from the Third Congressional District and the judge who recently threatened to jail any federal agent attempting to investigate the courts in his circuit.

In a prepared statement Saturday, he said Alabama should take advantage of its "strategic spot" as first in the rollcall of states and "utilize it to the extent of taking the lead in the fight against any matter . . . calculated to weaken the South's stand on segregation."

WALLACE SUGGESTED his approach:

"The delegation should be opposed to any anti-Southern candidate for either the presidential or vice presidential nomination. The delegation should vigorously lead the fight in behalf of the South's stand on segregation; should support an interposition plank in the party's platform; should vote for restoration of the two-thirds rule, and oppose actively the so-called Civil Rights resolutions."

Continuing, the judge declared: "We should let the people of the nation know that we are not going to sit idly by and see local government run over roughshod; that any problem existing among our people can be worked out and will be worked out by the local people involved, rabble-rousing Eastern and Midwestern politicians to the contrary notwithstanding."

"We should begin our fight on the first rollcall," he added, "and continue until the adjournment of the convention."

RACIAL CRUSADER LOSES POSTAL PAY

Times P. 46-L

Letter Carrier Is Suspended at Mobile, but U. S. Denies Link to Civic Activities

New York, N.Y.

By PETER KIHSS

One of Alabama's best-known campaigners for Negro rights has been suspended for twenty-eight days as a mail carrier in Mobile. He is John L. LeFlore, Negro, a postal employe for thirty-five years. 4-22-56

Roy Wilkins, executive secretary of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, said here last week that "it is our belief that, while Mr. LeFlore may have been derelict under some of the numerous regulations of the Post Office Department, the present moves against him are actuated by a desire to curb his long and well-known activity as an N. A. A. C. P. officer in Mobile."

In one of the more recent and conspicuous phases of this activity Mr. LeFlore was one of the plaintiffs in the case that brought the Interstate Commerce Commission order of Nov. 25 for an end to race segregation in interstate railroad travel.

Suspension Began April 7

Last week, at Mobile, Postmaster Taylor H. Henry confirmed the payless suspension effective April 7. He insisted that it was based solely on the mailman's work record. He said that he had filed the charges, and that the investigation and decision had been made by the department, with the suspension order coming from Washington.

In Washington the Post Office Department said yesterday that Mr. LeFlore had been suspended for "abuse of sick leave and an unsatisfactory record," which it refused to detail.

The suspension followed a conference between Mr. LeFlore and Norman R. Abrams, Assistant Postmaster General in charge of operations, the department stated, adding concerning Mr. LeFlore:

"At no time did his membership in the N. A. A. C. P. have a bearing on the decision to suspend him."

In his discussion of the case Mr. Henry declared that a mailman "can take part in any activity outside, so long as it doesn't interfere with his work in the post office." The Mobile office, he added, has 435 employes, of whom 41.5 per cent are Negroes. Mobile is one-third Negro.

Mr. LeFlore challenged the selection of Mr. Henry for the postmaster post. Representing the N. A. A. C. P., he urged the Senate Post Office Committee by letter in June, 1954, to hold up President Eisenhower's appointment. The letter cited alleged racial discrimination.

Mr. Henry, a Republican, who had been acting postmaster from June, 1953, said this week that June, 1953, said last week that move. He declined comment on his racial views.

Cleared in Federal Inquiry

Mr. LeFlore, who is 53 years old, has been executive secretary of the N. A. A. C. P. Mobile branch since its start thirty-one years ago. In 1946 he was a leader in helping 500 Negroes to register in Mobile after they had won the right to vote in the Democratic primary.

His activities led the Mobile County Board of Registrars to send charges Feb. 1, 1946, to the Post Office Department accusing him of violation of Civil Service regulations and of the Hatch Act against political activity by Federal employes. An inquiry under the Truman Administration cleared him as not having worked for any individual candidacy and commended him for community service.

In the nationwide I. C. C. railroad cases initiated by the N. A. A. C. P. in December, 1953, Mr. LeFlore complained against race segregation on the Gulf, Mobile and Ohio Railroad.

On July 26 of last year he filed with the Mobile County School Board petitions by thirty-three Negro parents for desegregation of the county public schools in line with United States Supreme Court decisions. One petitioner, a maid, was discharged by a white family.

On Sept. 8 Postmaster Henry served charges against Mr. LeFlore and proposed that he be dismissed or otherwise disciplined. Alleged were abuse of sick leave involving parts of thirty-five days in three years, tardiness in sixty-three instances in four and a half years, deviations from route and disobedience or delay in five cases from 1952 to 1954.

Rebuttal Evidence

Mr. LeFlore, in rebuttal, filed statements of doctors and evidence of higher rates of sick leave and tardiness by other employes.

A supplemental charge Nov. 29 involved his calling a white woman by her first name, with the reply that this was at her suggestion.

In September, after the filing of the case, Joseph N. Langan and Charles F. Hackmeyer wrote to Postmaster General Arthur Summerfield in praise of Mr. LeFlore's character and civic activities. Mr. Hackmeyer was then Mayor of Mobile and is now city commissioner. Mr. Langan became Mayor in October.

A meeting in behalf of Mr. LeFlore is being held today at a Mobile Negro church by a special committee that challenges suspension.

Endorsed by the Mobile Interdenominational Ministerial Alliance of Negro Clergy, the rally seeks to raise $1,000. This would reimburse Mr. LeFlore for his loss of pay and start a fund for potential victims of "economic pressures." Mr. LeFlore's annual salary is $4,750 and his suspension may cost him $390.

Mobile has been considered racially tolerant, as Alabama communities go. In February Mayor Langan set up a committee of seventeen white persons and thirteen Negroes under his chairmanship to promote good racial relations and eliminate tensions.

Voice Of The People

Negroes Want Chance To Enjoy Labor's Fruits

As good citizens of this great country, and as residents of Alabama, we are facing a crisis now that I think should make us turn our minds back to a few things that seem to have been forgotten by those who so bitterly oppose equality for the Negro race.

There is hardly a building, bridge, plant, car, train or anything of great concern or importance that the Negro did not contribute his time, labor, and skill in helping to build or construct; and in most instances were far underpaid. We can go even back to when the Pilgrims came to this country. Negro slaves were brought along to do the hard work, such as cutting down trees, digging wells, plowing and helping in building homes for their masters, and working along side-by-side with their masters in every way; making it possible for the prosperity that is now enjoyed today.

Think even today of the many Negroes who serve as cooks, maids, and nurses in white homes preparing meals for the nourishing of the body, taking care of their children, and in many instances, the children really depend upon their colored nurse to pacify and comfort them.

Since Negroes have helped in the growth of this great nation and state, why can't we enjoy equality as those who come from other countries? Any other nationals except the Negro have the privilege of enjoying freedom and equality. Why must this be so in a free country?

We as Negroes are proud of the things we have helped to accomplish. We only want to be given an opportunity to enjoy them. We are not asking for a mixing of the races.

So why not look into the future, putting away ancient ideas and traditions in this enlightened day and accept the Negro race as a human race, and allow us to take our places as first class citizens of this great nation, country and state?

MRS. MYRTLE C. STEELE,
123 West Eighth Court.

Think With Minds, Not With Emotions

Is a fourth party in the making?

The solid South is no longer solid politically or otherwise. I think our "State Righters" made the first inroad into our solid South. Of course, this stirred the sleeping giant, the Republican Party, which before had never been a serious threat to our Democratic South, but which was awakened to its full political power and became a strong contender in our last election.

Now over the horizon emerges a "fourth party—the White Citizens' Council." This new party stated in the outset of its organization that it was not a political party yet in a few days it contradicted this very statement with the anouncement that it expected pledges from all candidates for the National Democratic Convention to run on a segregated platform. In fact, letters were to be sent to each candidate. In other words, only those who support the views of the fourth party would be elected. The question arises in my mind: How can you be unpolitical at a mass meeting and be political after adjournment? Somewhere along the line someone is fouled up in his thinking.

I was born and reared in the South and I like the way things have been in the South for the length of my life. I want them to stay the way they have been and are now. I believe in fighting for our rights. But I don't believe it can be done by prejudice, hate and social unrest. I do believe it can be done by holding our Christian dignity high and thinking with our heads instead of with our emotions.

It might be significantly noted that we have had splendid racial understanding and unity in our city for the past three or four years, and I might add, "without any bombing of Negro homes." Mob violence must not and cannot be allowed to supersede the law if we are to make progress together under the same flag, which tells us that we are all free, black, white, red or yellow.

I appeal, as a Christian minister, for people to be temperate in all things. Let no one incite you to prejudice and hatred.

I think it would be a wonderful thing if we of the white race should have a few "mass prayer meetings" of our own to temper our hearts with justice, love and understanding of our racial problems. Be led of God and not of man! Think with your minds and not with your emotions! This, alone, is the answer to the unrest we are undergoing.

REV. HERBERT HAMILTON,
Brookhaven Methodist Church, 1725 31st Street, Southwest.

For Understanding And Cooperation

A word of thanks and congratulations are due The News for the front-page editorial, "More Consultation Is Urgent Need in Racial Situation," Saturday, Feb. 25, issue.

If this paper had taken that attitude in its editorials and articles ever since the Supreme Court's decision on integration in 1954 perhaps Alabama would not stand embarrassed before the world today.

Why does a great daily newspaper carry headlines and articles designed to incite and inflame?

"The other course relies mainly on good will, understanding and agreement. It is evident that we urgently need far more effort of that kind."

Let's have more editorials of this kind!

'The Rumors Were Lies'

The following Associated Press story was printed Sunday, but it seems advisable to reprint it here to emphasize the peril of rumor. We in Montgomery need to grasp the significance of this Bessemer story in order to shieuld ourselves.

Such rumor-mongering is a form of cannibalism, as you see.

You can't stop fools and irresponsible people from starting rumors. But you can render them harmless by refusing to believe them.

Mark well that the Bessemer rumor, like many in Montgomery recently, turned out to be false and baseless

Mark it well:

BESSEMER, Ala., Feb. 18 (AP)—Only the usual small sounds of night broke the calm when midnight struck Bessemer. And for that many people were grateful.

Because for five days this suburban industrial city of 30,000 had been in the grip of frenzied, unfounded rumors of an impending racial clash. The rumors said Friday was to be The Day.

The first stories began circulating Monday. They were that Negroes were planning a "push day" for the purpose of creating incidents.

Then rumors circulated that Negroes would attempt to take over buses in the downtown area when the stores closed last night. Hardware and sporting good stores reported heavy sales of guns and ammunition, mostly to white persons.

Beginning yesterday morning, police headquarters, newspapers and radio stations were bombarded with thousands of telephone calls.

"Has there been a race riot? Is there going to be one? Is it safe to go down town? Should I keep my children from school?" were some of the questions asked.

Officers couldn't ignore the wild reports any longer.

Police Chief C. T. Mullins made preparations to have his entire force available for any emergency.

Sheriff Holt A. McDowell alerted his staff and sent 12 deputies to Bessemer at noon, where they remained on duty until late last night. Commanders of Birmingham and Bessemer National Guard units were notified informally they might be called.

Heavily armed officers cruised the streets in police cars, with three or four men to the car instead of the usual one or two.

They stood by when Bessemer High School dismissed classes at 3 p.m. because it was said "something" was going to happen them. Nothing did.

Many people stayed away from the downtown area.

Merchants said business was at the lowest ebb for a Friday that they could remember—except at the stores handling firearms and ammunition.

By 8 p.m. there were less than half the persons normally downtown on a Friday night, when stores stay open late.

Only a few men were visible on the streets at 9 p.m. Women and children were not to be seen.

Midnight came and proved the rumors were lies.

Police were at a loss to explain how the stories started, and whether they were circulated maliciously.

No matter how the rumors began and then spread like fire through dry grass, they were dangerous.

Even an imagined offense might cause taut nerves to snap in a city ruled by fear of the unknown.

'100 Signature Letters'

Editor, The Advertiser:

I would like to call to the attention of your readers the "100 signature letters" sent by the residents of the Marion Junction community to each of its congressional representatives. If this idea will "catch on" and other communities, civic organizations, and ladies clubs will sponsor similar letters, we will soon discover many "dedicated" segregationists on Capitol Hill.

The letter of transmittal accompanying each "100 signature letter" is as follows:

"Enclosed is a letter signed by 100 of your constituents in the Marion Junction area urging you to vigorously oppose any and all appropriations to any federal agency using its funds to break down our custom of segregation in the South.

The South, by the actions of many of its representatives in the Congress, has led the nation to believe it is willing to accept integration. Nothing can be farther from the truth.

We implore you to fight with all the vigor at your command this unconstitutional encroachment upon state's rights.

We have no intentions of letting the combination of radicals and impractical, misinformed "do-gooders" bring political, economic, and social chaos to our section. We will defend without reservation the excellent racial understanding and cooperation that has long existed here.

In this fight be assured of our united and undivided support.

The 'Moderate': Radical Or Reactionary?

EDITOR, THE ADVERTISER—I have been following in The Nashville Banner reprints of your excellent series on the subject of racial discrimination in the North. The series is a real service no less to the Negro race than to the white and no less to the North than to the South, and I should like to congratulate you and your reporters on the series itself and also on the fact that in spite of the emotionalism of the subject you have been able to handle it with remarkable objectivity.

During the past week or two, many of the reprints in The Banner have dealt with the racial situation in and around Detroit, and in this connection I came across not long ago an article on "Prophet" Jones, which I am taking the liberty to enclose. As you may know, Prophet Jones, a native of Birmingham, is one of Detroit's wealthiest and most powerful citizens.

Although it is hardly news that unscrupulous Negroes shamefully exploit the members of their own race, my interest in this particular case is that Prophet Jones has such a hold on the Negroes of Detroit that both the state and federal revenue officials are reluctant to investigate his income tax returns, and that he is so respected as a political pivot in Michigan that the Michigan state legislature honored a few years back his request to deliver the invocation at an opening session.

The article which I am enclosing appeared in Inside Story, which, as you know, is one of the many expose magazines, and of course that suggests in itself that nothing presented therein can be taken at face value. At the same time, the specific assertions to which I refer above should not be too difficult to verify. I have no personal objection or resentment whatsoever to having an authentic Negro minister to deliver the invocation at the opening session of any state legislature, North or South, but I hardly see how a Negro such as Prophet Jones could dignify either the occasion or the race he represents.

About 10 days ago I heard on a radio newscast that the U.S. Bureau of Internal Revenue had built up a case against a "high official" in the National Association for the Advancement or Colored People, but that when the agents started to crack down they received orders from above to withhold their fire on the grounds that such an exposure might upset the racial balance. The name of the NAACP official was not given, of course, and I have heard nothing further about the matter on the radio, nor was I able to find any reference to the case in either of the Nashville newspapers. The newscast to which I refer was carried a day or two after the announcement that Joe Louis had been "forgiven" his back income taxes, which, as I recall, exceeded something like a million dollars. I remember only that it was a staggering amount.

I have always been under the impression that the Bureau of Internal Revenue was no respecter of persons, but it is beginning to look as if even that hard-boiled agency has a soft-spot for Negroes. I am especially curious to know if there is anything to the report concerning the NAACP official.

Among the reprints which The Banner has carried was the one in which a member of your staff discussed the recent race riot in Detroit (it was the riot against a Negro family — who turned out to be Indian — who had moved into a white neighborhood), and in the article your reporter commented on the fact that when such riots occur in the North they are called "disturbances" and that when mobs gather they are referred to as "crowds." That is, if the story is carried at all. Yesterday in The Nashville Tennessean, under the date-line Muncie, Ind., there was a short Associated Press news item concerning the race riot Monday at or near the Ball State Teachers College, which resulted in the arrest of five whites and five Negroes.

The trouble developed, it seems, at a municipal swimming pool, in which some Negroes went swimming, but apparently the rioting involved both the college and the town. The write-up is quite hazy, and it is difficult to know just what did happen, although the college is mentioned specifically. One thing is clear, however. Although the situation was serious enough to warrant the arrest of 10 persons, the AP report referred to it as a "racial disturbance," and although between 200 and 300 people were involved, the assembly was referred to as "crowd." In other words, there was no riot and no mob.

And, incidentally, the story was not front-page news even when a Nashville paper carried it. It appeared on page 17. In fact, even there it was but the third of four separate items concerning racial matters. I need not comment on how the AP would have handled the story had the date-line been Florence, Ala., for example, or even Murfreesboro, Tenn., or on the second invasion of the South by hordes of newsmen from the North. Frankly, I think it is just as well, but I wish the Northhern press were more reciprocal.

It is difficult indeed for one to keep one's head these days, and perhaps the two extremist groups are right when they argue that moderation is an impossibility. Not infrequently the moderate has the feeling that he is dwelling in a sort of no-man's land, where the South regards him as a radical and the North as a reactionary. At the same time, I feel that your series is a good thing, not just because it calls attention to the fact that discrimination exists as shamefully in the North as in the South and, worse, that it exists hypocritically, but rather because, through your series, you have made it unmistakably clear that the racial problem is national, not regional, in scope and responsibility.

The Situation Imposed

EDITOR, THE ADVERTISER — I recently read in the Congressional Record (Vol. 102, No. 69, dated April 27, 1956) the speech you made to the 57th Annual Banquet of the Huckleberry Indians at the New York Athletic Club on April 21, entitled, "The Southern Way of Life Up North." As you are probably aware, Rep. Albert Rains of Alabama inserted your speech in the record.

In my opinion your presentation was a magnificent discussion concerning the situation the people have had imposed upon them.

A Detroit Citizen Reports

Editor, The Advertiser:

Attached is clipping of an event in North [Buffalo race riot]. The occasion was on or at a place of amusement.

This is the pattern of events leading to Detroit's big race riot.

Our public places of amusement have been removed. Our city parks are still open, but our finest and most beautiful, Belle Isle, has been deserted almost completely by whites since the rioting.

Our city fathers have contemplated making an airport of Belle Isle, because it is useless to white people.

You notice that our Northern papers sidestep full facts in reporting, as for instance, in this case.

Our Disgust

Editor, The Advertiser:

I am in complete agreement with you in that our Northern papers are sweeping their own racial tensions under the rug.

Finally, these tensions have become too large and intense for them to hide as they would prefer. The integrated policy and its acceptance here are not met with favor here as our political aspirants would have you think.

Soft Pedal

Editor, The Advertiser:

Just a note to explain the enclosed clipping. I am a native Alabamian now living in a suburb of Buffalo, N.Y. For weeks the Buffalo Evening News, our daily newspaper, headlined the Autherine Lucy fiasco and also the Montgomery, Ala., bus boycott. Both were presented as racial strife in its very worst form. Yet please notice how a much worse racial riot right here, involving Buffalo's own colored and white citizens, was "soft pedaled" as "teen-age, hoodlumism."

Please read the entire account and study the pictures.

Another note: Neither John Cameron Swayze nor Douglas Edwards mentioned the Buffalo incident on TV, yet Autherine Lucy and Montgomery were their choicest morsels for weeks.

Presiding Bishop Raymond Luther Jones so exhorted some 200 ministerial and lay delegates to the 129th annual sessions of the Philadelphia and Baltimore Conference of the AME Zoin Church at Pennsylvania Ave., AME Zion Church Thursday.

The bishop's fighting Episcopal address was delivered on his first appearance in Baltimore since his election to the bishopric at the denomination's general conference in Pittsburgh two months ago.

The Rev. George N. Spells, pastor of the Harris Church, Harrisburg, Pa. delivered the opening sermon Tuesday for the conference which will continue through Sunday.

Organizational meetings followed Wednesday, with an address by the Rev. French C. Flack, of Kingsport, Tenn. Dr. I. Albert Moore of the Washington District delivered the annual message Wednesday evening.

Dr. McCandless Poses a Dual View of the South's Social Conventions

Mon. 6-18-56

"What the North generally has done is to accept the social conventions of the South while condemning the reasons for those conventions," the Rev. Dr. Hugh McCandless declared in a sermon yesterday. P.33-C

¶He preached at the Protestant Episcopal Church of the Epiphany, York Avenue and Seventy-fourth Street, on "The North and Segregation."

Dr. McCandless said that absolutely equal opportunities to serve and absolutely equal rights to live as one wishes are the only conditions that a religious man can consider tolerable, and those are the conditions for which we must work actively."

He went on to ask members of the congregation to examine themselves in these respects:

¶"Do you indulge in sweeping generalizations which are not recognized as prejudices because they are kindly and appreciative? For example, do you feel that all Puerto Ricans have a sense of rhythm, that all Frenchmen are gay, that all Negroes are amiable, that all Jewish men are wise? If you don't know any exceptions to these impressions, it means you don't really know enough members of these races to have an opinion.

¶"Do you belong to any voluntary associations which are made up of people of different backgrounds? If so, has the number of these increased in the last ten years? If not, have you any plans to do something about this? Your answers should tell you whether or not you are leading or trailing behind the change that is occurring right now.

¶"Do you know any members of other races and faiths well enough so that they themselves have brought up the matter of race or religion with you? Your answer to this question should show you what your attitude really appears to others to be."

Besides the measures passed or pending, another segregation bill of broad scope has been drafted for introduction by Rep. McKay. It would prohibit race mixing in athletic contests, in public meetings, restaurants and theaters.

McKay had it ready this week with withdrew it to let other legislators study the bill.

Far-Reaching Measures Taking Shape In Legislature's War On Integration

Sun. 3-11-56 Montgomery, Ala.

By REX THOMAS
Associated Press Writer

Far-reaching new measures have been woven into the widening pattern of legislation designed to preserve racial segregation in Alabama.

With the present special session of the Legislature scarcely more than a week old, bills have been introduced to:

Allow cities to dispose of public recreational facilities to prevent integration there.

Empower railroads and buses to refuse to haul passengers who won't abide by 'reasonable" rules and regulations on seating accommodations.

Resolutions have been adopted in one house or the other urging the U.S. Supreme Court to "modify" its anti-segregation decrees in public schools, and asking Congress to appropriate funds to transport Negroes out of the South.

And already enacted into law at previous legislative sessions since the historic school integration decisions of 1954 are measures aimed at:

Keeping Negroes out of white schools below the college level.

Allowing school officials in two rural Black Belt counties to fire teachers who advocate non-segregated classrooms.

Making public the membership lists of the National Assn. for the Advancement of Colored People in two counties.

Along with those efforts to maintain the traditional color barriers, a proposed constitutional amendment will be submitted to the voters in a special statewide election Aug. 28 in a separate approach to the school integration problem It would give parents "freedom of choice" to say whether their children attend integrated or segregated classes.

Most of the efforts toward preserving the color line since the present legislative session started March 1 have been directed at the University of Alabama and other state-supported institutions of higher learning.

Advertiser

They were prompted by the violence at the university following the enrollment of its first Negro student, Autherine Lucy, who has since been expelled and its seeking readmission. P. 2-A

One measure, by Rep. Charles McKay of Talladega, would require new students at any tax-supported college to submit written endorsements from three graduates of that school.

Since no Negro has ever graduated from a state-controlled white college, applications for admission to white schools would have to be recommended by white alumni.

An even stronger measure came from Rep. Pat Boyd of Pike County. It would authorize college authorities to investigate the background of all prospective students and turn them down if their presence would endanger the "lives, health or welfare" of students or the school.

Applicants also would be judged on their "morals, conduct, health and personal standards" and their "home environment."

The Legislature itself could take over the administration of any institution under still another bill sponsored by Rep. Virgis Ashworth of Bibb County.

A constitutional amendment, it would empower the Legislature to convene itself in special session and take over the duties of college trustees any time conditions became "so turbulent" that school authorities couldn't cope with them.

Another proposed change in the state's organic law would give city governing bodies authority to sell or lease parks, swimming pools and golf courses to private operators to keep them segregated. It was introduced by Sen. Gerald Bradford of Clarke County.

In transportation, Sen. Sam Engelhardt of Macon County proposed to give railroad and bus companies the right to make "reasonable" rules for seating passengers "to maintain peace and good order or to preserve property."

The operator could refuse to ride anyone who contested the seating arrangement.

Members of the House unaimously approved a resolution this week appealing to the Supreme Court to ease its anti-segregation stand on the schools, but it hasn't come out of the Senate Rules Committee.

A vote in the Senate is likely next week.

But the upper chamber has asked the House to return Marengo County Sen. E. O. Eddins' resolution asking Congress to provide funds to move Negroes out of the South. It may be rescinded.

One school segregation measure has already become law, enacted by the Legislature last summer.

Sponsored by Engelhardt, it would give local shcool boards almost unlimited police power to tell individual pupils where to attend grade school and high school classes.

Although neither race is mentioned by name, the purpose is to let the boards assign white pupils to white schools and Negroes to Negro schools.

In separate acts, the Legislature also authorized boards in Macon and Marengo Counties to fire any teacher who advocates race-mixing in the schools. Negroes outnumber white residents in both counties.

Another bill affecting only Marengo County requires the registration of membership lists of any organizations existing in that county. Its avowed purpose was to get the names of members of the NAACP.

In Wilcox County, the NAACP and any similar organization is required to pay a registration fee of $100 plus $5 for each member.

The "Freedom of Choice" constitutional amendment to be voted on Aug. 28 would permit integrated schools if the parents chose them, but no pupil would be compelled to attend class with members of the opposite race.

It also proposes to give the Legislature authority to abolish the public school system if the members felt that course advisable.

Mixed Committee Needed

(Clarke County Democrat, Grove Hill)

As Negroes enroll in the NAACP, the whites are busily organizing White Citizens Councils. At a meeting sponsored by the latter organization last week, 15,000 people crowded into the Cow Coliseum in Montgomery to hear Sen. Eastland of Mississippi speak. These developments, along with the high-handed performance of Arthur Shores and his protege, Autherine Lucy, on the one hand, and mixed mobs of white students and outsiders on the other, give unmistakable evidence that race relations in the South are fast being disrupted.

Birmingham Ala.

Shortly after the Supreme Court had handed down its political ruling on segregation, we suggested that the well-meaning whites and Negroes of the South should form an organization for the peaceable discussion and solution of problems which confront the two races.

The majority of Southern white are friendly to the Negro and want to see him make all the advancement possible. The majority of the Negroes also are friendly and want no trouble between the races. These whites realize that the Negroes need better schools and have been working to see that such schools and other facilities are provided. The Negroes naturally want these things but want to obtain them through peaceful means.

As matters now stand, agitators and trouble makers on both sides can do irreparable harm. Mon. 2-27-56

It is far easier to recruit members for organizations such as the NAACP and the White Citizen Council—organization which appeal to the prejudices, the emotions and the hatreds of each race—than for an organization such as we suggest, but a body which includes the wise, calm, friendly members of both races, could do far more good than could either of the others.

Give Congress Power To Overrule Court

P. 14

The time has arrived in our country for an important amendment to be made to the Constitution of the United States.

As a result of the decision of the Supreme Court in the integration matter the general welfare of our people is being very much disturbed and will continue to become worse. It is my opinion that the great majority of colored people are satisfied with equal but not identical privileges with reference to tax-supported public institutions. Birmingham, Ala.

The preamble of our Constitution provides, among other things, to "promote the general welfare." This provision supersedes all other rights set out in the Constitution when the general welfare of our country is in danger. This doctrine of law was relied upon when natural-born Japanese-American citizens were brought inland from the West Coast in World War II because the general welfare of our country was in danger.

Lincoln in his Gettysburg address said "and that the government of the people, by the people, for the people, shall not perish from the earth." Therefore, to maintain and continue the right of general welfare, our Constitution should be amended to provide that if and when the Supreme Court renders a decision that interferes with the general welfare of the people, then in such event the Congress by a three-fourths majority vote of the House of Representatives and a three-fourths majority vote of the Senate, would have the right to declare such a decision null and void, with the amendment further providing that the President could not veto such a law. This would place the final authority in three-fourths of representatives of the people rather than in nine men on the Supreme Court bench. Such a conclusion by a three-fourths majority of intelligent representatives of the people would be more satisfactory for the general welfare of the people than a legal decision of the Supreme Court as now provided in the Constitution.

Alabama Newspapers Doing Fine Job on Race Issue

Wed. 5-9-56 Miami, Fla.

By NIXON SMILEY
Herald Staff Writer

MONTGOMERY, Ala. — Alabama newspapers are doing a fine job of covering the developments in the integration-segregation issue.

SMILEY

But much of the credit must go to Northern newspaper reporters who came to Alabama to cover the Montgomery bus boycott by Negro riders and the Autherine Lucy case at the University of Alabama in Tuscaloosa.

This is the opinion of a person here who was close to the scene and who witnessed the action of Alabama newspapers and the Northern reporters.

THE MONTGOMERY boycott and Lucy stories had received routine coverage until the hot reporters from New York arrived with eager city editors breathing down their necks even from the long distance.

The Northern reporters followed every lead and kept wires humming with new developments

Wire service bureaus in the North began to ask questions of their bureaus in Alabama, and kept pressing for confirmation of the developments reported by the New York newspapermen.

Local press services and local newspaper staffs went into a frenzy of action to keep pace with the out-of-state reporters who were giving their full time to the stories.

BEHIND the scene wasn't just a difference in talent or of aggressiveness in collecting and writing news. It's deeper than that.

Although discussion of the desegregation issue isn't taboo in the South, Southern newspapermen often find it an embarrassing subject to ask point-blank questions about or to discuss both sides freely in a newspaper article.

IT'S A SUBJECT charged with terrific conflict. Opinions are sharply divided. As a white person you can be only for segregation, if you are a "patriotic Southerner," or you can be for integration and classed "lower than a nigger."

Strong emotions are involved. Arguments don't often lend themselves to logic. Therefore the sensible try to avoid argument or discussion where differences might be involved.

THE NORTHERN reporter not attuned to Southern sensitiveness, felt no qualms about poking his nose into the issue and asking pointed questions.

And once the Yankee reporter had lifted the veil of reticence from the sacred subject of desegregation, the Southern reporters fell in line and stopped treating it as a thing requiring asbestos gloves.

THE RECENT death of an aged Negro preacher from a stone thrown from a passing car load of rowdy white men was developed for all it was worth and given page one treatment by Birmingham and Montgomery papers.

Although the rock throwing incident did not involve directly the subject of desegregation, the fact that the Negro's death came at a time when desegregation was a prime topic, certainly linked the two in most persons' minds.

HOW NEWSWORTHY the segregation-integration issue is in Alabama may be judged from the fact that a Birmingham paper recently had three stories on page one relating to the subject in one way or another.

I have learned to push the subject aside during conversations with Southerners until I finish my interviews. Once the talk gets on the Negro, it's hard to bring the conversation back to the original topic.

Summerlin, Ward agree—

Racial, pension proposals draw varied reactions

BY FRED TAYLOR, News staff writer

Opposition to Gov. James E. Folsom's plan for a bi-racial commission and to the Ward proposal for diverting some $9 million in state funds from the teacher retirement system to school operations. was voiced today by some House members.

But Rep. Vernon Summerlin of Crenshaw, chairman of the House education committee, agreed with Rep. D. W. Ward of Lee that Alabama is not financially able to support two pension systems for teachers, declaring:

"I wish we could afford Cadillacs, but there are too many children in Alabama not getting sufficient training now. I think we should use some of the money we're now appropriating to the teacher retirement system for operating the schools."

REPS. RYAN deGRAFFENRIED of Tuscaloosa, W. L. Martin Jr., of Greene and Bob Kendall, Jr., of Conecuh all declared themselves for maintaining the $4,575,000 annual state appropriation to the Alabama Teachers' Retirement System. Some 32,000 teachers and other educational workers are covered under the system.

Rep. Ward said he would introduce a bill in the House tomorrow to recapture this annual appropriation for at least two years, or a total of $9,150,000 to help ease the school's operating problems.

Ward said he favors knocking out one of the pension systems. The state would continue to pay $1,800,000 yearly for social security matching funds for teachers and other educational employes.

"I'm very much in favor of retiring our teachers on as much as we can give them," said Rep. Martin, Eutaw insurance man.

REP. KENDALL, Evergreen cotton merchant, said he might be willing to divert state appropriations to the retirement fund for a couple of years, but for no longer.

"There's too much uncertainty about financial security for our teachers and I think we should maintain the retirement system as well as social security benefits for them," added Kendall.

Rep. deGraffenried, Tuscaloosa attorney, emphasized he's for maintaining the retirement system, pointing out that the retirement plan is built up on an acturarial basis.

"To curtail state appropriations to the retirement fund would knock it off balance," said deGraffenried.

Summerlin, Luverne business man-farmer, came out strongly against the governor's plan for setting up a bi-racial commission composed of whites and Negroes to study problems growing out of the U. S. Supreme Court integration ruling and to seek to ease racial tensions.

"I think that's integration, itself, when you start putting whites and Negroes on the same commission," said Summerlin. "I'm certainly against it."

KENDALL SAID he is "inclined" to be against the plan, while deGraffenried said he wanted to study the measure before voting for or against it.

Rep. Martin, who originally proposed the resolution calling on Dr. O. C. Carmichael, University of Alabama president, to furnish the Legislature with names of teachers and students who signed a petition urging that Negro Co-ed Autherine Lucy be admitted to the school, said he would press for its adoption. The petition had been circulated before University trustees expelled her.

"I will never vote for any appropriations for our schools or colleges, if we do not maintain segregation," emphasized Martin.

MARTIN said that he and Hale Rep. Charles Ramey, co-sponsor of this resolution, would go before the House rules committee to urge that it be reported favorably.

These and other pending school finance and segregation measures were discussed by the four legislators Sunday on WAPI-WABT's "Legislative Report" program.

Meantime, Alabama lawmakers prepared to meet again tomorrow to push through bills to balance this year's school budget at $108 million and clear the decks for action on several segregation proposals.

All four panelists declared they would press for passage of the Lackey-Edwards bill, of which they are co-sponsors, calling for a long-range business man study of school finances. The State Chamber of Commerce last week threw its support behind this measure, which was reintroduced by Jefferson Reps. Rufus M. Lackey and Jess K. Edwards.

A similar bill was passed by the House 75 to 9 during the last special session of the Legislature, but it was choked off by Senate filibuster, despite the fact that a majority of senators favor it.

REP. deGRAFFENRIED, who introduced it, and Reps. Martin and Summerlin declared themselves for passage of the administration-backed bill to raise the maximum state income tax rate on corporation earnings from 3 to 5 per cent.

Kendall said "frankly, I have an open mind on this proposal, but I lean against it."

All four of the lawmakers declared themselves against removing sales tax exemptions on industrial and farm items. While industrialists oppose the income tax hiking measure, they prefer it over removal of sales tax exemptions on machinery and other items, Summerlin said.

"It's better for a corporation to pay taxes on its earnings than it is to put a tax on its machinery before they make any money," said the Crenshaw legislator.

Summerlin added that "we're in a very healthy condition in Alabama for attracting new industry, with these exemptions in effect." He warned that to knock them out would hurt the program to bring in new business and industry.

However, Rep. Martin said he did not think it was fair to require farmers to pay sales tax on machinery items, while manufacturers were exempt from the levy.

Rep. deGraffenried had warned industrialists, who appeared before the House ways and means committee, of which he is a member, that they "might be stepping into a trap" by opposing the income tax hiker. He referred specifically to the likelihood that this might lead to an all-out drive to remove the sales tax exemptions.

Martin, deGraffenried and Summerlin said they believed that when the Legislature balances the school budget, the special session would be adjourned sine die.

But Kendall said he thought a recess of a couple of months was more likely. This would give the lawmakers a chance to determine fairly definitely the rate of increases in revenues from present taxes.

Integration Foes Said

Constitution Atlanta, Ga.

Censored

Fri. 5-18-56

SELMA, Ala., May 17 (AP)—Rep. John Bell Williams (D-Miss) said tonight a form of press and radio censorship has been imposed on news which might show segregation advocates in a favorable light.

Williams came here for an address to the Dallas County Citizens Council on the second anniversary of the Supreme Court's May 17, 1954 decision which held segregation in schools to be unlawful.

CALLS IT BLACKEST DAY

"This is the second anniversary of 'Black Monday,'" Williams said, "a day that will live in infamy, a day that will be remembered as the blackest day in the history of Anglo-Saxon jurisprudence."

Williams said that "indeed this should be a day of mourning as it recalls the anniversary on which the Constitution of the United States was torn into shreds and rendered meaningless by a group of ambitious politicians occupying positions on the highest tribunal in the land."

SEEK SHELTER

The congressman said in his prepared address that the "liberals" who support integration "in the light of truth . . . cringe and seek shelter behind pious declamations and idealistic platitudes." He added:

"So strong have they become in recent years, though, that they control a great segment of the press and radio of this country, to the extent that a form of censorship has been imposed against the dissemination of news and information which might, directly or indirectly, reflect favorably on the attitudes of Southern white people.

ARE HELD UP

"News stories that justify Southern attitudes are deliberately withheld from print; statements favoring segregation by Southern leaders are deliberately distorted to make the author appear as a bigoted fool; words are lifted from the context to make it appear that we in the South hold our Negro friends in utter contempt which is, of course, contrary to all the teachings and tenets of the Southern people.

"They seize upon interracial crimes in the South, amplify them out of proportion to their importance, and by use of half-truths, innuendo, and in some cases outright lies, try to make it look as if lynching Negroes is a favorite Southern pastime among the white people.

ENCOURAGE APOLOGIES

"They encourage Southern writers to become apologists for their people, and make betrayal of their own people the price to be paid for high journalistic awards.

"Even a mediocre writer, if he is a Southerner, can scale the heights of journalistic acclaim by the simple expedient of depicting his neighbors as fools, bigots, ignoramuses, hate peddlers and sadistic fiends who take delight in murdering those of the minority races."

Where Tradition Is Sinister

EDITOR, THE ADVERTISER—I have just read the U.S. News & World Report article dealing with the Alabama primary. I noted the reference to The Advertiser.

I recently saw reference to a series of articles that you are doing on racial clashes in the North and West.

Roi Ottelly, a Negro writer, has just completed a series of 10 articles on the Negro problem outside the South. I assume that you receive the Chicago Tribune regularly in an exchange. I found no fault with the articles other that than he grouped the Negro migrants into one mass. Most Southern Negroes know that the majority of Southern whites think of and treat Negroes as individuals. The Negroes who respect themselves have the respect of the majority of the whites among whom they live.

I am fully aware of the fact that there are elements among both white and black who incite trouble. While I have been out of the South for a number of years, I do not believe that the Negroes that I grew up knowing really have hatred in their hearts for me and other whites. Most of the old ones are no longer living. My brothers write to me telling of the death of younger ones and I am saddened by the news of their death. I do not hate Negroes, neither do other white people of the South.

I have spent most of my adult life in urban centers where there were racial and ethnic groups and I have never seen it very pleasant for these groups to mingle in schools or socially. I am reminded of an Italian who was in the Army with me. He fell into a ditch over in France and called for help to get out. A bunch of fellows from a New York Irish regiment came by and pulled him out because he had said that his name was Mallony. When they saw that he was a "wop," they were going to shove him back into the ditch. When you undertake to mix racial or ethnic groups, you have friction.

I am inclosing a clipping or two. The cartoon by Justus of The Minneapolis Star is somewhat representative of the source from which much of the ill-will is being spawned. The liberal cult of which he is representative find every thing traditional to be evil and sinister.

The inference is that the White Citizens Councils are serving the designs of the commies.

Every real American should know and recognize the phony liberals for what they really are.

Southern Editor Tries To Duck The Issue

Advertiser Sat. 5-12-56 P. 4-A

Editorial In The Daily Republic, Mitchell, S.D.

Montgomery, Ala.

DURING the early phase of the Negro boycott of Montgomery, Ala., buses, newsmen representing Northern papers swarmed al lover the city room of The Montgomery Advertiser, asking questions of Editor-in-Chief Grover Cleveland Hall Jr. He asked questions right back at them and decided from the answers that the North's own racial problems were being covered by its press in a "conspiracy of silence."

To prove his point, Hall launched a daily series on Northern discrimination, under the standing head: "Tell It Not In Gath, Publish It Not In The Streets Of Askelon" (thus David voiced the wish that the slaying of King Saul and his son Jonathan in battle with the Philistines could be kept from the Philistines themselves lest they rejoice).

The Advertiser series, gotten together principally by long-distance telephone, quoted Mayor Orville Hubbard of Dearborn, Mich., as bragging that not a single Negro could get a place to live in his city of 114,000, although 15,000 of them worked there. It reported also that Chicago had assigned 150 police to the Trumbull Park development to prevent violence over an influx of Negro residents.

CHORTLED Hall: Chicago race relations "seem incredibly violent to a Southerner," since "in all the Confederacy, there's not a single Negro family I know of that needs police protection." That is a remarkable statement, considering the slaying of Negroes in Mississippi, the bombing of Negro homes in Florida, the attack on singer Nat "King" Cole in Birmingham and the Autherine Lucy case in Tuscaloosa, both of which cities are right in Hall's own Alabama! And think what would happen if more Southern Negroes sought the equality that is expected as a matter of course by their Chicago cousins!

And, speaking of Chicago, a point that shouldn't be overlooked is the fact that the metropolis is protecting the Negroes' rights in the Trumbull Park district. The police of Tuscaloosa, on the other hand, dismally failed to stand up to the mob that attacked Miss Lucy on the campus of the University of Alabama.

The Advertiser series also charged the Detroit press with burying news of the Rouse case, in which a part Indian family was forced to move out of a Detroit neighborhood after a mob rioted around the house in the belief that they were Negroes.

FAR be it from us to excuse any Northern papers for soft-pedaling Northern intolerance while playing up the same thing in the South. We believe both are legitimate news and should be covered with equal impunity. But we don't think that the fact that there is still room for improvement in the North is any reason why Northern papers should ignore the serious challenge to law and order which is arising in the South.

And, although Editor Hall is loathe to admit it, there is a basic difference in the treatment of the Negroes in the North and in the South.

Where Tradition Is Sinister

Montgomery, Ala.

EDITOR, THE ADVERTISER—I have just read the U.S. News & World Report article dealing with the Alabama primary. I noted the reference to The Advertiser.

I recently saw reference to a series of articles that you are doing on racial clashes in the North and West.

Roi Ottelly, a Negro writer, has just completed a series of 10 articles on the Negro problem outside the South. I assume that you receive the Chicago Tribune regularly in an exchange. I found no fault with the articles other that than he grouped the Negro migrants into one mass. Most Southern Negroes know that the majority of Southern whites think of and treat Negroes as individuals. The Negroes who respect themselves have the respect of the majority of the whites among whom they live.

I am fully aware of the fact that there are elements among both white and black who incite trouble. While I have been out of the South for a number of years, I do not believe that the Negroes that I grew up knowing really have hatred in their hearts for me and other whites. Most of the old ones are no longer living. My brothers write to me telling of the death of younger ones and I am saddened by the news of their death. Resurgence Of Moderation

Montgomery, Ala.

The Lee County Bulletin

Three important political events in the South this week gave evidence of a strong tide of sentiment running in favor of moderation and good sense as the region continues to struggle with its vexing problems.

First was Texas Sen. Lyndon Johnson's smashing victory over Gov. Allan Shivers in the fight for control of the state's Democratic national convention delegation. Adv. 5-13-56

Gov. Shivers represented the extremist, irresponsible sentiment. The racebaiters, Dixiecrats, and KKK-type breast beaters were on his side.

Contrarily, Sen. Johnson was supported by the moderates who plainly were sick and tired of the Shivers demagoguery.

Second important event indicating impatience with demagoguery was the landslide win by Gov. Leroy Collins over a field of five opponents in Florida's Democratic primary.

The chief issue developed by Gov. Collins' opponents was race. They claimed that he had not taken a vigorous enough stand in support of segregation and that he actually favored gradual integration. Gov. Collins denied the charge, but pleaded for less heat and more light.

The third event addressed itself to a different kind of extremism: that of McCarthyism. In winning the Democratic nomination for the U.S. Senate seat which he lost in 1950 due to the rabid McCarthy's smear tactics, Maryland's Millard Tydings raised the hope that his state has its feet back on the ground.

Of course, there was the victory in Alabama by Rep. Charles McKay, white citizens council leader, in his race for Democratic national committeeman. But there is strong evidence that extremism on the racial issue was not the only major factor in his win, although it had much to do with it.

Overall, the signs point to a resurgence of the attitudes of moderation and of calm judgment. The hopes of all of us in the South ride with Liyndon Johnson, Leroy Collins and others who, despite the temptation to demagogue, in these critical times are preaching the intelligent Christia napproach to our frightful problems.

Baldwin Leadership

The Baldwin Times

In keeping with a rising trend of sentiment in the South in connection with the recent anti-segregation laws passed on a national level, the citizens of Baldwin County have banded together in an organization pledged to support and maintain the highest ideals of Southern traditions.

A group like the Baldwin County Citizens' Council, had it fallen into the wrong hands or chosen less intelligent leaders, could have made a mockery of the principles it stood for. Instead, Baldwin can be proud of the fact that the citizens who have taken an active part in its formation are sensible, clear-thinking adults who mean malice toward nobody, and are dedicated only to keeping peace in our county and upholding our way of life.

Eye For Eye, Tooth For Tooth

EDITOR, THE ADVERTISER—I have today sent a postcard to our two senators and to George Grant, our district representative in Congress. It follows: Montgomery, Ala.

Dear Mr. Grant:

The CAA disclosed it will not provide funds to cities and communities for equal but segregated facilities in the airports of the South. I urge you to cut off all funds proposed for CAA appropriations. And eye for an eye; a tooth for a tooth should be the policy of the South from now on against the "liberals" of the North.

Steps must be taken to curtail and define through constitutional amendment the assumed dictatorial powers of our Supreme Court. Its members should be elected by the American Bar Association from an approved list of lawyers, and not by appointment of politicians by politicians.

I have been much interested in your published in Askelton, not mentioned on the streets of Gath series. I have cut many clippings and sent them north to friends. I think you are doing a lot of good and helping the South in the unequal fight. I hope that you also think that our Supreme Court should be made to confine itself to settling interstate quarrels and not be allowed to meddle in intrastate matters.

Laws Must Change

Editor, The Advertiser:

White and colored people have lived together in America ever since it became a sovereignty and both of them have shared the suffering and prosperity as well as the freedom of its laws. Likewise, both of them have shown unshaken faith and love toward each other through all of the events of time.

I know that we are going to meet the present transitory social disorder and solve it with calmness and dignity. The two races must never cease to exercise continued love and faith toward each other and be willing to share with each other the things God has provided for us all. Public freedom should be awarded every one equally, but social equality is not for laws to adjust; for God only can integrate life on earth.

Segregation has kept men apart in the past and has kept them from knowing each other and men who can't know and understand each other they likewise can't know God. Those who are inclined to hate the Negro are those who have never come close enough to him to know him. I do enjoy the fine letters that white friends write about us when they say they love us. I don't believe that there are really many white people who downright hate Negroes, but there are teeming thousands who yet don't know the Negro well enough to judge him.

Time has caught up with us. States like individuals must realize that times are not as they were 100 years ago and the laws that govern men then are inadequate to meet the needs of men today. The traffic, game, sporting, and almost every other law has had to change to meet the demands of time. Tradition as well as laws must take their share of adjustments. I am a Negro, but I heartily believe in states' rights, I also believe in human rights, and in all rights that are really right, but above all, I believe in individual and equal rights.

When justice is withheld for fear of mob violence, it will give the hooded monsters control of our governments and there will be no safety on earth. It may be the Negro today but will be the Jew or Chinaman tomorrow, and finally it will be blue-blooded white man. I have observed and found it to be true that whatever is practiced on Negroes will finally be practiced on the white. If the white people of America want to remain free they must free the Negro everywhere, both North and South.

So Fully Packed

Editor, The Advertiser:

All in all, I never read an edition of a newspaper which was more interesting to me than your Sunday, May 6, issue. Your editorials were good. The one on "The Negro Vote" contained the kind of information that will make people think.

Likewise Ingram's column, "Negro Vote Saved Folsom From Third Place," on Pg. 3-B contributed additional material for developing the same thought.

Certainly the dispatches from Paris on the "3 Wise Men;" from Minneapolis on the election of a Negro to the position of the highest lay-leadership in the (white) Methodist Church; the Denver dispatch on the conviction of John Gilbert Graham; the Dallas dispatch on Sen. Johnson's victory, the Montgomery AP story headed "Dark Shadow Falls On Folsom," and the "Domino Set" by Joe Azbell could not have more reader interest.

More than all else please let me commend you for the admirable crusading spirit and colorful appeal in your notable editorials and writings on the segregation issue.

The last election was the best and most decisive election ever held in Alabama. The results are due in part to the efforts of the White Citizens' Council but even this could not have accomplished the result except for the support of the press and the fine editorial leadership throughout the state. None contributed more to this than you.

Folsom Threatens Nullification Move

Post-Herald Wed. 5-23-56

Birm. Ala.

Blasts High Court Work Law Decision

MONTGOMERY, May 22 (U.P.) — Gov. James E. Folsom said today he may resort to the doctrine of nullification if the U. S. Supreme Court insists on "trying to cram force bills down our throats."

The governor's statement stemmed from a U. S. Supreme Court decision yesterday outlawing state "right to work" laws governing the railroad industry.

"If such force bills are pushed upon our state, then I will immediately call another special session of the Legislature and again recommend the ordinance of interposition or nullification," Folsom said.

Alabama passed a "right to work" law in 1953, but Folsom has said he is opposed to it in theory and would work for its repeal.

Under its provisions, a worker is not required to join a union unless he so desires. Eighteen states have such laws.

The Alabama Legislature already has passed a nullification resolution declaring null and void the high court's segregation decrees.

The resolution, authored by Rep. Charles McKay, who defeated Folsom in the May 1 Democratic primary for National Democratic Committeeman, became law without the governor's signature.

Folsom called the resolution "hogwash" and urged the Legislature to call a constitutional convention to enact nullification "legally."

"I recommended four constitutional conventions and I would like to point out that an ordinance could have accomplished legally in one of them," Folsom said. "I didn't veto the resolution of nullification. I just did not sign it because it was of no effect as a resolution."

He added "while I didn't sign the resolution, I did sign the only real segregation bill passed by the Legislature and that was the freedom of choice bill which is in no way a force bill."

Autos Of White Minister, Negroes Splashed With Acid

Montgomery, Ala.

Aug. 12-11-56

Seven automobiles, including six owned by Negroes and one belonging to a white minister who is conducting "brotherhood" services for Negroes here, have been damaged by acid during the past week

The most recent incident occurred Sunday night when a foreign-make station wagon owned by the Rev. Ashton Jones of Atlanta, a white minister, was damaged slightly by acid.

The Rev. Jones, who represents the Brotherhood of the World Society, was showing a film at the home of a Negro pastor, the Rev. W. F. Alford, 623 Union, at the time of the incident.

The vehicle is decorated with the symbol of the organization, the hands of a Negro and white clasped firmly.

The Rev. Jones is staying at the home of the Rev. Robert Graetz during his services here. The Rev. Graetz, white minister of an all-Negro Lutheran Church, has been active in the bus boycott.

Five of the other six vehicles damaged were apparently struck by acid at the same time.

The five were parked at the intersection of Bullock and South Holt streets last Wednesday night while their owners attended a P-TA meeting.

Negro owners of the damaged cars included Otis Arrington, 3339 W. Tuskegee Circle; Edward Stephens, 3352 E. Tuskegee Circle; Richmond P. Smiley, 749 Holt; Henry J. Allen, 3323 Roundtree Drive and James E. Thornton, 2701 W. Edgemont.

Smiley, who owned a 1956 Dodge, said the acid apparently had been "shot out of some sort of gun."

"Whoever did it must have had a pressure gun of some sort as the acid was shot in a straight line from the rear to the front of my car, and right on down the line to the other cars," Smiley explained. "I don't know what sort of acid it was, but it ate the paint right off."

The one other case where an auto was damaged by the acid occurred Saturday night. The owner, Milton Franklin, Negro, 329 N. Ripley, said his car was parked in front of his home at the time.

Police Chief G. J. Ruppenthal said reports had been filed on all seven incidents and that an investigation is in progress.

A Northerner's Tour Of Dixi

EDITOR, THE ADVERTISER — My name is Steve Stavis, Johns Road, Marblehead, Mass. For nearly two months I have been pursuing my trade as a salesman throughout the South.

When I say the South, I do not mean Miami or other noted resorts. I mean the South of the red earth farming areas, the Deep South of Alabama, Georgia and Mississippi. I have been to all of the big cities in each of these states. I have stayed for days at a time in each of the following cities: Montgomery, Tuscaloosa, Selma, Mobile and Dothan, Ala.; Dublin, Albany, Thomasville, Cairo and Blakely, Ga.; Hattiesburg, Vicksburg and Natchez, Miss.

I am writing this, sir, because the powers that allow me to think and see and feel have undergone a change and I do not wish to leave this gentle Southern earth in silence.

Before this trip the South was a stranger to me. It wasn't so much of a stranger, however, that from my home in the North I didn't know of its Klu Klux Klans, its Huey Long and its Bilbo, its Emmett Till case. It was never a complete stranger, though, for I read of its Negroes and how badly they were treated.

But I have come here now and I have seen. I wish it were possible for all thinking people in the nation to come and to see what I have seen.

They would know first of all that if the situation were reversed, that if the masses of Southern Negroes were in reality masses of Northern Negroes, the Negro, in his present Southern way of life would have less white friends and less help in the North than he now has in the South. If, on a morning not too long ago the people could have been with me, they would have seen a white farmer in Dublin, Ga., pick up the injured son of his Negro employe, and, while the father looked on, rush the boy to the hospital. During the incident, not one word was said between the farmer and the Negro father. It was as though what happened had happened before in many ways and many forms, and it would happen again and when it did the white man would again pick up the Negro boy and the boy's father would watch and there would not be a word said between them. This episode taking place in the South? No, it could not be, at least not in the South that was locked in my mind. But it did and it was as though I had wronged a man, a whole race of men in thinking what I did and I thought then that distance is not the proper atmosphere in which to pass judgment.

SHOW OF FORCE

The conflict in the South is not a conflict between the white man and the Negro in the South. It is a conflict arranged by a Northern Negro organization that now, having the power of the Sureme Court ruling behind it, is flexing its muscles and means to cram integration down the throats of the Southerners.

The NAACP is now having its day. It is acting not out of wisdom but out of an impending sense of power. If the motives of the NAACP were honest, they would know they cannot bring about integration by violence. They cannot quicken the process by defying 125 years of tradition. Their actions cannot be justified, for their actions mean violence and they must surely know that the people of the Deep South are in no mood to accept the Supreme Court ruling and have it enforced by a Northern Negro organization at one and the same time.

The thing the NAACP fears the most is that the nation may learn all too soon that the white people in the South are now and have for the last 10 years developing by peaceful means what the NAACP hopes to do by violence. The NAACP fears that if they do not force integration now they will be exposed for what they truly are, the betrayers of the very very thing they say they are fighting for.

I know that in the Deep South there are two ways of life, the white and the Negro. The history of the white South has such hallowed depth that its family ties are the strongest in the nation. The history of the Negro South is one of scant material possession, little or no education, but a people free of worry, of conventional standards. The two ways of life are integrating to an extent even at this moment. The reason for this is not noble. It is sheer necessity. The Negro population in vast sections of the Deep South overwhelm the white population, and yet in those areas, as it is all over the South, the whites carry 90% of the tax burden. Despite this, and the fact that over 80% of the people on relief in the Deep South are Negroes, I have not visited a county in the Deep South where the Negro schools are not models to behold.

SHARING THE RESPONSIBILITY

The white Southerner knows that if his earth is ever to realize economic prosperity, the Negro has got to absorb a far greater share of the financial responsibility. And here is the heart of the local problem. While more and more Negroes are responding to a better community life, the vast majority are still rebelling against changing their way of life.

It is very true that Southern Negroes as a whole have less of everything, including less need to worry. There are very few heart attacks in Negro communities, and I have come across no Negro psychiatrists. A vast number of Negroes look forward to their Saturday night and don't worry too much about Monday. If they're hungry or sick they know they'll be taken care of.

The material and social sickness of the Negro in the Deep South will improve only as quickly and to the degree that he wants it improved. But it is improving. The NAACP cannot hurry the process, and violence will destroy all the progress that has been made so far.

It is of extreme importance for we in the North to know that the white South is much more of a friend to the Southern Negro than we have been led to believe. It is also important for us to know that the NAACP is apparently interested first in its own strength and second in the destiny of the Southern Negro. The Supreme Court wisely did not set a time for integration. Is the NAACP wiser than the Supreme Court—or are there other motives?

Meany And The South

The Dallas Morning News

GEORGE MEANY, the boss of organized labor's millions, deplores groups in the South who have organized to keep segregation.

Montgomery, Ala.

"Economic boycott" and intimidation of Negroes are chosen instruments of the White Citizens' Councils' hate-mongering campaign," says an AFL-CIO executive council statement, adding: "Many acts of violence have come in the wake of this campaign." P. 4-A

Both hotheads and decent, sensible people are in the Citizens Councils—just as hotheads and the sensible are in labor's millions.

The "hate-mongering campaign" and "acts of violence" in the South are infinitesimal compared to the violence against body and property in the many strikes by labor to achieve its aims.

Meany says Southern groups are challenging the Supreme Court's segregation decision—in effect, challenging the law. But on the same day he erupted, 47 strikers were convicted of contempt of court in Columbus, Ohio, in connection with the Westinghouse strike. They had violated a court order limiting picketing.

The News does not condone lawlessness in any form. But in these days of sectional emotionalism, it would remind that many of those condemning the South in its trying period themselves have much to explain.

EDITOR, THE ADVERTISER—I read in this morning's paper that George Meany, AFL-CIO president, completely opposes our President's and Adlai Stevenson's views on gradual integration and the issuing of federal educational funds without the integration stipulation.

Well, I tell him here and now they speak with the greatest truth. I applaud them! Yes, integration will come but it must come gradually or this danger of civil war that they speak of will indeed become a horrible reality. The Southern people are not going to have integration rammed down their throats. If our uninformed Yankee countrymen will listen to their informed leaders who speak with the true consideration of all the American people at heart, and only then, will our country be truly united.

I urge all our Alabama friends to rally to the support of a man who is not afraid to state his honest beliefs—Adlai Stevenson. If a man is honest in his campaigning, there's a much better chance of his living up to his beliefs in office. Then when he is elected, let's make sure we have senators and representatives up there in Washington who will actively back him up and make sure he is kept fully aware of all our problems. Here, I think, is a man who will be genuinely concerned.

Legislators Give Thought To Segregation, Spending

Advertiser Montgomery, Ala. 2-16

Sun. 12-16-56

By REX THOMAS
Associated Press Staff Writer

Alabama legislators are devoting more and more thought to the approaching biennial session with promised emphasis on segregation and spending.

The Supreme Court decision outlawing bus segregation has added a new chapter to the continuing fight over racial barriers since the Legislature ended a special session early this year.

Several house and Senate members have started working on legislation to preserve the traditional separate seating of white and Negro passengers despite the court decree, but there is no agreed plan thus far.

Rep. N. S. Hare of Monroe County, for instance, has drafted a bill to give women passengers of either race the right to occupy an entire seat with the right to refuse to share it with another.

Hare says that could prevent racemixing to some degree. He also has something in mind to give bus companies authority — and protection under the state law — to regulate seating "in the interest of preventing violence."

JUDICIAL IMMUNITY

Other recommendations have been made. President Jack Owen of the Public Service Commission, for example, has suggested making bus drivers justices of the peace to give them authority to enforce their orders and with the hope of making them immune from prosecution as judicial officers.

Another proposal is to follow the patterns of railroads and authorize bus lines to sell first class tickets for seats in one part of a bus and unreserved fares for accommodations in another part.

Most of those suggestions, however, depend more or less on voluntary action by the bus companies. Whether they would risk damage suits of civil rights prosecution remains to be seen.

In another field, segregationists are still looking for a fool-proof way to keep public schools segregated. Two new laws are on the books — the Placement Act and the newly adopted "Freedom of Choice" amendment — but neither has been tested.

The placement law gives local school boards wide latitude in deciding where each individual child shall attend school. The "Freedom of Choice" act allows parents to say whether they want their children to attend segregated or integrated classes.

NO COLLEGE LAWS

No legislation has been passed to preserve the segregation pattern on the college level, and one Negro student, Autherine Lucy Foster, has already been admi: to the University of Alabama, although she has since been expelled.

Others may be admitted unless the legislature finds a way to prevent it, and no agreeable solution was found at the special session this year or the regular term in 1955.

Rep. Charles W. McKay of Talladega County has offered a bill to require prospective students to submit letters of recommendation from three former students of the college they seek to enter. Since no Negro has ever graduated from a state-supported white school in Alabama, the endorsements would have to come from white persons.

However, McKay said his measure probably wouldn't work without some modification. He held it in committee for future consideration.

TAXES, SPENDING

Taxes and spending also will come in for major attention when the Legirslature meets in May. Educators are already saying there won't be enough money this year to meet the full school appropriations, approved by the Legislature for the current biennium.

Several interim subcommittees are studying the state's revenue structure and will recommend some changes. But Gov. James E Folsom, whose administration has seen taxes increased 20 million dollars a year since he started his second term two years ago, has said he won't stand for any more.

Folsom's own spending policies probably will get a thorough going over from the legislators. He has been widely criticiaed for his liberal use of the executive mansion fund and recently announced plans to repay $5,180 which he spent for food "and other items."

Under present laws, the governor can spend $310,000 a year from three separate funds with virtually no restrictions as long as he says they are for public use. Several legislators have said they think some stricter limitation should be imposed.

News Sun. 12-11-56

MONTGOMERY, Ala., Dec. 11 —(AP)—Acid splashing of 10 cars, all but one belonging to Negroes, is under investigation by Montgomery Police Chief G. J. Ruppenthal said yesterday.

The 10th vehicle, a combination car-trailer, belonged to a white minister from Atlanta here for a Negro-sponsored racial institute last week. The Rev. Ashton Jones said symbols of brotherhood on the vehicle were marred by acid attacks both Saturday and Sunday nights while the vehicle was parked in front of Negro meetings.

Five of the cars were parked in front of a Negro Parent-Teacher Assn. meeting last Wednesday night, three belonging to teachers at Alabama State College were parked by their residences on the Negro campus Sunday night and one was by a private residence Saturday night.

But That Was Different

EDITOR, THE ADVERTISER—During the reign of Earl Warren as governor of California, there occurred riots here in Hollywood that would make the Alabama gathering look like a stiff breeze compared to a full size hurricane.

Opposing studio unions battled with clubs and what have you, and for a long period of time.

Herb Sorrell, leader of the rioters, cheered on his cohorts from a low flying airplane equipped with loud speaker at the "Battle in front of Warner Brothers."

People were injured, property damaged and a major highway (in front of Warner Brothers) was unsafe for neutrals who were compelled to make a wide detour since this highway had the only bridge over the river and road through the hills for a couple of miles.

ALABAMA

Gov. Earl Warren did not intervene.

A newspaper said he had no authority to, under the law, unless requested by local officials.

Yet you will notice how The Los Angeles Times' cartoon points a finger at Alabama!

You might have the matter looked up as a comeback at this holier-than-thou stuff the doctrinaire press is shouting.

'Brainwashing'—Ala. Style

A recent study of Americans held prisoner and subjected to brainwashing by Chinese Reds divulged that many soldiers were easy prey to the lure of communism because they had no real knowledge of the meaning of democracy.

The tragic story of Milton and Minnie Lucy, parents of Autherine J. Lucy, is an example of the same kind of brainwashing—and possibly for many of the same reasons as those applied to American prisoners. Mr. and Mrs. Lucy are just as captive in their Selma, Ala., environment as any P.O.W. behind the barbed wire of a prison stockade.

The parents of Autherine Lucy, intimidated and uneasy, state that she had been taught to "stay her distance from white folks." They profess dismay that their daughter would become a central figure in an attempt to bring a semblance of democracy to Alabama. With downcast gaze they claim that Autherine "didn't get her new ideas from home."

And what else could they say? Most assuredly Autherine could not have gotten her "new ideas" from home—because her "home" was like home for so many Negroes in the South. It was a refuge from the sharp antagonism and ceaseless discriminations of a systematic hatred that forever kept Negroes in a subservient condition. It was a place where uncertainty, fear and frustration were inbred, generation after generation, until there could be no sense of belonging to a society as a whole.

Democracy as a social or political phiolosophy—as a way of life—was something that Mr. and Mrs. Lucy could never understand. The opportunities and the challenges of democracy had never been for them. Their fear would prevent their seeking them. Their browbeaten outlook on life would make it impossible for them to understand that a chance for a better future might be worth inconvenience and even danger. A search for hope would be incomprehensible in lives that have so long been without hope. Only their belief in God sustained them.

The cruel brainwashing of the South has been indeed effective. By the incessant drumming of an idea it has made even some Negroes believe that second-class citizenship is the inevitable order of things. By unyielding insistence that acceptance of inferiority is the price of a peaceful existence, the South has almost succeeded in depriving the Negro of even the will to resist. Almost—but not entirely!

The Negro of the South, and of the nation, today, has concluded that he will resist by every means at his command. He is determined that if democracy is good for the United States, it is good for him. He has decided that it can be no more painful, or degrading, to be kicked standing up than lying down.

Mr. and Mrs. Lucy lamented, "Before all of this came up, we had plenty of white friends that we could go to their house and knock on their door any hour of the night if we needed help." Maybe that's the tipoff! Maybe the Negro of today is not so much interested in knocking and asking for help as he is in having a door of his own and being able to help himself.

Brainwashing — Alabama style —has so far been a useful tool of prejudice. Alabama, with the rest of the South, has been careful to keep Negroes from securing any real understanding of democracy. Mr. and Mrs. Lucy responded in the only way they knew—by submission to what they believed to be the inevitable.

The sons and daughters of the Mr. and Mrs. Lucys throughout the South today do not regard the humiliation of segregation and discrimination as inevitable — and they have no inclination to submit.—(Kansas City Call.)

In answer to Boutwell—

Lamberth denies Folsom has slate, debate rages

By FRED TAYLOR, News staff writer

A bristling verbal exchange between two of Gov. James E. Folsom's legislative leaders and one of his sharpest critics over the "Folsom slate" today enlivened the May 1 Democratic primary races for public and party offices in Alabama.

Jefferson Sen. Albert Boutwell's assertion that Folsom has a "slate of candidates" but has not announced it publicly because it "would be obnoxious to the public," drew sharp retorts from Sens. Broughton Lamberth of Tallapoosa and E. L. Roberts of Etowah.

"I disagree with the senator from Jefferson," said Lamberth, Folsom's Senate floor leader. "Gov. Folsom does not have a slate."

BUT BOUTWELL said "the word is going out very quietly" at the courthouses rallies where Folsom has been making "report to the people" speeches, "because the people would resent the governor publicly attempting to put over a slate."

Sen. Roberts, assistant administration floor leader, said "I've never heard the governor mention a slate, nor have I heard any of his lieutenants mention it."

SEN. BOUTWELL, Birmingham attorney, said that the governor "heads the slate" in his race for Democratic national committeeman from Alabama, in which he is opposed by Talladega Rep. Charles McKay and Roy McCord, former legislator from Etowah.

Boutwell added that Jasper Judge Roy Mayhall, State Democratic Executive Committee chairman, is Folsom's pick over Supreme Court Justice Davis F. Stakely; that Justice James J. Mayfield is backed by the governor over State Sen. James Coleman for another place on the court; that Judge Rowan Bone, appointed by Folsom to the Court of Appeals, is supported by him over Montgomery Atty. Aubrey M. Cates Jr. and William Conway, Birmingham attorney, for the appellate court post.

SENS. LAMBERTH, Roberts, Boutwell and E. W. Skidmore of Tuscaloosa, who appeared on WAPI-WABT's "Legislative Report" program Sunday, were unanimous in expressing the belief that Gov. Folsom would call another special session of the Legislature after the present one is adjourned sine die April 5.

Folsom declared repeatedly from the stump last week he would summon the lawmakers back to Montgomery to consider his plan for a constitutional convention as the most effective way to solve Alabama's racial problems, if they refused to submit his proposal to the voters in the present session.

THE GOVERNOR said he wanted to be "relieved" of his oath to support the U. S. Constitution on the question of integration of races.

However, Boutwell said "the only way the governor could be relieved of his oath to support the U. S. Constitution would be for him to leave the United States."

Lamberth pointed out that "those men in the 1860s were relieved of their oath to support the U. S. Constitution."

"But this was done by seceding from the union and setting up a separate government," added the Tallapoosa senator. "I don't think we want to do that."

BOTH ROBERTS and Lamberth, who are candidate for alternate delegate-at-large to the Democratic National Convention, said they would not answer questionnaires sent out to all candidates by the White Citizens Councils on the racial question.

"Everybody's for segregation," said Lamberth. "No, I don't intend to answer the questionnaires."

Boutwell asked "If that's true, why did the governor let the student placement bill become law without his signature?"

THE PANELISTS expressed doubt as to whether the Legislature would authorize a constitutional convention for any purpose, if Folsom calls a sixth special session.

"The Legislature hasn't been disposed to vote for a constitutional convention," said Sen. Skidmore, Tuscaloosa attorney, in pointing out that a convention proposal for reapportinment was turned down by the lawmakers in a former special session.

Wilcox Sen. Roland Cooper asserted on a discussion program over WAPI-WABT a week ago that Folsom was seeking a constitutional convention on the racial problem "merely as a roundabout way" of getting a convention to rewrite the state's basic law.

"I'M INCLINED to disagree with Sen. Cooper," said Skidmore. "I think Gov. Folsom is very frank about what he wants to do. In fact, I think that at times he is too frank."

Lamberth tore into Boutwell sacrastically over the constitutional convention proposal when the Jefferson senator said "I don't think the Legislature will call a constitutional convention, because it cannot be limited."

"But you could elect delegates pledged to consider only the racial question," interjected Sen. Roberts.

WHEN BOUTWELL said he did not think this plan would work, he was asked if Alabama had politicians who would not live up to their promises.

"We have some prime examples," Boutwell replied.

Then came Lamberth's sarcastic comment: "I don't think the senator from Jefferson wants to submit anything to the voters. He says 'now is not the time.' He doesn't think we have the 'right' governor."

"Well, a good governor would help," said Boutwell.

Lamberth and Roberts, cosponsors of the Flowers resolution to rescind the McKay interposition resolution, said they would seek to get it passed.

AS TO REPORTS that the Flowers resolution to rescind was intended to "nullify Charlie McKay's candidacy," Sen. Roberts chuckled and said: "If it passed, it certainly wouldn't help him."

Boutwell said reports indicated that Rep. McKay is running "far ahead" of Gov. Folsom for national committeeman.

But Roberts shot back: "That's not what I hear. You apparently haven't been in Northeast Alabama."

It was at this juncture that Sen. Lamberth expressed surprise that Rep. McKay was running for Democratic committeeman.

"CHARLIE McKAY'S daddy is a good friend of mine, and he's a Republican leader," said Lamberth. "I hope you're listening, Sam, and I'm surprised your son didn't follow your Republican leadership."

As to reports that Folsom would put a measure for repeal of the right-to-work law in his next special session call, Lamberth said "I doubt it."

Sen. Skidmore, who led the fight against passage of the right-to-work statute, said he believed that if it were put in the call it "would have a chance of passing."

SKIDMORE and Boutwell expressed strong support of the revised Lackey-Edwards bill, which passed the House 84 to 1 and is on the Senate calendar. Roberts said he probably would support it, but Lamberth said he would not. The amended measure calls for a long-range study of school finances by business men and legislators.

Sen. Roberts said "I'd like for the teachers of Alabama to know that this Legislature has been one of the most conscientious in helping the schools." He pointed to the $600 annual pay raise given teachers and the record $108 million school budget for 1955-56.

IN DENYING that Folsom has a "slate" of candidates in current races, Sen. Lamberth pointed out that Cullman's John E. Drinkard, who is running against Jack Owen for Public Service Commission president, "is a personal friend of Gov. Folsom."

"But Jack Owen and I served in the Marine Corps together and I won't follow such a slate as that," he said.

Billy Tucker, Birmingham insurance man and polio-stricken former Auburn football player, also is running for commission president.

Lamberth also pointed out that Judge Bone, Gadsden lawyer, had run against Roberts for state senator.

Gov. Folsom has said he has a "no slate, no hate, uninstructed and undecided" platform. And he has emphasized his "report to the people" speeches are in no sense speeches in behalf of his candidacy for national committeeman.

BOTH ROBERTS and Lamberth said they did not think the governor was "kidding anybody" and definitely is not using his "report" tour to campaign for himself.

Asked his opinion, Sen. Skidmore said "I don't think it will hurt him any."

Boutwell pointed out that Folsom had made other "reports to the people" by radio and TV, in asserting he considers the governor's tour a campaign tour.

"Now he has his Corn Grinders and is going over the state to make speeches," added Boutwell.

Mrs. Rosa Parks Urges Women Not to Lose Faith

Her Arrest in Montgomery Started Boycott

By ALICE A. DUNNIGAN

WASHINGTON. — (ANP) — "Support the NAACP, live up to the ideals of Mary McLeod Bethume, stick close to Christianity, don't give up faith, and one day we will have the Democracy we are all hoping for."

This was the advice given by Mrs. Rosa Parks to the women attending the "New Crusade" conference sponsored by the National Council of Negro Women at the Statler hotel, Saturday.

Mrs. Parks, whose arrest in Montgomery, Ala., six months ago, set off the spark that lighted the flame for the bus boycott in that city, pledged to "continue in every way I can to make democracy a reality."

"Coming up in a segregated society does something to you, not only to the oppressed but also to the oppressor," said Mrs. Parks. "The sooner the myth of white supremacy is done away with the better off we will be. There is only one race—the human race—and we are all children of one God."

Mrs. Parks referred to the Supreme court decision on school segregation as a "second emancipation." But nothing will be done about it unless the people do something themselves on a community level.

This courageous woman felt that it was her responsibility to do something toward promoting equal justice in her community. She recalled having heard Mrs. Bethune speak, sometime back in the 40's. She remembered that this great leader advised her audience to prepare themselves for any opportunity which might arise, even if one never comes. It is better to do this than to have several opportunities present themselves and you are not prepared for them.

Perhaps it was this advice which inspired Mrs. Parks to attend workshops at the Highland Folk school in Tennessee to discuss desegregation. "This was my first experience of living in an integrated society," stated the speaker.

When she returned home she realized how complacent or contented the people were. She had learned that you must fight for your rights, that you cannot look to the other group to do it for you.

Anxious to do her part to promote better conditions for her people, Mrs. Parks joined the NAACP and worked in many civic groups. "The people of the community knew me," she said. "They knew that I was not a person to say very much. I was not an agitator or troublemaker."

That is why they became so excited, and even angry, when they heard of her arrest for refusing to stand up on a city bus and give her seat to a white passenger.

Southern Editor Refuse To Team Up With Negro Reporter

New York (ANP)—A southern newspaper editor has called off a proposed parallel North-South survey of racial discrimination in New York and Montgomery, Ala., because a Negro reporter was assigned to him for the suggested series.

Wechsler replied that both he and Kempton felt that Poston was the logical choice for the assignment, because of his wide experience and contacts with the city's colored population.

Wechsler suggested that Hall come north to do the series c New York with Poston, then the two return to Montgomery for a similar survey. Results of the surveys were to be published in paralleled columns in both newspapers.

Hall called off the plan saying: "My first proposal and your acceptance did not mesh . . . Your alternate proposal — my reliance on assistance of the well-known Negro reporter, Ted Poston—is obviously an inadequate arrangement for obtaining this particular story."

Notified that Hall was dropping the proposed survey, Wechsler said:

"I think we've said everything that needs to be said about Mr. Hall's refusal to work with a Negro newspaper man. I'm sorry we won't be seeing him."

Wechsler said he was sure Hall "would not expect me to abide by Montgomery's segregation system in handing out assignments on the Post."

Constructive Analysis

The Negro Press Is More Reliable

Editor, The Advertiser:

I was much interested to read in U.S. News & World Report your letter to James A. Wechsler, editor, the New York Post, in which you call for a more objective reporting by the Northern press of racial incidents in their own bailiwicks.

I have more respect for the responsible Negro press on these issues than I do for the Wechslers, etc. Of course there has been considerable criticism of Wechsler and his Post for other matters than the racial issue.

I was also interested to note in U.S. News that your letter addressed to Wechsler has drawn a retort from the edito rof Minneapolis Star & Tribune concerning our criticism of their lack of coverage of racial incidents in that city. This is doubly interesting to me because on Oct. 29, 1954, I had addressed a letter to the editor of that paper reading, in part, as follows:

"In the Oct. 23, 1954, issue of The Pittsburgh Courier it is noted that your publications, with others, will undertake to bring Southern white students and educators to your city to observe what is being done there with integrated schools.

"This of course is a commendable action, and in turn I feel that some action should be taken to bring some of your educators and students to Southern centers where they could attend some of the segregated schools, and then decide whether they feel that the South should willingly follow the actions of your city.

"As one who is much interested in this entire racial matter, and has pursued it over a number of years, I would greatly appreciate it if you would furnish me with a factual breakdown of the attendance in, say, two or three of your intermediate schools, and the same number of your high schools, i.e., the number each of white and colored pupils attending."

Although a stamped and addressed envelope was enclosed for convenience in replying I regret to advise that no such reply was made.

It is very good to find your newspaper interested in attempting to get our Northern friends to give us the facts, and stop trying to alibi or cover up the fact that they, too, have numerous racial incidents, although their Negro population is, generally, limited.

True And Logical

Editor, The Advertiser:

I think your speech on the "Failure of the American press to present a faithful, unsparing picture of American race disharmony from New York to Los Angeles" is the truest, most logical and creditable bit of wisdom which has been read on discrimination against the Negroes since anti-bellum das—and I am up two hours earlier out of a warm Sunday morning bed to tell you so. Now Sir, to make it more constructive, more helpful, more just to the much maligned Southern people on this all too much misrepresented attitude of the South towards colored citizens.

Our Southern states have been so impudently, so crudely misrepresented by the selfishly designing, to the ignorant masses, no John the Baptist could undo the damage already done. But Sir, I believe you have the talent, the eye to see and the will and boldness needed to tell the truth.

Post Office Workers Panicked

Mobile Postmaster Idles NAACP Head

MOBILE, Ala. — The Courier learned last week that the Post Office Department imposed a twenty-eight-day suspension against veteran postman John L. LeFlore, militant NAACP leader in the Deep South.

LeFlore, a thirty-five-year postal employe, was suspended as a results of charges filed against him by Mobile Postmaster Taylor Henry last September. The postmaster sought to have the NAACP official fired from the postal service. The suspension went into effect April 7.

Henry was accused by several postal union leaders of seeking LeFlore's dismissal from the post office service because of the latter's militant work in the civil rights field.

The Mobile postmaster filed the charges against LeFlore several weeks after the NAACP worker had submitted a school desegregation petition to the Mobile school board asking integration in local public schools.

The LeFlore case leaked out to the newspapers some time ago and the Post Office Department received numerous protests from throughout the country against what was described as the prejudiced attitude of Mobile post office officials toward the NAACP leader.

In what was believed to be an unprecendented move in a disciplinary matter, the lily-white state Republican party was said to have thrown its weight into the case against LeFlore. Alabama GOP Chairman Claude Vardaman of Birmingham was said to have written top postal officials in Washington demanding that the Mobile postmaster be upheld in his efforts to fire the NAACP executive secretary and state official.

The Mobile postal union, who feels it may not be safe to divulge their names, says there is a feeling of alarm among local post office workers that protection heretofore provided by Civil Service regulations has become almost non-existent since Henry's appointment about three years ago. He was appointed postmaster by President Eisenhower.

The union leaders explained that a postmaster has certain powers which may be regarded as almost arbitrary. It was further pointed out that such authority gives him the privilege of imposing his will for disciplinary action against an employe, and that a postmaster may contrive to drive from a job any postal worker who may incur his disfavor.

When inquiry was made with regard to petitioning the Post Office Department in Washington for relief from the conditions they describe as "deplorable" in the Mobile post office, these postal workers expressed disappointment with the action so far taken by high officials of the department to protect them from job discrimination, segregation and dismissal from employment.

Alabama Acts To Keep Park Segregation

Law Would Permit Private Ownership

Montgomery, Ala., April 17 (AP)—Governor James E. Folsom has signed a measure aimed at preserving separation of the races at parks and playgrounds in Alabama.

The new law will become effective only if a proposed amendment to the State Constitution is ratified by the voters in a special election August 28.

The amendment would authorize cities, counties, towns, and other subdivisions of the State to sell or give away parks, playgrounds, other recreational facilities, and public-housing projects.

While the measure makes no reference to the racial question, under its provisions a City could give a park to an individual or group and it would immediately become a private facility and not subject to the United States Supreme Court's desegregation decrees.

Mississippi and South Carolina have already enacted similar measures.

The only restriction in the Alabama proposal is that such transfers must first be approved by voters in the areas involved.

A newspaper's gold mine

Afro-American P.2

BY CLARENCE MITCHELL

MONTGOMERY, Ala. — If the elders who make policy in Alabama had any sense they would outlaw segregation just to get rid of the visitors who are here to write about what is going on or out of curiosity. 21-5-6

For a long time the American newspapers neglected the number one story of our time—the colored citizen's fight for rights guaranteed by the U.S. Constitution. Baltimore, Md.

If two bums had a fist fight in an alley in Cairo or Calcutta, most of the leading journals would carry a story about it.

If the bums had the foresight to pretend that they were starting a people's movement to overthrow the government, the same papers would send a squad of well trained correspondents directly to the scene.

ONCE THEY arrive, the correspondents might spend most of their time in local bars and other hotter spots. They would also turn out some hair-raising stories.

Even after they got back home, these correspondents could make a tidy bit of extra spending change by writing about real and imagined customs in the lands they visited.

This puzzled me because it always seemed that there was much more dramatic and newsworthy material in Georgia, U.S.A. than in Georgia, USSR, or some other place with a hard-to-pronounce name.

AT LAST the newspapers have discovered the gold mine in Dixie. They are working it 24 hours a day.

Acting on the theory that there is no such thing as bad publicity, many local sheriffs and jail turnkeys are buying metropolitan dailies to see their names in print for the first time.

Some of them do not know how to read, but they do recognize the letters that spell their names.

At one time the crowd of visiting newsmen became so thick they were interviewing each other without knowing it. Flash bulb cameras go off so frequently local officials no longer blink and squint like less publicized humans.

OF COURSE there is a lot of grumbling about all these newspapermen cluttering up the place. There is also a tendency to get prettied up.

More businessmen now wear neckties and clean shirts. Housewives now take a second look in the mirror to see whether the lipstick is on straight.

More and more, the newsmen are becoming international. Canadians have been around for some time. Now the British have moved in too. Soon there will be a regular international set.

One local newspaper has been running a series on discrimination in the North. This has only alerted those papers that did not have correspondents in the area to send some down.

So far as I am concerned, I hope that the correspondents keep coming. There is nothing like publicity to make wrongdoers run for cover.

Bi-Racial Group To Be Appointed To Study Tension

Sun. 3-3-56

Montgomery, Ala. (ANP) — With a battle theme of "passive resistance," Montgomery's bus-boycotting Negroes vowed last weekend that they will see the protest "to the finish" despite the onset of legal resprisals.

Foot-sore from a city-wide "pilgrimage" of walking which began Friday and continued through Sunday, Negroes were told not to get weary of the hardships brought about by the 12-week old boycott of Montgomery city buses.

"No goal was ever attained without sacrifice," the Rev. Martin Luther King said from the pulpit Sunday.

Rev. King, 27, president of the Montgomery Improvement Association, which has backed the boycott, told members of his Baptist church that "even if the boycott ended now, the Negro in Montgomery has achieved a new dignity."

Shouts of "Amen" greeted the young minister when he declared: "We will not stop now, we will see it to a finish."

The 89 Negroes accused of fostering the boycott against Montgomery City Lines buses answered "not guilty" at arraignment proceedings last week in circuit court.

Judge Eugene Carter set the week of March 19 for trial of all cases.

Defense attorneys filed demurers contesting the indictments which charged violation of the Alabama law against "illegal" boycotting.

Fred D. Gray, young Montgomery Negro lawyer and minister, who is under indictment for unlawful practices because of a segregation suit he filed, was one of two lawyers on hand to represent the defendants. The other was Charles D. Langford, also of Montgomery.

Gray said at the close of hearing that all defendants would demur on "constitutional grounds."

Meanwhile, Gov. James E. Folsom's plan for a 25-member statewide bi-racial commission to study racial tension and settle disputes growing out of the U. S. Supreme Court's desegregation ruling will be presented to the legislature in an early special session.

This was decided after an advisory committee of Alabama editors and publishers approved the governor's proposal to create a commission with noted white and Negro leaders serving on it.

The commission would be composed of a white and Negro member from each of the nine congressional districts, and seven other members from the state-at-large.

Folsom said he would be willing to provide $25,000 from his emergency fund to help finance the commission's work. He told the advisory group that he would call another special session of the legislature probably for March 5.

An estimated 10,000 persons—half of whom stood outside First Baptist Church—attended a mass meeting last Thursday night to pray for "justice to prevail."

"We must use the weapon of love," the Rev. Martin Luther King, Jr., said. "We must have compassion and understanding for those who hate us. So many people have been taught to hate, taught from the cradle. They are not totally responsible."

In a prepared statement following the meeting, the Rev. Ralph D. Abernathy declared: "We have walked for 11 weeks in the cold and rain. Now the weather is warming up. Therefore, we will walk on until some better proposals are forthcomng from our city fathers . . . the protest is still on and approximately 50,000 Negroes have stated that they will continue to walk."

'The Rumors Were Lies'

Advertiser

The following Associated Press story was printed Sunday, but it seems advisable to reprint it here to emphasize the peril of rumor. We in Montgomery need to grasp the significance of this Bessemer story in order to shieuld ourselves. Wed. 2-22-55

Such rumor-mongering is a form of cannibalism, as you see. P. 4-A

You can't stop fools and irresponsible people from starting rumors. But you can render them harmless by refusing to believe them.

Mark well that the Bessemer rumor like many in Montgomery recently turned out to be false and baseless

Mark it well: Montgomery, Ala.

BESSEMER, Ala., Feb. 18 (AP)—Only the usual small sounds of night broke the calm when midnight struck Bessemer. And for that many people were grateful.

Because for five days this suburban industrial city of 30,000 had been in the grip of frenzied, unfounded rumors of an impending racial clash. The rumors said Friday was to be The Day.

The first stories began circulating Monday. They were that Negroes were planning a "push day" for the purpose of creating incidents.

Then rumors circulated that Negroes would attempt to take over buses in the downtown area when the stores closed last night. Hardware and sporting good stores reported heavy sales of guns and ammunition, mostly to white persons.

Beginning yesterday morning, police headquarters, newspapers and radio stations were bombarded with thousands of telephone calls.

"Has there been a race riot? Is there going to be one? Is it safe to go down town? Should I keep my children from school?" were some of the questions asked.

Officers couldn't ignore the wild reports any longer.

Police Chief C. T. Mullins made preparations to have his entire force available for any emergency.

Sheriff Holt A. McDowell alerted his staff and sent 12 deputies to Bessemer at noon, where they remained on duty until late last night. Commanders of Birmingham and Bessemer National Guard units were notified informally they might be called.

Heavily armed officers cruised the streets in police cars, with three or four men to the car instead of the usual one or two.

They stood by when Bessemer High School dismissed classes at 3 p.m. because it was said "something" was going to happen them. Nothing did.

Many people stayed away from the downtown area.

Merchants said business was at the lowest ebb for a Friday that they could remember—except at the stores handling firearms and ammunition.

By 8 p.m. there were less than half the persons normally downtown on a Friday night, when stores stay open late.

Only a few men were visible on the streets at 9 p.m. Women and children were not to be seen.

Midnight came and proved the rumors were lies.

Police were at a loss to explain how the stories started, and whether they were circulated maliciously.

No matter how the rumors began and then spread like fire through dry grass, they were dangerous.

Even an imagined offense might cause taut nerves to snap in a city ruled by fear of the unknown.

In Defense Of Southern Newspapers

Montgomery, Ala.

EDITOR, THE ADVERTISER—Will you allow me to answer a reprint from Time magazine that appeared in your paper Feb. 18?

Editor, Time Magazine:

I have read Southern newspapers for 40 years. I also sold them on the streets when I was a boy. I have been in the leading cities of nine Southern states and have had short periods of residence ranging from three months to a few years. I have been a subscriber to more than 50 papers in that time. These same newspapers are as important to me as my kitchen stove. If the stove doesn't work I eat at a cafe; but if my local press stops, where am I?

I am forced to read week-old news out of New York magazines with some crack-head opinions. The past three years The Montgomery Advertiser has been under my door every day, the Thomasville Times in my mailbox every Friday, and I get seconds on the Union Springs Herald, and the news is not slanted.

Frederick Sullens' paper was in my home for eight years. Why don't you go to Jackson, Miss., and, as you say, tell old (78) Fred how to take the slant out of The Jackson Daily News. When you do, be sure that you have your shoes off, you will need a fast get-away.

Who Is 'Reverend'?

Editor, The Advertiser:

The term "reverend" is used one time in the Bible. In Psalm III:9, "Holy and reverend is his (God's) name." Here as anyone can see it is applied to God, never to man. But today "reverend" is probably the most common title used in referring to the preacher. Some add to this the "most reverend" or the "right reverend."

Had the Lord intended that preachers be called "reverend," we would have had an example of such being done. But it is not used as a title for man. There is no mention in the Bible of a "Reverend Paul," "Right Reverend James," or "Right Reverend Peter." They looked upon themselves as weak creatures, needing God's help. Paul described himself simply as "a servant," or a bond servant."

If piety would entitle the preacher to the name "reverend," then each member of the congregation would deserve it on the same grounds. If not, why not? Did you ever read where Christ's apostles, evangelists or any other Christians of the First Century ever wore the title? I believe the answer is No.

As the Bible shows "Holy and Reverend" is God's name and his only. But look around us, whether we like it or not we have some men who are called preachers or reverend, and they are far from being such. People (church members also) call the preacher "reverend" without thinking about it. We may not mean to or realize we are doing it, but we are putting them on a plane with God.

Discrimination Is National, But Why?

Fri. 4-13-56

EDITOR, THE ADVERTISER—I would like to congratulate you on your excellent "Askelon" articles. You have brought out a most significant point in these articles, namely, that "wherever the Negro migrates in numbers, he encounters rejection."

You have made this point clear and irrefutable. Now is the time for a really analytical answer to the most important question: Why is this so?

Most people in the North and perhaps some in the South do not completely understand this, even though they may be sympathetic toward segregation. The Negro, himself, probably does not understand.

An enlightening article on this question, handled with the dignity and objectivity of which you are capable, might help the growth of understanding between North and South, colored and white.

Tell It Not In Washington

Editor, The Advertiser:

The integration situation here in the District of Columbia is rapidly deteriorating. Friction between white and Negro students is serious and is increasing, but seldom makes the newspapers. Negro juveniles and even the older people are wilfully inviting trouble, since they believe the government is on their side. One of these days real trouble will happen; trouble that can't be handled by local police.

As an indication, the riot at Fort Dupont Park was entirely Negro. While the enclosed editorial of The Washington Star does not say so, the previous day's edition stated flatly that some 2,500 Negro juveniles and even older people started the riot.

The other large paper in Washington, The Post & Times Herald, carried the report but played down the participation of the Negroes. This paper has a specific policy not to designate a criminal or other malefactor's race in their columns.

Two days later, on April 6, the Star reported a near riot at the Zoo. Again this was provoked entirely by Negro juveniles.

Crime in the District of Columbia is not classified by race in any public records, but it is certain that a very large percentage (some say as much as 90%) can be attributed directly to Negroes. Conditions are similar in nearby Maryland, but are distinctly better across the river in Virginia, because race conditions, for the present at least, are well in hand.

It is my firm belief that the recent Negro juvenile riots, assaults, arson attempts, and many other crimes are a direct result of forced integration in the District schools. Further, there is the trouble of backward students. One of the District commissioners recently proposed mass demotion of students in certain areas in order to adjust their abilities to others. In plain English his proposal was to demote Negro students pholesale to lower grades because they were holding back the brighter white students.

I wish you well in your efforts to expose the truth about segregation in Northern cities and towns. Washington, Baltimore, New York, Chicago, Detroit, and many other places have conditions which the "liberals" refuse to recognize. I believe every honest citizen of these Northern cities should do as I have done: send you verified data on the many racial incidents occurring in their areas.

He Couldn't Face the Issue

Kansas City, Mo.

The issue of segregation is causing many strange things to happen. While some people of the South reacted to the U. S. Supreme Court decision with violent outbreaks and open defiance, others, with inner conflicts, brooded silently over the dilemma in which they found themselves.

Call P.20 Fri. 4-13-56

Apparently, Alabama's Supreme Court Justice James J. Mayfield was among the latter. Wrestling over the problem of segregation was too much for him. He couldn't take any longer the terrific pull on his conscience, so he ended his life as the only way to achieve peace of mind.

Duty-bound as a jurist to follow the United States Supreme Court and the law, Justice Mayfield was said to have been a segregationist at heart. He could not reconcile his personal convictions with his judicial obligations. A judge is expected to be objective at all times. Disregarding personal feeling, he weighs the facts and applies the law.

Mayfield found himself unable to be objective when it came to the issue of segregation and the rights of Negroes.

Psychiatrists say that people commit suicide when they can no longer face the realities of life. Some say that suicide is a sign of weakness, of cowardice.

With such weak men as Mayfield sitting in high places in the South, it is no wonder that Negroes lose cases in southern courts. Thank God for the United States Supreme Court which can reverse the decisions made by courts manned by unstable men like Mayfield.

Now, Really

EDITOR, THE ADVERTISER — As an ex-Chicagoan, I have been reading your Gath-Askelon series with some sense of agreement with your findings—and quite a bit of annoyance. Having made your point, and having supported it with some telling examples, you go on to belabor this point with far-fetched examples that weaken your case.

Thurs. 4-12-56

For instance, a juvenile bomb threat to the president of a small college. In burying that story on a back page, was The New York Times really engaging in conspiracy of silence, or was it exercising a professional sense of news values? Now really!

I was also annoyed by your Sunday story on the visiting students from the University of Wisconsin. It took a bit of reading between the lines, but I got the impression that mixed dating and intermarriage occur so rarely in Madison that these youngsters had hardly given the matter any thought at all until your reporter got hold of them. Then, like a bulldogging prosecuting attorney, he brought sharply back into line anyone who dared stray from the subject.

Now what is your attitude about all this? As long as we are ripping Biblical quotations out of context and tossing them around, may I say that I "could not discern the noise of the shout of joy from the noise of the weeping . . ." (Ezra 3:13)?

Irrelevant

Editor, The Advertiser:

As a native of Alabama and a former student at the University of Wisconsin, I was interested in Mr. Azbell's article on the editorial page April 4.

The only comment it deserves is that it is entirely irrelevant. The campus is integrated and no one concerned has had any of his rights trampled on, as they would have if segregation existed there. Therefore, no one is unhappy about the situation there.

Your question on the Milwaukee mayor's race is confusing since it implies a situation which simply did not exist. Read your own AP service for the outcome of this race which ended last Tuesday.

In closing I wish to say that if we in Alabama were half as concerned with education as we are with segregation, we too might have a university as great as that of which Wisconsin is justly proud. JAMES B. HARRIS.

At Whom Shall Stones Be Cast?

News (Anniston Star) p. 29

There are many who deplore such unfortunate incidents as the attacks on a University of Alabama student in a colored neighborhood of Tuscaloosa, then on Nat Cole, the Negro singer, in Birmingham, and the more recent bombing of a Negro's home there.

Birmingham, Ala.

Some would throw stones at the assailants because they offended community respectability. There is, in fact, no good reason why, white or colored, persons given to violence should have done something which brought them dishonor.

The social scientists remind us that those who resort to physical violence often do so because self-expression by means of effective verbal argument is beyond their mental capacity.

The politician, skilled in party vernacular, and with a ready tongue, casts verbal "stones" at his opponent, but it is considered undignified should he in disregard of the rules of political sportsmanship resort to assault.

Sun. 5-6-56

The man who has neither words at his command, nor logic to point to the force of argument, nor the social contacts to indicate a way of propriety, is left helpless and at the mercy of physical strength alone. He can but make drama by tragedy and entertainment by animal mimicry.

The man without the weapons of language and social discipline is but little removed from the man who has these cultivated arts but who uses his weapons of culture to defeat truth and to encourage disregard for law and order.

Men in high social and political position have used the language of passion to capitalize on prejudices of the untutored.

And this at a time when both in the nation and in foreign relations, the wisest of men seek to restore law and order, which law and order in the democratic state allows for minority representation both respect and a hearing.

For the democratic concept does not claim to be a revelation let down from heaven, but a formula by means of which principles may be tested independently of self-appointed priests who might be authoritarian and arbitrary in their pronouncements.

There can be—and likely will be—a conflict of loyalties where party loyalty makes demands and conscience-loyalties are equally insistent.

The crusader is not without honor in a democratic society; but he must work within the limitations of law and order. And some of the public speeches of our political leadership have voiced less respect for law and order than a disposition to promote anarchy.

With whatever justice the crusader pleads his cause, the excesses of his claims should be smoothed out by politicians and made practical when written into legislation.

It is of the essence of democracy to civilize the power instinct, to use means for controlling dangerous people, and to create conditions which will make anarchy intolerable.

It is not a qualification of leadership to enlarge the ego by appealing to prejudice for support. Neither should anarchy be the stock in trade of a leader who would dramatize himself as a hero. Some Alabama politicians seem to have sought the heroic role by this cheap technique of self-advertisement. Those who resorted to violence in Tuscaloosa and Birmingham were but imitators who thought themselves heroic by their disregard of law and order.

They may deserve punishment as they already suffer from ignominy and disgrace. But just who should throw the first stone at them may give us uncertain answer.

Approach To Racial Problem

News

I don't pretend to know the answers to all the problems of racial segregation, and the struggle for integration. But one thing is very plain—we aren't going about it like the Saviour went about solving problems presented Him in that day.

Sun 2-5-56

We all know He told us, "He that exalteth himself, shall be abased." Likewise, "He that humbleth himself, shall be exalted." "Humble yourselves therefore, under the mighty hand of God, and He shall exalt thee—in due time."

P. 18-A

Are we—either race—doing this? I notice Negro pastors are allowing NAACP meetings in the churches. No doubt some of the whites are using the church to fight desegregation from their pulpits. We aren't enemies of any race—at least we should not be.

Birmingham Ala.

The Negro is here through no fault of his own. We are morally responsible for him—or have been, because all he has learned, be it good or evil, he has learned from us. To our eternal shame, some of the things he has learned have not been, to put it mildly, in good taste.

I believe every thinking person of each race realizes it isn't best, at least just now, to force desegregation. Indeed it is never good to strive in heated passion for our own way.

I would like to see the two races on good terms. We cannot, however, accept the Supreme Court ruling without losing all semblance of states' rights.

I very much fear the Negro has more to lose in the struggle at this time than he stands to gain. I fear it is a shining bubble that will burst as he reaches to grasp it. (MRS.) CLARA MILLER,

Second Negro Home Bombed in Bias Row

World-Telegram & Sun P. 17

Thurs. 2-2-56

By The United Press.

MONTGOMERY, Ala., Feb. 2.—A bomb exploded last night on the front lawn of a Negro railroad porter who has been active in his race's two-month boycott of city buses over segregated seating policies.

Police said the bomb damaged a fence and blew a six-inch hole in the lawn at the home of E. D. Nixon, a former president of the National Assn. for the advancement of Colored People.

New York, N. Y.

Mr. Nixon, a Pullman car porter, was not at home when the explosion occurred about 10:45 p.m.

It was the second such incident in 48 hours. The home of the chief spokesman for the boycotting group, the Rev. M. L. King, was blasted by a dynamite charge Monday night. No one was injured.

The latest bombing occurred a few hours after a group of Negro women filed suit in United States District Court seeking to have state and city bus segregation laws thrown out as unconstitutional.

I agree with you about the treatment of the Negro in the North. Any Negro is better off in the South.

When I was in grammar school in New Jersey a Negro boy won a scholarship which no one had exected to be given a Negro. Did he get it? No, sir. He didn't. The reason: The school did not admit his race.

The Seamy Side Of Army Integration

P. 4-F

EDITOR, THE ADVERTISER—Since the furor caused by A. Lucy's admission and subsequent expulsion from the University of Alabama and the Montgomery bus boycott, I have seen many references to the "peaceful" integration of the Army which was supposedly achieved several years ago. After having spent almost two years in the army, it is evident to me that Army integration is more theoretical than real.

Of course a personnel office cannot refuse to accept a man solely because he is a Negro, but after the preliminary interview, some excuse can be found to prevent his being assigned to certain units. In addition to the units which have no Negroes, the majority of those remaining unofficially keep the percentage of Negroes assigned to their units very low.

There is very little social intercourse between Negroes and whites—even in those units with relatively large Negro populations. For example, in mess halls Negroes usually eat at certain tables and very seldom does one see a "mixed" table.

The white-Negro off-duty relationship is not so rosy as pictured either. Fist fights and brawls between whites and Negroes in on-post clubs as well as in off-post civilian establishments are very common. Only recently a race riot occurred near here in Augsburg. Fifteen or twenty Negroes converged on a German gasthaus (cafe-saloon) which is frequented primarily by white soldiers, and tried to run the whites off. The police had to be called to quell the riot. These occurrences are not uncommon.

I have heard many professional soldiers say that the Army has been "in a mess" since integration took place. Granted that this judgment may be a bit rash and superficial, it nevertheless reflects the attitude of the majority of men now on active duty. And all of these men are not from Alabama or Georgia or even Mississippi.

Alabama Editors Are Saying

Advertiser Sun. 4-15-56

Legislative Fiasco

The Lee County Bulletin

Montgomery, Ala.

The fifth special session of the current legislature died on the vine last week, and there's no mourning in Alabama. It was useless and wasteful. The only distinction the session can claim is the national publicity it gained by the Senate's passage of a resolution asking for federal funds to move Alabama colored people up North. P. 2-F

This legislature has been almost a complete bust. It spoke in indignant ad fearful tones about the dangers of integration but it steadfastly refused to take the only step available to it to preserve voluntary segregation in the public schools. The U.S. Supreme Court has said what the law is on this score. That will not be changed. If Alabama is to preserve the present pattern longer than a year or two it must do so with the consent of the colored parents whose children are in public schools. It seems generally to be agreed that these parents prefer to send their children to all-Negro schools, if those schools are modern and adequate in every way. Then, why did the legislature not provide funds for a large scale school building program?

Era Of Extravagance

The LaFayette Sun

The state legislature has just adjourned and there is rejoicing in Alabama.

For the past year and three months—since Jim Folsom took office on that Black Monday — there have been one regular and five special sessions of the legislature. The cost has been nearly two million dollars. Folsom is respon-

What has been accomplished? What have the taxpayers to show for this reckless spending spree? Absolutely nothing. The school situation is as bad as ever. Reapportionment is just like it always was, with a constitutional amendment submitted by that body that will be promptly killed at the polls next fall. This asinine proposal would add so many new senators and representatives to our legislative body that a much enlarged capitol building would be necessary to hold them. Hundreds of thousands of dollars would be milked from the taxpayers to support such a monstrous, unwieldly body. On top of all this the legislature would be even further from real reapportionment than it is at the present time.

After this reckless disregard for tax money, we predict that the voters will be in a mood to reduce rather than increase the legislature come voting time on this proposition.

Unique Compliment

The Sylacauga News

The Montgomery Advertiser was the recipient of a very unique compliment during the closing hours of the state legislature when that body awarded the newspaper an official commendation for "putting the spotlight on the Yanks." It was a commendation well deserved. The Advertiser (Old Grandma to the newspaper profession) and the Alabama Journal, were the last lines of defense in the efforts of Northern interests to intergrate the South and they were the first lines of offense in changing defeat into victory by so spotlighting segregation in the Northern states that the accuser practically overnight became the accused. It was masterful reporting and The Advertiser's "Tell it not in Gath, Publish it not in the streets of Askelon," was the "they shall not pass" of the recent attempt by the NAACP to integrate the races in the South, and should be broadcast throughout the Southern states—and the nation.

It is even admitted today in the higher echelon of Negro leadership that the NAACP has done their race immeasurable harm in its ill-omened, abortive attempt to force upon a people a social condition for which they were unready and unprepared. The biggest mistake made by the NAACP, however, and the princial thing that caused their house of cards to fall upon their own heads was in using the Northern states as examples of integration and integration support. Such papers as The Advertiser and Journal counter-charged and proved that in these areas segregation was practiced more generally and more rigidly enforced than in any section south of the Mason-Dixon line.

Probably the most glaring example of all was in the great state of Michigan, whose governor, Soapy Williams, would not speak in Alabama because of our state segregation laws.

Forsaken In West Virginia

Montgomery, Ala.

EDITOR, THE ADVERTISER—I have been following the segregation issue through your wonderful paper and I must say that it is very commendable of the staff and the fine people of Alabama to fight for the rights of the people.

We here in West Virginia are victims of a strong political party who would sell their souls to stay in power. Many of our citizens still want to keep the races separate and have expressed through letters to the Charleston Gazette and the Charleston Daily Mail but this has been taken lightly by all, politicians who hold office and those who are seeking office.

The people of the South are very fortunate to have members of Congress who will fight to uphold the Constitution and the rights of the people. May I say, that the fight has just begun and as time goes on people from every part of these United States will begin to fight along with you.

I wish you all the best of luck in your terrific fight for States Rights.

Integration Will Destroy Us

I have lived in the South all my life and want people to know I do not hate Negroes. I have great pity for them, for with all the education and opportunities they have, they continue (as a whole) to be superstitious, undependable and morally stagnant.

After all these years of teaching, they still have to be forced to take immunization and treatment of diseases.

Yet they want our children to have social contact with such conditions. How can so many politicians favor integration, when they know integration will destroy our civilization?

May The South Endure

Editor, The Advertiser:

I have been reading in The Chicago Daily News, Mrs. Bert Collier's articles on segregation. I must say the Daily News is the only newspaper in this section that is willing to give the South a helping hand in their troubles. You may rest assured that the South is not the only place where whites wish segregation would continue. I am enclosing a clipping of April 2. People everywhere are tired of being mixed with Negroes. Kimball Glass here hired two Negro women to work among white women. The white women refused to work with them. Here they don't try moving in white sections because this city is predominently Italian and they fear Italian temper.

I was born in Massachusetts, went South at 16. I am 59, spent nearly all of my life in Atmore, Ala. raising four children there. The Southern people are the best people in the world. They took me to their hearts when I was a homeless boy and gave me love and friendship. They taught me the way to happiness, the love of God and country.

I intend soon to go back home to Atmore, and feel real freedom again. I pray to God that the South will always remain as it is.

Ike Democrats And Integration

News P. 22-A

Just a reminder of our last Democratic National Convention. Due to the proposal of various civil rights issues for the presidential candidate's platform, many of our so-called foresighted Southern delegates walked out of the convention in protest. After the convention, many of these Democratic delegates returned home and supported the Republican candidate for president. Consequently, the Solid South was not so solid any more and many Southerners joined the "I Like Ike" bandwagon.

There became a vacancy as chief justice of the Supreme Court during the early part of the present Republican administration and the vacancy was filled by Earl Warren, one of the greatest politicians the West Coast has ever known. Chief Justice Warren took his great political aptitudes to the Supreme Court with him and used his office and his political aptitude for strengthening the Republican Party potential. The Negro vote has become predominantly Republican due to Supreme Court rulings favoring integration of Negro and white. History will prove that Eleanor Roosevelt's Democratic vote-winning good will tours among the Negro population of the United States will prove to be a molehill compared to the mountain of votes that the Supreme Court rulings, during the present Republican administration have won from the Negro for the Republican Party.

Birmingham, Ala.

The old technique of "divide and conquer" has been applied to the Democratic Party and is currently being perpetuated by many Communistic agitators and organizations who receive a major portion of their funds for operation from the same sources that make the largest contribution to the various Republican campaign funds. It is ironical that the individuals and corporations who contribute to these alien agitators and organizations have nothing in common with one another. One is merely the tool of the other. Which?

The time has come for Southern "I Like Ike" Democrats, including our good friends in Tennessee, Texas and Florida to revaluate their political beliefs. After revaluation they find that they are still Eisenhower Democrats, let them shut up their howling about integration. If they decide that they are no longer Eisenhower Democrats, then let's join together again and fight and win the battle against integration as we have won many battles before. CHARLES B. SMITH,

Courts Of South Should Decide Issue

The Federal Constitution guarantees every man's right to life, liberty and possession of property. Yet the Constitution has no authority to enforce either law but leave to the various states to pass such police regulations as will best serve each individual state. The protection of the rights and privileges of individual citizens are retained by the several states.

Under Alabama right of interposition as stated by our Legislature we should recognize exactly what the Supreme Court is attempting to do, reverse all previous decisions of the court. They tell us that integration is acceptable in New York and other states. So regardless of the situation in the South we must accept the ways of New York. In New York you can go into a saloon and order a highball, gin fizz or what have you? In Alabama you go into a state store, buy your half pint and sneak off and drink it. Why doesn't the Supreme Court tell us that a citizen of New York is an American so when he visits Birmingham we must let down the bars and serve his desires?

Autherine Lucy is an American, a citizen of Alabama, but she, like the New Yorker, must obey our state laws and police regulations. Everywhere people believe in majority rule. The decided majority in the Southern region, both white and black, sincerely believe in segregation and it will continue. Our people and all others are expected to abide by our laws. Had

Montgomery, Ala.

EDITOR, THE ADVERTISER — As an ex-Chicagoan, I have been reading your Gath-Askelon series with some sense of agreement with your findings—and quite a bit of annoyance. Having made your point, and having supported it with some telling examples, you go on to belabor this point with far-fetched examples that weaken your case.

For instance, a juvenile bomb threat to the president of a small college. In burying that story on a back page, was The New York Times really engaging in conspiracy of silence, or was it exercising a professional sense of news values? Now really!

I was also annoyed by your Sunday story on the visiting students from the University of Wisconsin. It took a bit of reading between the lines, but I got the impression that mixed dating and intermarriage occur so rarely in Madison that these youngsters had hardly given the matter any thought at all until your reporter got hold of them. Then, like a bulldogging prosecuting attorney, he brought sharply back into line anyone who dared stray from the subject.

Now what is your attitude about all this? As long as we are ripping Biblical quotations out of context and tossing them around, may I say that I "could not discern the noise of the shout of joy from the noise of the weeping . . ." (Ezra 3:13)?

Irrelevant

Editor, The Advertiser:

As a native of Alabama and a former student at the University of Wisconsin, I was interested in Mr. Azbell's article on the editorial page April 4.

The only comment it deserves is that it is entirely irrelevant. The campus is integrated and no one concerned has had any of his rights trampled on, as they would have if segregation existed there. Therefore, no one is unhappy about the situation there.

Your question on the Milwaukee mayor's race is confusing since it implies a situation which simply did not exist. Read your own AP service for the outcome of this race which ended last Tuesday.

In closing I wish to say that if we in Alabama were half as concerned with education as we are with segregation, we too might have a university as great as that of which Wisconsin is justly proud. JAMES B. HARRIS.

Orchids to our policewomen! It has been my opportunity frequently during this school year to observe several of them in action, especially at Highland Avenue school where Mrs. R. F. Charles is on duty.

Along with the youngsters in the safety patrol, they are doing a necessary job efficiently and courteously. And I might add, how attractive they look in their well-designed tailored uniforms.

The Negative Vote

P.4-A

EDITOR, THE ADVERTISER—It is my opinion that many subscribers share with me the desire for you to give certain publicity before the primary election in May. From time to time you are publishing lists of delegates and committeemen (candidates), which I am reading.

I hope you will run in your paper a day or two before the election a complete list of candidates, designating whether they were ever in Folsom's camp, whether they now have his support, etc.

With but one exception, I think I shall go down the list and vote for the anti-Folsom slate. I am sorry to acknowledge that my citizenship has reached such negative proportion, but it has. M. H.

Keep The Home Fires Burning

Editor, The Advertiser:

I want you to know that the people everywhere appreciate the fine work you are doing to show the other side of the picture.

I was in Detroit last summer, just as the schools were closing. I went out to look at the Ford Village in Dearborn. Many of the teachers brought their classes out to the Village to see the museums which are most interesting. You would see a class of 30 and from one to three Negroes would be in them. Many, no Negroes were in them. All white teachers. They probably have a few colored teachers but I did not see any. I did not see any presidents or vice presidents of color in any of the banks. I understand that they have a few clerks in the outskirt branch banks with large colored patronage.

I did not see any colored in the downtown cafes, although they could probably have gone, but as we contend they want to be with their own people. I stayed in Birmingham, Mich., where only white persons can own property. It is in the charter of the section where I visited and all deeds to the property so read.

You and I know that there is not a finer set of colored people anywhere in the world than right here in Montgomery. I have never known the two races to have the slightest trouble until these outside forces came on the scene and I do not believe that I am overstating it when I say that 90% of them are not for all of this disturbance but are confused.

THE REMARKABLE change in the front page makeup of Citizen Council chapters in South Alabama was particularly evident Thursday night at the rally in Selma. Time was when a council rally in that city attracted out few leading citizens who were all but lost amid a lot of redneck jokers. But times have changed and so have the councils.

Montgomery, Ala.

Thursday night's smooth, restrained affair opened with a tony cocktail party and sumptuous meal in a plush private cottage. Council leaders and their leaders were there, dressed just short of formal. Not one was present who did not meet the rigid qualifications for membership in Selma's economic, political and social upper crust.

Still around, but in decreasing numbers, are the shouting rednecks who not too many months ago brought much discredit to the organization. These boys, uncomfortable and out-of-place, are gradually being pushed toward the rear by the more competent men needed to face the problems of the times.

Where We Are Weak

Montgomery, Ala.

The Lee County Bulletin

Alabama's position in the effort to delay integration in the public schools is far weaker than that of most of the Southern states. Georgia and South Carolina, to name only two, in recent years have appropriated huge sums for new Negro school buildings. That increasingly is the pattern throughout the region. Except in Alabama. A few large city systems and a very small minority of the county systems have embarked upon ambitious colored school building programs. But in the majority of Alabama counties, colored children still largely are housed in dilapidated buildings.

Alabama's inertia in this regard almost would lead one to wonder whether there is not acceptance of the integration idea. Of course, that is not the case. The truth is that ultra-conservative forces which decide Alabama policy in this instance, while not wanting integration, dislike as much the thought of raising taxes with which to build a couple hundred million dollars of new school buildings.

The vast majority of Negro parents want their children to attend their own schools. But only if those schools occupy decent buildings—warm in winter, dry in wet weather, with sanitary toilets, cafeterias, and other essential facilities.

Hurting His Own

The Anniston Star

Federal aid for school construction still is being delayed principally because of Negro Congressman Adam Clayton Powell's obtuse insistence on an amendment to aid legislation that would deny federal money to any school district still resisting racial integration.

It is generally recognized that no bill carrying a desegregation rider could get by the barrier of unlimited debate in the Senate, so that Powell is accomplishing nothing more than to block badly needed legislation.

Actually, he is performing a distinct disservice to the cause of fellow Negroes, whose advancement he claims to be championing. For no segment of the population would benefit as much through federal aid as would Negro boys and girls now receiving substandard schooling, not only in the South but elsewhere over the nation as well.

The Birmingham Post-Herald

If the courts overstep, there is always the remedy of legislative action but it should be used with care. All branches of the government need to keep their constitutional perspective.

Certainly it would be constructive for Congress to adopt Sen. Smathers' idea of requiring that all Supreme Court appointees be qualified by at least five years' experience on lesser benches. Only one of the present nine justices would have been eligible under that rule.

It will be said, of course, that some of our most eminent Supreme Court justices of the past lacked this qualification when they joined the bench. But even their exceptional abilities would have been reinforced by previous experience.

A Tribute To The Seniors

p.2-b

EDITOR, THE ADVERTISER — Congratulations, Seniors, Everywhere!

For a whole year, now, you have been walking in the coveted footsteps of the Seniors of 1955. Tomorrow, you will face new horizons of limitless opportunities. And, as you move along, others will follow—thus, continuing life's educational cycle for youth.

As a representative of the teachers, parents, and all those who have helped you attain the goal of graduation, I would like to pinpoint a few hints that might help you as you resume the struggle for further accomplishments.

In these last days of preparation for graduation, let us pause a few minutes for brief retrospection. In doing so, I hope that you will take an accurate, objective inventory of yourselves.

Last year I emphasized the importance of symmetrical growth: Physical, mental and moral. This, of course, is still important. Perhaps such a growth was what the late Mrs. Mary McLeod Bethune had in mind when she wrote her "Last Will & Testament" to humanity—just before she died last spring. Young people, are you thoroughly acquainted with the contents of this document? Are you appreciatively aware of the fact that you are heirs to a great fortune? She said:

"I leave you love!" a priceless possession. Love, saturated with wisdom, will lead men through the solutions of all of life's perplexing problems. It is balm for the wounds of individuals, and nations. It is the keynote of the brotherhood of man.

Says Mrs. Bethune: "The world really belongs to youth—for tomorrow youth will take over its management. And so, I leave you a thirst for knowledge and the wise use of power. To youth I bequeath the spirit of Confidence and Courage."

How can you succeed without confidence in your ability to do so, and the courage to combat the obstacles that you are certain to encounter? Realizing all of the social problems confronting humanity at this time, Mrs. Bethune bequeathed to all mankind Racial Dignity, which should be protected and preserved at all cost.

Finally, concluding, Mrs. Bethune leaves faith and hope. Youth needs these abiding attributes especially during these days that "try men's souls"—they are a "must" if our world is to be steered into that bright tomorrow where democracy will emerge fully matured, and will cast a full radiance over all the peoples of the earth.

And so, again, with these thoughts in mind: Bon Voyage, Seniors!

Mr. George M. Cox, Executive Editor
The Mobile Press-Register
Mobile, Alabama. Ala.

Dear Mr. Cox:

I take pleasure in replying to your questionnaire of May 10. You are rendering a service to the people of Alabama in sending out this letter. In answer to your four-part questionnaire:

1. Yes, I would vote against the unit rule.

2. Yes, I would vote against any platform that called for an end to racial segregation.

3. I will fight against the nomination of any candidate committed to the elimination of racial segregation, and against the adoption of any platform plank which proposed such elimination. As a lifelong Democrat, I intend to leave the convention, upon adjournment, supporting the party nominees.

4. I would vote against excluding honest and impartial newspaper representatives from delegation meetings, caucuses or conferences at which questions affecting the delegation are to be considered and acted upon. Among others, I do not consider representatives of the Republican Weekly Newsletter or Time magazine to be impartial. I would as soon invite Richard Nixon himself to our caucuses as his news representatives.

Having fully replied to your questions, I consider turnabout fair play. As a newspaper which seeks to completely inform its readers of current political positions and factors, The Press-Register should have little hesitation in replying to the following four questions, which I submit:

1. Has The Press-Register submitted a questionnaire to the Alabama delegation to the Republican National Convention at San Francisco regarding their positions on the segregation question? If not, does The Press-Register intend to do so, as a matter of public interest and information?

2. Will The Press-Register support an Eisenhower-Nixon ticket, in view of the Republican administration's breakdown of racial barriers in the District of Columbia and in the armed forces, and of its attorney general's announced plan to push an integration force bill program through Congress?

3. Will The Press-Register support the Republican ticket in the event that party's convention adopts a platform calling for an end to racial segregation?

4. Will The Press-Register support the Republican ticket whose candidates have committed themselves to the end of racial segregation, either through acceptance of a platform calling for same, or by other expression?

ALABAMA

Politician in Squeeze

Times P. 10-C

Gov. James E. Folsom

Sat. 2-25-56

MOUNTING racial tensions have trapped "Big Jim" Folsom, Alabama's burley "common man" Governor, in a squeeze that is threatening disaster for his political popularity. New York, N.Y.

Picked for a second term in 1954 by a landslide vote, he now says: "Today I couldn't be elected dog-catcher."

Man in the News

Bastically an anti-segregationist and champion of Negro rights, James Folsom has succeeded in Alabama politics by appealing to the less-privileged whites as well, particularly in the rural areas.

He has denounced the big landholders and the "big mules"—the Alabama term for the industrialists and financiers of Birmingham.

He campaigned with the demogogic trappings of hill billy bands and backwoods mannerisms.

In office he has attempted to promote the welfare of lower income groups, provide more schools and see that Negroes obtain the right to vote.

His behavior and views were effective with whites as well as Negroes until the recent burgeoning of racial animosities in Alabama. Today the rural whites who were the main source of his support are the Alabamans most aroused over integration.

The rural whites have now joined other white pro-segregationists in regarding Mr. Folsom with hostility and alarm. At the same time his equivocations and indecisiveness in recent critical situations have also provoked Negro resentment.

"Big Jim" recently charged the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People and "outside agitators" with responsibility for the rioting at the University of Alabama.

He didn't call out the National Guard to maintain order at the university. In general he has not been as active in attempting to mediate racial differences as some observers thought he should be.

The Governor recently let the Alabama Legislature's resolution declaring the United States Supreme Court ruling on desegregation in schools null and void automatically become an act. He neither signed nor vetoed the resolution.

Caught in the Middle

He has lately indicated that the racial animosities of Alabama are more or less to be expected. He remarked that in his travels in various parts of the world he had observed that peoples of different races usually were not overly fond of each other. He said what has been happening at the University of Alabama "is the result of such feelings of one race for another."

Thus "Big Jim" is caught in the middle. Even objective observers of the Alabama scene say that his recent failures to act firmly and promptly have contributed to the difficulties now afflicting the state.

However, the Governor's political career has been marked before by downs as well as ups. And he may yet get on top of the most difficult situation he has yet faced.

One of the most flamboyant of the nation's political figures, the Governor free-wheeled into Alabama Governor's mansion the first time in 1946. He is the son of a farmer-politician of modest means and was brought up among the rural poor.

He toured the country-side with a five-piece band, talked the language of the rural "red necks" and often took off his shoes and kissed all the women in his audience before making a speech. He promised old-age pensions, opposition to the vested interests and a clean-up of corruption in the state capital.

He carried a mop and a suds bucket, which he passed around for campaign funds. He advocated higher wages for teachers, more schools, particularly for Negroes, abolition of the poll tax, aid to farmers and small business men and reapportionment of voting districts to assure more equitable representation in the Legislature.

Feuded iWth Legislators

Well-built, handsome and six feet eight inches tall, he called himself "The little man's big friend."

As Governor he carried on a bitter feud with an intransigent Legislature, the press and representatives of the interests he denounced.

He was regarded as a rough-necked demagogue by many of the more conventional-minded Alabamans. The Mobile Press once said that he had played the leading role in a comic opera regime" and had degraded the office of Governor.

"Kissin' Jim," as he came to be called, held that Alabama must provide a fair deal for the Negroes who made up 35 per cent of the state's population.

He maintained Negroes should b eadmitted to graduate schools with whites if Negro graduate facilities did not exist, and he wanted more parks, equal voting rights and economic opportunities for Negroes.

Now 48 years old, the hulking, 245-pound Alabama Governor has been married twice. His frist wife died in 1944. It was while he was a widower that he established his reputation for kissing the ladies.

Governor Folsom had a short tour of duty in the Army during the last war but was discharged because of his huge size and transferred to service n the Merchant Marine. He did the dangerous Murmansk run on Army transports. Once, between sailings, he worked as a doorman at a New York theater.

After the war and his election as Governor he visited New York to receive an award from a fashion studio as the nation's most eligible bachelor.

Governor Folsom's views in Alabama politics have also been reflected in his attitudes in national politics. He was a strong supporter of Franklin D. Roosevelt, opposed the Dixiecrats in Alabama and was a partisan of Henry Wallace's views in 1948. He supported Mr. Wallace for the Vice Presidential nomination.

90 NEGROES FACE COURT

New York, N.Y.

Arraigned for Roles in Bus Boycott—Thousands Walk to Protest Arrests

By WAYNE PHILLIPS

Special to The New York Times.

MONTGOMERY, Ala., Feb. 24—Alabama's Governor proposed today a state commission of Negroes and whites to seek to reconcile racial differences.

Gov. James E. Folsom put his proposal before seventy-five of the state's editors and publishers at a conference in the House Chamber at the state Capitol. As far as is known here, no other state has a bi-racial government commission of such scope.

Ninety Negroes, meanwhile, were being arraigned a few blocks away in Circuit Court on charges of organizing and joining in an illegal boycott of the city's buses. Ten others have been indicted but not yet arrested.

[Plans for nation-wide protests in support of the Montgomery boycott were being made Friday by Negro leaders. In New York, Representative Adam Clayton Powell, Democrat of Manhattan, said a meeting of Negro church leaders had approved a "national deliverance day of prayer" and a one-hour work stoppage on March 28.

[In Baltimore 300 ministers of the African Methodist Episcopal Church asked for Federal intercession. A special emergency session of the Council of Bishops will be held in Washington Saturday.]

Laws Fought in Court

The conference with the editors, who had been called from all parts of the state, underscored the seriousness with which tension between whites and Negroes was viewed here.

All day thousands of Negroes trudged the streets, refraining from riding in automobiles and taxicabs, in protest against the arrests in the eighty-one-day bus boycott.

This was touched off by the arrest Dec. 1 of a 42-year-old seamstress, Mrs. Rosa Parks, for refusing to give up he r seat to a white when ordered to do so by the driver of a city bus.

At first the boycott was a protest against what the Negroes considered to be unfair treatment in enforcing segregation laws. But later a suit was filed in Federal Court seeking to overthrow the city and state bus segregation laws. Times

Racial tension also has come to the fore in Tuscaloosa, where demonstrations protested the admission of the first Negro student to the University of Alabama, and in Bessemer. There reports spread that Negroes had been buying stocks of arms and ammunition. Throughout the state White Citizens Councils have been formed to defend segregation. P. 10C

Governor Folsom has been under constant pressure to do something. He has been accused of "fiddling while his state is burning." But while some would have had him take a firm stand against any form of integration, others wished him to declare war on the Citizens Councils.

The difficulty confronting him was illustrated at this morning's session. After calling for the bi-racial commission to create a common forum for the two races, he affirmed his opposition to integrated education.

"Anyone with any sense knows that Negro and white children are not going to go to school together anywhere in Alabama any time," he said. And applause that swept the chamber all but drowned out his concluding words—"in the near future."

Voluntary terracial groups have been operating in Alabama community for years. They have worked toward better separate but equal facilities. Many voluntary groups are affiliated with the bi-racial Alabama Council on Human Relations.

That council had been urging for almost a year that Governor Folsom establish a state bi-racial commission of race problems. But the Governor was cool to the idea. He did not decide firmly to put it forward until Wednesday, after he had decided to invite the members of the Alabama Press Association to today's meeting.

Press Leaders Attend

The exact way in which he would present it to the editors was still being worked out in conferences this morning.

Of the 150 members of the Alabama Press Association invited to today's meeting, about half appeared. But the outstanding editors and publishers of the state were present.

And her 100 spectators and reporters crowded into the chamber, where Alabama's representatives decided ninety-five years ago to secede from the Union.

The extensive news coverage included live television. In the resolution supporting the Governor's proposal no one voted "nay."

Several Northern Negro reporters who have been covering the bus boycott sat side by side with whites, a rare sight in the Alabama legislature. Only one Alabama Negro publisher was present, Emery O. Jackson of the Birmingham World. He had not been invited.

Governor Folsom apologized for not including Negro publications in his general invitation. He said he had thought that they were members of the Alabama Press Association. None of the eighteen Negro newspapers published in the state is a member.

'A Serious Problem'

"I didn't call you editors here to ask you to support my program," the Governor said. "I have asked you here to help solve a very serious problem. The whole world islooking to Alabama today—looking to see whether Alabama will do something to bring about peace between the races."

After outlining his suggested commission, the Governor threw the meeting open for comment. None spoke against the commission. Several made clear the limits within which they thought it should work.

Buford Boone, publisher of the Tuscaloosa News, who has been under sharp attack by white extremists in his community for condemning violence at the university, declared that his newspaper believed in a "moderate" approach and not the extremes recommended by the Negro press.

James Mills, editor of the Birmingham Post-Herald, said: "All of our people are frightened over what might happen, thus your idea is sound. But we must operate within the framework of traditions that our deep rooted in our state."

State Senator Albert Boutwell of Jefferson County (Birmingham), chairman of a committee that has drafted constitutiond amendments to maintain school segregation, said:

"There's too much hysteria among our people, too much misunderstanding. Our problem is combatting unenlightened agitation from sources foreign to Alabama. Rather than having the agitators convert us maybe we can convert them."

Governor's Aide Takes Blame For 'Right To Work' Statement

Wed. 5-30-56 Montgomery, Ala.

P. 1

Press Secretary Ralph Hammond took responsiboility yesterday for a news story last week crediting Gov. James E. Folsom with an attack on the Supreme Court's "Right To Work" law decision.

The court ruled that so-called "Right To Work" laws in 18 states are superseded by federal legislation regulating railway labor.

Twenty-four hours later Folsom issued a statement through Hammond threatening retaliatory action if the Federal Government "tries to cram force bills down out throats" and mentioned laws in 18 states.

The press secretary issued a prepared statement of his own yesterday explaining that he took the Governor's remoarks to have reference to the Supreme Court ruling.

However, he continued, "I learned later that the Governor had in mind the Eisenhower civil rights bill . . . as passed by the House Judiciary Committee."

Both the Supreme Court decision and the civil rights action came the same day.

Folsom called newsmen Monday to deny that he had commented on the "Right To Work" laws. He said he made last week's statement in reference to the civil rights legislation.

Hammond explained that "the Governor and I were operating by remote control" when the original statement was issued last Tuesday. Folsom was in Auburn that day for a meeting of the Auburn Board of Trustees.

Folsom Hails State Future, Defends Rep. Powell's Visit

Montgomery, Ala.

Fri. 5-11-56

TUSCALOOSA, Ala., May 10 (AP) —Gov. James E. Folsom today urged University of Alabama students to remain in this state when they graduate, and share in Alabama's golden future.

Addressing a Governor's Day audience, Folsom said "Markets are going Southward . . . industry must follow. The payrolls are coming to Alabama because we are blessed with more navigable streams and water than any other state."

He urged the students to remain in Alabama and, if possible, "organize your own business."

About 4,500 persons were on hand for the speech.

The governor touched on the visit to the executive mansion at Montgomery of Rep. Powell, Negro congressman from New York. Powell's visit at the mansion was used against Folsom in his unsuccessful race for Democratic national committeeman.

Folsom intimated that he discussed means of keeping an Alabama segregation suit out of the U.S. Supreme Court with Powell.

"I've heard a thousand stories about a social affair in my house with a Negro congressman," Folumm said. "I never answer charges during a campaign, but now I will.

"For another thing, I never drink Scotch."

Fri. 5-11-56

Folsom also said he had replied to "resolutions from the British Isles" urging more rights for Negroes during the recent racial strife in the state.

The governor said his reply was that "100 years ago it was a penitentiary offense to teach a Negro to read and that today we have one of the best educational systems for Negroes any place in the United States.

"When you resolute to free the Gold Coast colony slaves in Africa and when you do something about it, then you send me a resolution about Alabama," Folsom said he replied to the unidentified authors.

"As long as I am governor, the boys in khaki uniforms won't be sent abroad to protect these slave colonies or any other slave colonies."

FOLSOM'S taste runs to bourbon, but it was Scotch & soda (with Powell of Harlem) that washed him up with Alabama. P. 4-A

You have to understand Folsom's low estate with Alabama—he himself recently confirmed that he "couldn't be elected dog catcher"—to understand his conference at the Capitol yesterday with Alabama editors and publishers.

Folsom has deeply offended and estranged dominant public opinion in Alabama. This is chiefly, though not entirely, because he has systematically and sometimes sportively refused to join the resistance to the holy-rolling of the reckless, pietistical abolitionists of the North. Sat. 2-25-56

He is now paying a price for his folly. The jeers at the Coliseum well told him that the jig is up.

Montgomery, Ala.

So he is out to work his way back into the fold by taking it all back.

The editors and publishers responded to their summons, which was their duty.

It was a large gathering. The proceedings were televised. Folsom had a statewide audience. By means of the editors and publishers, Folsom was associating himself with conventional white opinion. The newspapermen were potted palms in a Folsom pageant.

He talked of many things, but finally he made the following comment:

"Anybody with any sense knows that the Negro children and the white children are not going to school together in Alabama any time in the near future—in fact, in a long time."

Thus did Folsom seek to reverse his field. That's what he wanted white Alabama to hear him say. He is trying to work his way back.

It happened, because of the boycott arrests, that there were many reporters present representing the national publications. Only one or two have a sound grasp of what is going on in Alabama.

It is too bad that only one or two of them will comprehend the meaning of Folsom's pronouncement, above quoted. Here had been the only governor in the Southern states with a dissenting race viewpoint. He was indeed, as we have often noted, the only major demagogue in Southern history, with the shortime exception of Tom Watson in Georgia, who ever successfully yoked the woolhat and the Negro.

But public opinion has so hardened in the teeth of the outside assault upon Alabama custom that Folsom has been forced to switch about.

Folsom's surrender should be well noted among the unenlightened provincials of the north who have been intellectually victimized by their superficial, supercilious, stereotyped newspapers and magazines.

Folsom's hitting of the sawdust trail has large meaning.

Without much debate, Senate members speedily defeated the administration sponsored constitutional amendment measure placing legislators on an annual salary and expense basis.

SPARROW

On the final showdown, the administration could muster but 12 votes in favor of the proposal. Nineteen other votes were chalked up in opposition. P.28

Its defeat, however, was even more decisive than the vote indicated. A constitutional amendment measure requires at least 21 affirmative votes to pass. The bill defeated yesterday thus fell nine votes short of enough for passage.

It was the second major rebuff handed Gov. Folsom in less than a week.

Birm., Ala.

Earlier rebuff

Last week both the House and Senate pigenholed the governor's constitutional convention resolution. (During the first special session of 1955, moreover, the same proposal was defeated overwhelmingly in both houses.)

Legislation paving the way for a constitutional convention and an amendment placing legislators on annual salary and expense were two "musts" listed by Gov. Folsom in his call summoning the Legislature yesterday. Gov. Folsom demanded anew the Legislature approve the resolution calling for a vote Aug. 28 on the question of holding a constitutional convention.

His language was similar to speeches the governor has been making in his current "report to the people" stump speeches in North Alabama.

In those speeches, moreover, the governor said in sharply worded phrases that if the Legislature does not approve the constitutional convention resolution he would call them back into special session immediately and demand approval.

'Slush fund' eyed

NOTHING WAS said on the floor of the Senate yesterday concerning the governor's threat to call House and Senate members back into session. But several upper house members indicated that if the governor does call them back they will seek to cut down sharply on his so-called "slush funds."

Bills reducing the annual appropriation for the mansion fund from $60,000 to $10,000 a year, amending the emergency fund law to prevent the governor from transferring money from that fund to the mansion fund and requiring the state to buy everything on bids, reportedly will be offered.

The Senate's defeat of the annual salary for legislators amendment was construed by several legislators as the Senate's special reply to the governor's threats.

Gov. Folsom reportedly was keenly interested in having the people of Alabama vote on an amendment placing legislators on an annual salary at the same time they vote on the administration's so-called reapportionment amendment which greatly expands both houses.

The governor reportedly wanted it submitted at the same time because he believed it would make the voters feel more kindly toward the reapportionment proposal.

Showdown vote

IN THE VOTE showdown one non-administration senator, Joe Calvin of Morgan, voted with those favoring the amendment. Sen. Richmond Flowers of Houston, an administration stalwart, shifted his vote at the last minute from yea to nay, apparently to be in position to move reconsideration.

It would appear from yesterday's vote on the annual pay proposal that the governor has lost at least 10 Senate votes in recent days.

One year ago the governor had a clincher on the Senate which enabled him to put over a number of tax boosting and other administration measures.

Here is how the Senate voted on the annual pay proposal which, if approved would have assured senators and representatives an annual salary of $1200 and an annual expense not to exceed $1200:

For the amendment—Allen, Calvin, Cantrell, Goodwin, Grisham, Lamberth, Leonard, Metcalf, Moses, Roberts, Van Antwerp and Yarbrough of Randolph—12.

Fun before business

THE HOUSE was inactive today—and will continue to be inactive until Friday—largely because members voted to put pleasure before business.

One group of House members, the judiciary committee, wanted a two-day cruise aboard the state swank yacht, the Alice, on Mobile Bay and adjoining coastal waters.

Another group planned to be guests of a utility company executive at a nearby like camp.

Still others wanted to go to Birmingham to look in on the annual AEA convention.

Judiciary committee members left immediately after the House adjourned in mid-afternoon. Reportedly they were flown to Mobile in National Guard planes.

The Senate elected to remain on the job. As a result members were in session today.

The House's action in skipping two days this week caused some to wonder if the Legislature will be in position to recess or adjourn sine die by Friday.

BY A VOTE of 67 to 26—three more than the minimum required to pass a constitutional amendment through the House, the House yesterday voted final passage to the measure increasing the maximum state income tax rate on corporations from 3 to 5 per cent.

The bill's sponsor, Tuscaloosa Rep. Ryan deGraffenried, told the House that if the voters ratify the amendment in the special election Aug. 28, it will mean an additional $5 million a year for schools.

At present corporations pay a flat 3 per cent income tax rate. Individuals pay at a rate ranging from 1¼ to 5 per cent.

The bill passed by the House yesterday would apply the same scale to corporations.

For the amendment—Albea, Ashworth, Bassett, Boyd, Brannon, Branyon, Brewer, Broadfoot, Brooks, Burkhalter, Cornett, Cox, Dawkins, deGraffenreid, Dement, DeSear, Dickson, Edwards of Escambia, Faulk, Ferrell, Franklin, Gilchrist, Gist, Goodwyn, Gregory, Grouby, Hall, Haltom, Hanby, Hare, Harrison, Hawkins, Hodges, Huddleston, Jenkins, Johnson of Elmore, Kelly, Killough, Lackey, Lee of Barbour, Lee of Lawrence, Locke of Choctaw, Locke of Perry, Love, McNider, Martin, Mathews, Mathison, Merrill, Money, Nice, Payne, Pirkle, Ramey, Reynolds, Richardson, Roberts, Selman, Shumate, Solomon, Speaks, Steagall, Stembridge, Taylor, Thomas, Tyson and Ward—67.

'Put up or shut up'—

Folsom dares Legislature on segregation proposal

News Tues. 3-20-56 P.13

BY FRED TAYLOR
News staff writer

HAMILTON, Ala., March 20—Gov. James E. Folsom has called on the Alabama Legislature to "put up, shut up or back up" on the tense racial question by authorizing his recommended constitutional convention as "the best way to solve our racial problems."

Declaring he would summon the legislators back to Montgomery "immediately" for another special session, if they adjourn the present one without submitting the constitutional convention proposal to the state's voters, Folsom said:

"I JUST WANT to see if the Legislature has got the guts to let you, the people, decide it."

The governor flung this threat to the lawmakers in speeches yesterday afternoon at Fayette and last night at Jasper, as he moved on to Hamilton in his "report to the people" stumping tour.

Indications are that members of the House and Senate, which reconvened today, will adjourn the present special session—fifth called by Gov. Folsom within 14 months—sin die by Friday.

BUT SOME of the lawmakers want the Legislature to recess over until shortly after the May 1 Democratic primary election.

Gov. Folsom told a crowd of about 500 at the Fayette County Courthouse, in his stumping tour kickoff, that he wants "to be relieved of my obligation" to uphold of his oath as governor to uphold the U. S. Constitution affecting racial segregation in public schools.

"And a constitutional convention, duly assembled and authorized by you people, the voters, is the only way that can be done," he said.

"I want you to help me put it (constitutional convention) over," Folsom told his Fayette listeners.

AND HE repeated this request to another crowd of about the same size in the Walker County Courthouse at Jasper last night.

There were about 40 Negroes—men and women—seated in the courthouse balcony at Fayette. A couple of dozen Negroes were seated on one side of the main floor audience in the Jasper courthouse, with two Negro women seated together on the other side.

And there were scores of old people seated in front rows at both places, as they listened to Gov. Folsom's promise to pay them larger pensions.

Folsom's statement that he wants "to be relieved of my obligation" to the U. S. Constitution was almost word for word what he said in a press conference in his office last Thursday.

The governor took pains to point out in each speech yesterday that "we in Alabama have not been made a party" to the antisegregation suits.

"I've worked constantly with Negro leaders in trying to keep that suit down," he added.

Folsom said that when a Negro tried to enter University of Alabama during his first term, he told Negro leaders that "Alabama isn't ready for that."

"This one," he added, in referring to Negro Co-ed Authurine Lucy's brief attendance at the University before she was expelled by trustees, "entered while I was out of office. It was too late for me to do anything about it."

"Our Negroes have been here for 300 years and they'll be here 300 more," continued Folsom. "Let's all try to pull together."

The governor said at Fayette and Jasper, in pointing out what he had said many times on the stump, that "Negro and white children in Alabama are not going to school together until we get ready for it."

In his "report" on accomplishments of his administration, Gov. Folsom cited an industrial development program which brought $390 million worth of new industries to Alabama and created 15,000 new jobs.

"The year 1955 has been a great year for the people of Alabama," he declared.

FOLSOM ALSO pointed to the highway expansion program under his administration. He said that 2000 miles of road were paved in 1955, that $35 million worth of roads started under the Persons administration were completed and $39 million worth of highways presently are under construction.

He said that plans call for paving about 100 miles of roads in each county yearly, telling the Jasper crowd that "Walker County will have this time next year about 300 miles of farm-to-market roads built."

Folsom ripped into newspapers for criticizing him for using National Guard planes.

"WHEN THE newspapers were double-headlining me, I was flying a National Guard plane to help get a $140 million automobile plant for Muscle Shoals," he said.

"I flew the wheels off of them and I'll do it again. I'll fly the wheels, the propeller and the tail off National Guard planes, if I can get a $100 million plant for Fayette, or for Jasper or for any other place in Alabama."

While whamming the newspapers, the governor took special pains to point out that "the working press are my good buddies." He calls reporters the "working press."

Folsom pointed out that more than 40,000 persons had been added to welfare rolls through some $8 million additional provided by the Legislature. And he said he wanted to pay larger pensions.

He said that through efficient operation, ABC Board revenues increased $1,544,000 last year, while $112,000 was being lopped off costs of operating the state's legalized alcoholic beverage system.

As to Alabama's efforts in behalf of education, Gov. Folsom said "we're the top state in the nation in the proportion of contributions to our schools."

But on the segregation question, he added "we hear a big hue and cry about whites going to schools with Negroes. The Legislature has voted to nullify (reference to the recently adopted interposition resolution). And I'm going to see that the Legislature does something about a constitutional convention that will help us solve our racial problems."

The governor was accompanied by Mrs. Folsom and a number of his cabinet members. He brought a laugh from the Jasper audience when he began speaking without notes.

"My wife carried my speech off with her," he said, in explaining she had driven from Fayette via her former home at Berry. "Finney, go get it."

O. H. Finney Jr., his executive secretary, went to the governor's car on a nearby street and brought it to the governor.

FOLSOM DREW MORE applause from the Jasper audience than he got from the Fayette crowd. But response at both lacked the enthusiasm accorded him during his 1954 campaign speeches.

The governor was introduced at Fayette by that county's veteran Rep. James Branyon. State Sen. Reuben Newton introduced him at Jasper. Both legislators, strong administration supporters, lauded Folsom's leadership and accomplishments of his administration.

State Finance Director Fuller Kimbrell, Asst. Finance Director Ed Pepper, Public Safety Director Bill Lyerly, Adjt. Gen. W. D. Partlow Jr. were among cabinet members traveling with the governor the first day of his speaking tour.

OTHERS INCLUDED State Commerce Director Lonnie Gentry, Dr. J. S. Snoddy, head of the Department of Pensions and Security; State Labor Commissioner L. D. Barnette; Geoffrey Birt, state publicity director, and Finney.

A number of local officials turned out at both Fayette and Jasper. Fayette Probate Judge Clyde C. Cargile, Mayor Guthrie Smith and County Commissioner Albert Stovall, a Republican, were among those on hand at Fayette.

Walker Probate Judge Lecil Gray, Circuit Judge Roy Mayhall, chairman of the State Democratic Executive Committee, and a number of others turned out at the Jasper meeting. Among these were State Sen. Reuben Newton and Reps. T. K. Selman and Alonzo Shumate.

Mrs. Folsom was accompanied to the Fayette and Jasper meetings by her mother, Mrs. E. M. Moore; Mrs. Bob Folsom, wife of the governor's brother, who was helping with the sound effects; Mrs. Lowell Barnes and Mrs. Truman Simpson. All except Mrs. Bob Folsom were from Berry.

The familiar Toll Grinders (formerly the Corn Grinders), led by Roland Johnson of Cullman, helped whoop it up with hillbilly music.

"The only way we can nullify the Supreme Court decision is through a convention assembled by the people," Folsom said. "And that resolution they passed calling the decision null and void is actually null and void itself."

On another subject, Gov. Folsom said Sen. Estes Kefauver's upset victory over Adlai Stevenson in the Minnesota presidential primary Tuesday "means he's (Kefauver) strong in the midwest."

"I don't know what he's doing, but if I was him I'd keep on doing it," Folsom said regarding Kefauver's victory.

Asked if he thought the outcome of the Minnesota Primary had dimmed Stevenson's chances, Folsom said, "According to the papers he's not the front runner any more."

On the same subject, Folsom declared emphatically he would support the Democratic Party's nominee, whoever he might be, "with every ounce of strength I've got."

Gov. Folsom, returning to the segregation subject, also repeated his earlier statement that he would call another special session of the Legislature if no action was taken during the current session on his plan for a convention.

"I want to gently remind them that they've established a platform and they ought to carry it out," Folsom said. "I want them to let the people decide."

THE GOVERNOR said there is "naturally . . . a fundamental difference between races and tribes since the beginning of time. There is a difference in the fundamental laws of nature regarding the animal kingdom.

"The great masses of Alabama Negroes do not fear their white brothers as much as they do some of their over-anxious leaders. Likewise the great masses of the white people do not fear the masses of the colored people as much as they fear some of the extremist white agitators.

"I SAY to the great masses of both races, let us approach our problems in the spirit of calmness, understanding, debate and deliberation.

"Especially do I call on each of us individually and collectively to approach our problems without fear of one race or the other race."

Folsom Signs Measure For Segregated Parks

Wed. 4-18-56 P. 1

Montgomery

In an action which almost passed unnoticed, Gov. James E. Folsom signed into law Monday a highly significant measure aimed at preserving the separation of the races at parks and playgrounds in Alabama.

La.

The new law, however, will become operative only if a proposed amendment to the state constitution is ratified by the voters in the special election Aug. 28.

If that amendment is approved, the act signed by Folsom Monday will automatically go into effect. It would authorize cities, counties, towns and other subdivisions of the state to either sell or give away parks, playgrounds, other recreational facilities and public housing projects.

Two other Southern states—Mississippi and South Carolina—have already enacted such laws, and an official of the Alabama Citizens' Council said yesterday he knew of one case where a park and swimming pool had been sold to a civic club near Vicksburg, Miss. at a price of $1.

The only restriction in the measure is that such transfers must first be approved by the voters of the area involved in a local referendum.

P. 2-A

The bill was sponsored in the Legislature during the recent special session by Clarke County Reps. Emory McNider and Marion Bradford.

Nine Georgia Parks Leased To Citizens

ATLANTA, April 17 (AP) — State Parks Director Roy Chalker said today he has leased nine Georgia state parks to private citizens in a move to safeguard segregation.

The leases were negotiated for 12 months under recent "private park" legislation which eliminated necessity for advertising for bids.

Chalker explained that he and Gov. Marvin Griffin signed the leases for the parks at an average price of $2,000 per year. He said he planned to lease two or three more parks.

The Georgia Legislature recently passed a law authorizing short-term leasing of the parks as a method of avoiding federal court integration decisions aimed at public parks. However, a federal court in Virginia recently held that Negroes should be admitted to state-owned parks, regardless of whether the parks were operated by the state itself or by citizens leasing the parks.

And while the measure makes no reference to the race question, under its provisions, a city could give a park to an individual or group and it would immediately become a private facility and not subject to the U.S. Supreme Court's desegregation decrees.

Fri. 3-23-56 Montgomery, Ala.

Gov. James E. Folsom charged yesterday in a press conference that members of the Alabama Legislature "individually and collectively" violated their oath to uphold the U.S. Constitution when they passed the Nullification Resolution.

The governor, back in his office after a three-day stumping tour of Northwest Alabama, resumed his insistence that the Legislature

White And Negro Citizens Meet To Discuss Issue

Jackson, Ala.

Precedent was broken Tuesday night of this week when white and Negro citizens of Clarke County met in the court house at Grove Hill to discuss the racial problem.

Phoenix 3-8-56

Approximately 100 Negroes from all over the county and more than that many Whites came together in a special meeting. Purpose of the meeting was to allow each race the opportunity to express to the other openly their convictions and beliefs and desires in connection with the harmonious relationship between the two races, so that if trouble should arise from outside sources the people within the county would understand each other and not become involved in any strife because of that trouble.

Represented in the white group were members of the Clarke County delegation to the State Legislature, county officials, city officials, ministers, school teachers lawyers, newspaper men and business men and farmers.

O. C. Helms, county agent and chairman of the meeting kicked off the proceedings with the opening talk in which he outlined the purpose of the meeting. He cited the progress that has been made in Clarke county by both races adhering to the principle of segregation and asked for continued harmony and progress under the same principle.

Gerald Bradford, State Senator from this district, spoke for the legislative delegation, who came from Montgomery Tuesday afternoon for the meeting. He emphasized the fact that if any trouble arises in Clarke county it will be fostered by forces outside the state of Alabama, and he urged the colored people to recognize it as such.

Jacob Thorn of Jackson represented the Clarke County Board of Education and spoke briefly on plans of the board to make improvements in educational facilities for both white and colored just as soon as money is available to do so. He brought several exultations of approval from the colored section when he emphasized the desire of the board to have separate schools and teachers for each race and to make definite improvements in the colored schoils so that better opportunities might be offered Negro children in securing an education on par with that of the white children.

W. W. Andrews, mayor of Jackson, spoke briefly for the mayors of the county and reiterated what had already been said, citing particularly the promotion of harmony through segregation.

Coma Garrett, Jr., Probate Judge, presided at the meeting and was selected to speak for the county officials. H made a strong plea for segregation of the races in peace and harmony and pledged the support of county officials in keeping down racial strife.

Attorney Jack Adam endorsed the principles set out by the other speakers in a talk for the attorneys.

The Negro group was asked to retire to another room to deliberate what had been said. They were instructed to select several from their number to make brief talks to the assembly, giving their views on the question.

Rev. J. B. Dixon was selected by the group to speak for them first. He said that they had all agreed that they did not want any strife between their people and the white people, that they only wanted their own schools, teachers churches, and an opportunity to earn a livlihood and live in peace as God intends for His people to do.

Others speaking for the Negro group included school principals, business men and farmers. Without exception they expressed the desire for separate schools and churches and segregation in general, but emphasized their desire for better school facilities and better educational opportunities. They expressed appreciation for the opportunity of meeting the white people to discuss thir problems and their belief that as long as problems are approached in this manner, racial strife can be avoided in Clarke County.

The meeting was opened with an invocation by Rev. Charles Granade, pastor of the Grove Hill Baptist Church and closed with benediction by Rev. Dixon.

Cite Segregation In Judge's Death

Defender P. 16

Sat. 4-14-56

MONTEGOMERY, Ala. — An Alabama Supreme Court justice, who reportedly was "having a devil of a time over segregation," shot himself to death here last week.

Chicago, Ill.

His maid, Mrs. Lorine Lewis, found the body when she arrived at 7:30 a. m. Wednesday to prepare breakfast.

Justice James J. Mayfield, clothed except for a shirt and shoes, was in bed with his head propped up with two pillows.

SHOT OVER EAR

Coroner J. B. Kirpatrick ruled that the 45-year-old jurist had taken his own life with a .22 caliber automatic pistol from which one shot had penetrated his head over the right ear.

The maid, questioned by police said:

"Mayfield told me Monday that he was having a devil of a time over segregation and that some man was trying to get his job away from him."

Mayfield was a former University of Alabama professor and son of a former state Supreme Court justice. He had served two years of an unexpired term on the high court bench and was seeking renomination in the May 1 primary.

His death automatically gave the Democratic nomination to his only opponent, State Sen. James S. Coleman, jr., of Greene County.

Mayfield was elected to the court with the support of Gov. James Folsom. He was said to have been waging an uphill battle in his bid for renomination against forces opposed to the governor's anti-segregation views.

Although Mayfield had made speeches favoring racial segregation, he was often pressed to explain how he could reconcile such personal views with his position in the Folsom camp.

Local And State Efforts Urgent In Dealing With Racial Problems

News P. 16

Fri. 5-16-56

Current racial problems vary widely by communities and states. Obvious as that reality is it needs to be repeatedly emphasized. It means that studies of the problems, efforts to deal with them constructively, call for effective endeavor at local and state levels, where there is first-hand familiarity with actual conditions.

President Eisenhower, in his press conference Wednesday, indicated he did not think much of the idea that he call a White House conference of white and Negro leaders to consider the general situation. He said he wants more than an expression of views, that he desires a real investigative body. He said he had in mind a commission created by Congress.

B'ham, Ala.

We recognize, of course, the concern of the nation as a whole and of the national government as to these pressing problems. But we question the usefulness now of either a White House discussion conference or a congressional investigative commission. With conditions different in different places, local and state efforts to work out constructive programs would seem to us to have much more likelihood of success.

Sen. Sparkman, commenting on the President's proposal, said he thought Mr. Eisenhower "would be better advised to ask the governors of states where there are tensions to set up bipartisan commissions to look into this matter."

Gov. Folsom has proposed creation of a biracial commission in Alabama, although the Legislature has not acted on the plan.

We believe that community as well as state efforts along such lines are basic needs in seeking to solve these problems.

In his introduction to a special New York Times report on the integration issue in the South, John N. Popham, Southern regional correspondent, wrote: "The impact of the problem has not fallen evenly upon the whole South. It is not just one problem, but hundreds of problems, and these problems often exist side by side in the same state, the same community, the same group of persons." In that kind of a situation, many different approaches are needed and those who know most about a particular community, state and problem or set of problems can, of course, be especially useful in meeting it. The Supreme Court itself has, of course, recognized differences in these conditions by communities in giving the federal district courts wide responsibility in passing on legal matters having to do with implementation of its decision against segregation in the schools.

Mr. Popham also wrote: "The Times survey shows a need for leadership at every level from Washington to Main Street. It emphasizes the harm that can come from emotional outbursts by the leaders of either race.

"And it restates the conviction of many race relations experts in the region. They believe that, in the end, any regional reconstruction of race relations will have to be hammered out across the table in thousands of scattered school districts; that it must always be shaped to the needs and prejudices of the whites and Negroes who must live with it."

We would not say that investigative action or a discussion meeting on the national level could not ever be useful, but just now we regard local and state efforts to find solutions of local and state problems in this connection as more likely to be helpful.

National approaches of this kind, at this time, might add to confusion, misunderstanding and tension.

Out-Bloc The Folsom Bloc

EDITOR, THE ADVERTISER—I have read your column headed "Name's McKAY—Howdy." P. 4-A

I, and thousands of others I am sure, would like to have Rep. Charles McKay represent Alabama in the national committee, but I am afraid that Gov. Folsom will be elected by his colored brothers and the Y'All Come votes with some to spare.

History often repeats itself. As a young boy I used to watch Mom call, "Chick, Chick," and the chicks would come running to get something without scratching for it. Dad could go out and call the pigs and they would come squealing for something without rooting for it.

Once there was a donor in Washington who gave out doles. Was he ever defeated at the ballot box? No.

Once we had a governor we didn't like, and called him ugly names. He promised to give no more of this and more of that and said, "Y'All Come." He was elected governor again.

Once there was a decision rendered for us to live and abide byA little dose here, a little dose there until we have it everywhere.

We should face the facts as they face us, by organizing, working and voting in a bloc, to defeat NAACP and their helpers.

Some may say I am a Democrat or I am a member of the White Citizens Council. I am both.

Misquoted

Editor, The Advertiser:

I received today a copy of your paper of April 1 in which is printed an article containing statements credited to me which I did not make. Some of them verge on libel and slander, and I hope you will give equally prominent space to correction or denial.

I did not say, as your paper says I did, that a general feeling toward the Montgomery situation in Columbia is one of "contempt and disgust for white Montgomery."

The paragraph regarding efforts of a few Stephens College instructors to obtain food service at a soda fountain here for Negroes is so hopelessly twisted that I am at a loss to know how any competent reporter could have produced it from what I said. The incident did not occur "a short time ago," and I did not say that it did.

I did not say "a Negro reverend" I know went to the top brass at Stephens and demanded they stop letting their teachers do that. As far as I know they have stopped. In the first place I do not call a minister, black or white, a 'reverend.' In the second lace, I do not know this man. In the third place I do not refer to college administrators as 'top brass.' In the fourth place, the minister's action, as it was reported to me, was not a demand to the college head or any other college administrator, but rather a suggestion to an instructor who was active in the racial equality effort that the move to force food service at a place which was unwilling to serve Negroes was not in the best interests of either the Negroes or the white people.

I did not say that a former president of the college—your reporter neglected to obtain his first name and misspelled his last name—lost his job because of his "liberal" views toward race mixing at Stephens College. The gentleman in question resigned, as I recall it, after being given a leave of absence with full pay. So far as I know the question of race mixing at Stephens College was never discussed. I resent very deeply the scurrilous attribution to me.

I did not say, "At Stephens they are urging whites and Negroes to mingle quickly and without hesitation, although I'm sure it would raise hell if a Negro tried to eat in one of Stephens' dining halls."

If your reporter had made an honest—or capable—effort to evaluate the racial situation in Columbia, which he told me was his mission, he would have said in his story, as I told him, that Columbia has at least one first-class eating place downtown, to say nothing of those on the University of Missouri campus, in which Negroes are served exactly as white people.

He would have said, as I told him, that Negroes, in certain circumstances, are accepted as guests at some of Columbia's better lodging places.

He would have told you that, when they are members of groups in which both races work together—and we have many of them in Columbia—they sit down together at meals in Columbia's best public dining rooms.

He would have said, as I told him, that Columbia has an orderly process of integration in its school system that is progressing satisfactorily.

He would have said, as I told him, that Columbia is to vote within a few weeks upon a program of slum clearance and housing with which we hope to improve the living conditions of our citizens, a large proportion of whom are Negroes, who live in sub-standard housing.

He would have said, as I told him, that Negroes attend University of Missouri athletic contests, sitting where they wish; eating popcorn and drinking Cokes at the refreshment stands with both white students and white citizens of Columbia.

Perhaps there is some explanation of why your reporter asked me for aid in developing a story on race relations and then turned out a piece which misquotes me, sentence after sentence and paragraph after paragraph. I don't know what it is.

I will appreciate it if you will let me know at your earliest convenience when you will provide proper correction or retraction in this matter, and if you will send me three copies of the newspaper in which the retraction is made.

The Child Welfare Worker of the Department of Public Welfare in Lowndes County was on a routine mission of mercy in an isolated section of the county last week. This lady is a graduate of Agnes Scott College in Decatur, Ga., and a graduate student of the Universities of Mississippi and Alabama. She is a state and federal employe. For eight years she has carried out her assignments giving help to the white and colored unfortunates of Lowndes County.

Alone and unprotected on a rural road, she passed a colored school just dismissing for the day. Two teen-aged Negro boys refused to move from the road as she was passing. When she slowed to a stop, a rock was thrown at her car by a Negro girl and another Negro girl spit on the ground at her feet. She was surrounded by a group of "hostiles." This occasion, as much as the celebrated autherine Lucy case, calls for serious thinking by citizens of all races. These Negro children would not have acted in such a maner if their parents had not been subjected to outside propaganda. The progress for better racial relations which is the work of more than three generations is being nullified by foreign agitators who do not give a fig for the workable status-quo.

This incident in Lowndes County, remote as it may seem, has all the elements of tragedy in its content that the Tuscaloosa incident has. This "happening" however, will most assuredly not reach the public press as its celebrated counterpart did. Why? Because the NAACP will not recognize it for its undertones of Negro violence, and it will never be printed in the Detroit, Chicago, or New York newspapers.

Folsom Is Half Right

Editor, The Advertiser:

I agree with Jim Folsom when he says that 98% of the people in Alabama are against "mob rule." In fact, I would say that 99% are against it and that same 99% are also against putting a Negro in a white school.

Blackout Boycott News

Editor, The Advertiser:

I read Joe Azbell's columns Sunday and Monday. Part of it was amusing and the rest was good horse sense. If let alone, everything would settle down and be as it used to be.

Newspapers and television are giving too much publicity to the disturbing situation. The leaders are eating it up, seeing themselves on television and being on the front page of the newspapers. If all the publicity would stop, they would see that no one cares one way or the other.

Both white and colored people have worked together and been good to each other. Let's see how quick all this disturbance can be stopped. Give less publicity to the agitators, then they will see that the white and colored people have lived together in peace of mind and have settled their own affairs. Peace of mind is all that matters now.

Folsom Takes Stump Monday To Make 'Report to People'

Journal & Constitution P. 15-A
Atlanta, Ga.

Sizzling Political Campaign Seen; Governor Cites 'Mobocracy' Issue

Sun. 3-18-56

By FRED TAYLOR
Staff Writer, The Birmingham News
Special to The Atlanta Journal-Constitution

MONTGOMERY, Ala., March 17—Gov. James E. Folsom, warming up for a sizzling political campaign by declaring the issue at stake in Alabama today is "democracy against mobocracy" (mob rule), is preparing to take the stump Monday to make his promised "report to the people."

He will tee off with courthouse addresses at Fayette and Jasper, in a two-a-day speech-making swing through northwest Alabama that will formally launch his campaign for Democratic national committeeman from this state. And he is expected to be busy several weeks on this stumping tour that will take him into a majority of the 67 counties.

Convention Plan

Gov. Folsom also is expected to plump for his newly advanced plan for a constitutional convention as the "most effective and forceful means" of solving Alabama's racial problems.

Despite the governor's recent declaration that he's not interested in anyone else's campaign and will stay out of all other races, his candidacy for the key Democratic post automatically makes him the central figure in this state's party and public office camps.

Folsom has adopted what he calls a "no slate, no hate, uninstructed and undecided" platform on which he is seeking election of Alabama's official connecting link with the Democratic National Committee.

But since he has close friends and political appointees running for four state offices, including two Supreme Court judgeships and the presidency of the Public Service Commission, slates were speedily forming. The governor's adherents, quite naturally, are looking to him as the bellwether.

Gov. Folsom long has advocated a constitutional convention as the most effective way to bring about legislative reappointment. With a Supreme Court advisory opinion having cleared the way, the Legislature passed and submitted a constitutional amendment for ratification or rejection by the state's voters next Nov. 1. This would reshuffle House and Senate membership. Folsom can be expected to bear down hard for this in his stumping tour.

It was only this week that Gov. Folsom proposed a constitutional convention to rewrite the state's basic law and give the people a chance to voice their "wishes and desires concerning the preservation of our traditional way of life."

The governor pointed out that Negro co-ed Autherine Lucy, recently expelled from University of Alabama, has asked for a federal court order to readmit her. And he warned that this might bring on more rioting and mob violence at the university.

Gov. Folsom's constitutional convention proposal as the best way to solve racial problems brought a blistering attack on the chief executive by Jefferson Sen. Albert Boutwell. He asserted the governor's efforts in behalf of maintaining segregation were belated and charged that the people have been "blindfolded, misled and confused." He also pointed out that the governor offered no specific suggestions as to how the racial problems could be solved.

It was in a separate statement that Gov. Folsom declared that the political issue in Alabama at this time "is democracy against mobocracy," adding that "I stand firmly on the side of democracy." "Law and order is going to prevail," said the governor. "Mobocracy will be consumed by its own evils within. I believe that a great majority of our sound-thinking people in Alabama believe in preserving our peaceful way of life through the Democratic processes, and not through mob rule."

Indirectly Hits Griffin

He added that "the University of Alabama took its stand against mobocracy by expelling a student who led mobs. Thus, the university outlawed mobocracy."

Gov. Folsom was referring to action of university trustees in expelling Leonard Wilson, 20-year-old student from Selma, who was identified as one of the students taking part in mob violence at the school over presence of the Negro coed.

Gov. Folsom also took an indirect poke at Georgia Gov. Marvin Griffin, recently a guest of the Alabama chief executive, for the tone of a speech Griffin delivered at a White Citizens Council meeting near Abbeville last week. He did not call Gov. Griffin by name, but described him as "a very distinguished public official of a sister state."

ALABAMA GOVERNOR ASKS SANE APPROACH TO RACIAL ISSUES

Newsman Says Folsom Moderating Influence On Crisis In Alabama

Sun. 3-18-56

By ROBERT S. BIRD
Of The New York Herald Tribune

[The following will appear in the New York Herald and several other major U. S. dailies this morning. It is printed simultaneously in The Advertiser by courtesy of the Herald Tribune. Alabama newspapermen will be amused by some of the hooch in Reporter Bird's study, but it is nevertheless an exceptional piece of work.—Ed.]

MONTGOMERY, Ala., March 17 — The most relaxed man in the whole state of Alabama today is the man around whom the storm of the race conflict beats most furiously. Gov. James E. Folsom, who is remembered in the North as "Kissin' Jim" and is known to all hereabouts as "Big Jim," remains totally unruffled by the winds that shake the colonnaded Capitol of Alabama.

While the outside world looks in alarm on recent events in Alabama and his own citizens cry for action from him, "Big Jim" sits enigmatically on Olympus. Or more exactly, sits most of the time in his office in the Capitol, and much of the time on the grassy bank of his favorite fishing stream.

He was just as imperturbable the other night sitting in the Executive Mansion, discussing the Alabama situation with this correspondent over champagne and T-bone steaks. In fact, he was so relaxed that when time came to sit down to dinner he unnotched his belt several inches and attacked his meat in shirt-sleeves from the lordly Chief Executive's chair at the head of the state dining table.

FOLSOM

BIRD

Mrs. Folsom, an attractive and thoroughly charming woman, had chided the Governor for insisting that our small dinner party of four (including the Governor's executive secretary) be served in the state dining room. The table was big enough to seat a regiment of hussars and the chandelier, had it been fully lighted, could have illuminated Times Square.

She suggested that the family dining room would be cosier. But the Governor overruled her with indulgent wave of hand as if to suggest that the presence of this interviewer rendered the occasion at least a semi-state affair, even if not full dress. So we merely pitched our conversation to a higher register in order to maintain communication with the vivacious Mrs. Folsom down at the far end of the table. We dined informally in the midst of elegance.

GARGANTUA

Gov. Folsom's height is well known — six feet eight inches. But that might as well read eight feet six inches because when a person of ordinary height stands beside "Big Jim" a couple of extra feet difference in his height wouldn't seem to make much difference. He is a startlingly big man.

Give such a man the personality of an overgrown, slow-talking, hard-to-get-mad country boy with lots of hidden savvy and the first lineaments of his portrait appear. Enhance that with a political genius capable of engaging the fiercest loyalties and deepest enmities; of shrugging off abject defeats, personal contumely, backfiring razzle - dazzle political stunts, and rancor toward unrelenting enemies, some high lights begin to emerge.

Touch up the picture with the hint of a brooding, introspective look in the gray eyes, and a habit of lapsing into silences which he never seems to notice —and which he finally breaks by picking up the thread of conversation where he left off. Then dress this loungy giant in well-tailored clothes, invest him with legendary personal misdeeds both bizarre and horrendous, make his political maneuvers often seem suicidal and wholly inexplicable, give him a cat's ability to land on his feet—and you have a recognizable sketch of "Big Jim" Folsom, the so-called enigma of Alabama.

'HOGWASH,' QUOTH HE

At this moment, he would appear to be the most unpopular person in the state of Alabama. It all happened since integration became an issue, and his unpopularity seems to extend even to those ordinarily loyal constituents in the rural areas who voted him into office in the fall of 1954.

With the people of the state demanding piteously that he do something to help stem the "black tide" which threatens to engulf them, he is accused by some extremists of inaction so flagrant as to warrant impeachment. He speaks with disrespect for the white Citizens Councils movement, which is organizing throughout the state to fight integration, and a result is that Folsom people are plotting his downfall. He gives a mild rebuke to Negro agitators and the cry goes up that he is really a "nigger lover" — the vilest label that can be pinned on a man here.

The desperate legislators, seeking to appease the folks back home, put through nullification and interposition legislation, along with other measures so wild as to cause even them to smile a little nervously, and the Governor says, "Hogwash," then goes fishing.

After six weeks of traveling around Alabama, encountering passion, fear, hatred and frustration in abundance, it was quite an experience to sit down and talk about it for four hours with the most relaxed man in Alabama.

IT AIN'T GONNA RAIN

Either he's all wrong and Alabama is in a mighty bad fix, or he's a lot right and Alabama is safe; safe for itself and safe for the Union, with certain painless modifications of viewpoints still to be attained, perhaps.

At any rate, the Governor's alleged inaction is now ended. This week he intends to go out among "the people" and tell them that there is no real crisis at all here in Alabama.

He's going to tell them that there is nothing to wrry about, to watch carefully against white folks trying to stir up trouble, to calm down and sit tight and let him handle matters in his own way. He'll give his personal report to the people in his own way in the courthouse towns of all the 67 counties, he says, and he won't even talk about his own little campaign to win office as a Democratic national committeeman. He's in that race against a couple of formidable candidates, including the author of Alabama's nullification law.

POPULARITY CONTEST

In short, the Governor is about to go to his people with aid and comfort in their frustration. He is one of them and they know it. And if their aroused passions are as elemental as the good earth itself, so is his unworriedness. At least, so he suggests. Wise in all the tricks of Southern stump politicking, "Big Jim" may yet quiet down this wave of race hatred. If he does, it will be another Folsom miracle.

The experts laugh at the idea. They say he's too late; this time he has fallen flat on his face for good. He shrugs with unconcern. He may not win the committeeman post because, as he says, the wave of race hatred will not have passed until nearer the Fall election. And this committeeman showdown is to be in May. But he will draw fire away from other Folsom candidates, and away from his own legislative program. Later, he is convinced, all misunderstanding will have passed.

"I've been through it all before," he says, with weary recollection.

LET 'EM BELLOW

"Let them spleen their vent, or vent their spleen, or however you say it," he adds. "All I want is for the people to speak.

The Governor has just launched what he considers to be an ingenius bit of strategy He has called for a constitutional convention to "legalize" the "hogwash" of nullification and interposition. As it happens, the Governor has long wanted a constitutional convention for altogether other reasons, largely to further his own state legislative program, which includes reapportionment of certain counties which are generally anti-Folsom. The Legislature in the past had no intention of giving him his constitutional convention because it feels that might open the door to all kinds of Folsom law-making mischief.

HUMBUG MEDICINE?

But now they are feeling the sting of a real needle, because the Governor has got a very simple stump-talk rationalization for the convention. Nobody understands interposition anyway, and the rural folks least of all. They are backing on the theory that any medicine is better than none. But here comes "Big Jim" saying that it is humbug medicine, and the real cure is a constitutional convention "to make every thing legal.' He pretends to be surprised that legislators are nettled.

"In such a convention they can even see-seed (sic) from the union," he explains. They can authorize me to call out the National Guard against the Federal troops. Like I say there's been so much hell-raising I thought they would want to do it."

"Why," he says with a gleam in his eye, "they could require the Governor to take an oath promising not to support the Constitution of the United States. Do you know that all the state and county and local officials of Alabama are bound by oath to support the Federal government? Only a constitutional convention can release them from that oath. Let the people speak in convention assembled!"

'SAM HOUSTON DIDN'T'

Would the Governor accept release of his oath to the Federal government in such a convention?

"Sam Houston didn't he grins, "but all the other Confederate governors did."

"But would you?"

"Sam Houston didn't."

And the Governor's going to point out to his stump audiences another "important point." They seem to have overlooked the fact that the State of Alabama has not been made, up to now a party to any school integration suit. So why the rush to fret about the integration matter? And why hasn't it been made a party to such a suit. Well, the Governor's going to call attention to the fact that he's kept in pretty close touch with some of the Negro leaders who are causing trouble elsewhere in that respect.

SCOTCH AND SODA

Nothing has caused so much heart-sickness among the Folsom following as the story that went the rounds to the effect that last November he drank Scotch whisky with Congressman Adam Clayton Powell, New York's Negro Congressman. The Governor will have to meet that accusation at the courthouse steps of Alabama, and it is a good guess he will explain that Rep. Powell is one of those Negro leaders with whom it was important for him to talk —even in his office in the Executive Manison.

And there will be still other points to be hammered home. How come that people are getting so fussed about integration that they are blaming good Democrats on the Supreme Court for their troubles when the fact is the Republican President and his Republican Attorney General are responsible for prosecution of the integration suits?

The Governor, moreover, will appeal to the patriotic impulses of his sore-tried supporters, for they are just as willing to die for their country as they are to die for Dixie, and American traditions are unassailable even here, where one is assumed to be include segregation in the South.

He will hit out against "mobocracy" and take a firm stand for democratic law and order. And he will say these things standing up there on the platform in a white suit which makes him look even bigger than the giant he is. A man of the people, or perhaps a father symbol for the temporarily confused. And they will listen to this man who rode to victory in his last campaign on the emblazoned but folksy slogan, "Y'All Come!"—meaning to his inauguration as Governor.

HYPNOTIZED BIRD

It's almost hypnotic listening to him at home giving this picture of himself on the stump; sitting in his chair with head hunched down between his huge shoulders, speaking slowly as if forging in his mind the exactly right image of the platform scene that he counts on for redemption.

As he talks, Mrs. Folsom, mother of four of his six children, girlishly plump, sparkling of eye, eager of manner, listens to pater familias with pleasure in her gaze and occasionally gentle dissent. Her candidate for Democratic presidential nominee is not his. His is Harry S. Truman, period. If Mr. Truman doesn't run, then the Governor will cross that bridge when he comes to it.

The Governor was a widower when he met Mrs. Folsom in 1946 while on a speaking tour. In those days he always kissed every pretty girl he could, but he asked this one, the former Jamelle Moore to marry him. She did two years later, and it is plain that there is great warmth between them.

This may be "hogwash," but the truth is the Alabama race situation seemed a lot less inflammatory to this correspondent after the session with "Big Jim" Folsom. This much is certain, he is by design or not, a moderating influence on the crisis in Alabama.

Courier-Journal 5-4-56

NOW we have heard everything. The White Citizens' Councils, already having credited Moscow with running both the Supreme Court and the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, discovers that the N.A.A.C.P. and other subversive forces "inspired" the "rock and roll" madness currently entrancing the teen-age set and decrees that "rock and roll" has got to go.

At least down in Anniston, Ala., that is. There the busy-body agents of the Councils are checking on the owners of drugstores and restaurants and pressuring them to remove the offending records.

What good this augurs for the holy cause of white supremacy we cannot imagine, escape-minded as we are anyway about "rock and roll." But experience suggests that it could spread like wildfire and burn up quite as much W.C.C. energy as shielding Mississippi from non-racist speakers, yanking "racially subversive" books from Southern libraries, kicking out white clergymen who don't toe the racist line, in South Carolina and Georgia, firing state employees in Louisiana and South Carolina guilty of believing (and, worse, saying) that the Supreme Court is indeed supreme, boycotting newspapers and other enterprises not properly enthusiastic about the W.C.C., etc., etc.

This mad attempt to suppress all but one kind of thinking and one kind of expression in the South comes ill from a section that once phrased the nation's best concepts of freedom. It indicates that current conformity notions in the South are likely to cause more lasting damage to the South's whites (as BOOKER T. WASHINGTON said slavery did) than to its Negroes.

Not that the W.C.C. in its more ludicrous activities is too unlike other pressure groups in the nation—groups that start off with one objective and then, like the D.A.R. or the American Legion or half a dozen others, set themselves up as the anointed guardians of the nation's mores in almost every field. And like the N.A.A.C.P. in its more feckless interludes as a common scold and would-be censor of nursery tales, greeting cards, military publications, textboooks and the U. S. Navy's right to visit foreign ports.

But the W.C.C., dedicated as it is not to upholding the law of the land but to "beating" it and harassing its own critics into silence, tops the current list by far. Its antics and its tactics, and their success in many a Southern community, show how far the South has slipped since 1860.

That was when it was possible for South Carolina's most distinguished lawyer, JAMES L. PETIGRU, to be a minority spokesman for the hated Unionists and still be honored by his opponents for his independence of mind. Pointing to the Baptist church in Columbia in which the fateful Secession Convention was beginning, he said: "It looks like a church, but it is now a lunatic asylum; go right there and you will find one hundred and sixty-four maniacs within." Yet when he died in Charleston in 1863, in the full tumult of a civil war, the South-ers of that day could and did praise the very qualities of character which had made him, though one of them, their most outspoken critic.

They could and did raise, in war-time, a glowing monument to his name. It was a deed and is a monument that honors still not PETIGRU so much as the Southerners of that day. And it stands as a silent reproach to their descendants in the W.C.C. —if any. For they are the ones who today would silence the PETIGRUS and demean their own heritage by demeaning all but those who think and speak their way.

The Advertiser, The Monitor Observes, Has Pin-Pointed Racial Conditions Elsewhere In The U.S.

Christian Science Monitor

UNDOUBTEDLY the Southern editor who is most enjoying himself in the paradoxically very serious segregation debate gripping the South is Grover C. Hall Jr., editor-in-chief of The Montgomery Advertiser. He is a writer with pungency whose editorial page today may be judged every bit as interesting as it was when his father edited it and in 1928 won a Pulitzer prize for anti-Ku Klux Klan editorials.

Mr. Hall is to be classified neither as liberal nor conservative as to the Southern scene, and especially race. But he is a stickler for facts about segregation throughout the nation, and like most Southern editors, deplores Northern newspaper treatment of the race problems as if it were something indigenous only to the South.

Chicago Inquiry

IN HIS editorial columns, and through telephone interviews by members of his staff, he has succeeded in stirring up widespread interests in racial conditions in several Northern communities. These efforts he is running on his editorial page as a series under the caption, "Tell It Not In Gath, Publish It Not In The Streets of Askelon."

Mr. Hall also has attracted attention because he has patiently sought to answer the multitudinous questions of Northern newspapermen who descended on Alabama's capital city to report the Negro bus boycott. It is obvious from a variety of written comments, including those of French and English newspapermen visiting Montgomery, that what Mr. Hall has had to say, and write, has forced them to respect his pin-pointing of the fact of racial conditions elsewhere.

As to segregation in Alabama, Mr. Hall speaks carefully. But he believes that "as we have said repeatedly, there isn't going to be any general mixing of the races in Southern schools for years to come."

Remembering race riots in Chicago, Mr. Hall put reporter Tom Johnson on the phone with a tape recorder to talk with Louis P. Dennocenzo, who was described in a major editorial page feature as "president of the South Deering Improvement Association," a group "which he says has 700 members" protesting a residential influx of Negroes in the Trumbull Homes development.

'Incredibly Violent'

THE interview brought statements from Mr. Dennocenzo, a civil engineer, that as of last month, approximately 150 Chicago policemen were allocated to that area to prevent feared outbreak of violence. This, Mr. Johnson reported in Mr. Dennocenzo's words, was a round-the-clock patrol. Mr. Hall allocated four of his six editorial columns to the report. His point, of course, was obviously that Chicago, too, had a touchy race situation.

Mr. Hall noted wryly in his editorial column a Chicago report that the Trumbull Homes special detachment had been reduced "to a mere corporal's guard of 93," and added: "Alabamians, do not despair of an improvement in Chicago race relations. They seem incredibly violent to a Southerner . . ."

Mr. Hall's staff produced an article following interviews with society editors of the New York Times, Herald Tribune, and Journal American, the Chicago Tribune, Detroit Free Press, Los Angeles Times, St. Louis Post-Dispatch, and Washington Post. Again, the report ran four of The Advertiser's six columns, the results showing that of those papers, the Times had published one picture of a Negro bride, the Herald-Tribune four or five. None of the other papers reported they had ever printed a Negro bride's icture in the social columns. To Mr. Hall, and of course to many Southerners, this seemed an effective counterattack against charges that the Southern press handles Negro news on a segregated basis.

Los Angeles Views

IN AN editorial, Mr. Hall took one and a half columns to discuss the New York Times report that in Milwaukee "the racial issue has been raised against Mayor Frank P. Zeidler, who is seeking reelection." Mr. Hall talked, according to the editorial, to the Milwaukee Journal's acting chief editorial writer Paul Ringler, and got from him a statement that "Negroes moving into previously white areas are resented by white residents who fear that the influx will destroy their property values." The editorial said Mr. Ringler "confessed that he was genuinely baffled by the situation."

When the newspaper's entertainment editor went to Los Angeles to cover the Motion Picture Academy awards, he returned to write for Mr. Hall that the people he met, on learning he was from Montgomery, asked about the boycott. "They were well educated and clear thinking people. They had definite views on the subject of segregation. Almost 100% of them had the same views as a true Southerner. The people I met are with us."

Mr. Hall put reporter Steve Lesher on the phone to talk with Columbia, Mo., Mayor Howard Lang. Noting the state university is in Columbia, and two junior colleges for women, including Stephens, Mr. Lesher reported Mayor Lang admitted he had never seen a Negro in a white theater, had not seen one in white restaurants, and that "he's sure the white hotels don't allow Negroes." Mr. Lesher wrote the mayor preferred "not to give his opinion on integration in the city."

Dearborn Report

STEPHENS' assistant dean of women, Mr. Lesher wrote, said, "I can't say if we would examine an application from a Negro firl any more closely than one from a white girl."

Reporter Tom Johnson interviewed Mayor Orville Hubbard of Dearborn, Mich., fourth largest city in the state, quoted him as saying: "I am for complete segregation, one million per cent on all levels." Mayor Hubbard was also quoted as saying "not a single Negro" lives in Dearborn because "everytime we hear of a Negro moving in—for instance we had one last year—we respond quicker than you do to a fire." But in Dearborn, wrote Mr. Johnson, 15,000 Negroes work at Ford's River Rouge plant."

Talking with John Fischer, editor of Harper's magazine, Mr. Johnson was told, regarding The Advertiser's series on non-Southern segregation: "I think that sort of thing may, in the end, have some helpful repercussions in the North, particularly if you can get your stories reprinted."

Thus far, in the opinion of newspaper observers, Mr. Hall has done an outstanding job at least of pointing up non-Dixie segregation. He proposed to James A. Wechsler, editor of the New York Post, that Mr. Wechsler assign Post reporter Murray Kempton—then in Montgomery on the boycott story—to help him, Mr. Hall, do a story on segregation in New York. Mr. Hall contended, later, he had reached an agreement with Mr. Kempton on this.

Attention Drawn

BUT Mr. Wechsler said he was assigning a Negro reporter, Ted Poston, to a New York segregation story. Mr. Hall replied that he was willing to work with Mr. Kempton or his "opposite number," Mr. Wechsler himself. But the offer was not acceptable and Mr. Hall has not made any further effort to join in a story on New York City segregation.

Mr. Hall, it can be seen, has stirred up a good deal of attention, more than any other Southern newsman recently. The Alabama Legislature has passed a resolution commending his campaign, urging other Alabama newspapers to "join in The Advertiser's campaign to present the Negro in his true light—as an American dilemma—in the hope that the Northern press will assume its obligation to present the racial problem in its proper perspective."

Casting The First Stone

The Hartford Courant

Grover Hall Jr., is a soft-spoken—and outspoken—newspaper editor in Montgomery, Ala. It incensed him to see dozens of Northern newspapermen arriving to cover the Autherine Lucy case. Aren't there, he said in effect, enough cases of discrimination and racial pressures up North to keep you busy? Some admitted there were pockets of prejudice well worth covering; others that most of it existed by "gentlemen's agreement," to quote the title of a novel of the past. Some denied any, of course. Mr. Hall must be mailing them clippings today.

The Detroit housing incident involving family of John W. Rouse, at 70 trying to move into a modest brick home in an all-white neighborhood, ought to bring tears of shame to the decent folk in the city. Not only is it shameful that the affair was handled by hoodlumism, without any basis of fact. It is also shameful that the defense of the family's being white was even evoked. It only underlines the tensions and prejudices that do exist. This is not the only example in Midwest of such troubles; there have been cases in the past in Cicero, Ill., for instance. In the large cities where populations are of mixed racial, religious, and national groups there is known tension.

This is not to say that it does not exist here in Hartford, too. And every community, perhaps, should heal itself first. The South remains the most vicious location of race prejudice, one where equal opportunity is openly and flagrantly denied to American citizens of a different hue. But prejudice and discrimination are far from outlawed in the North and West as well. The basic cure remains education, and its goal of tolerance.

An International Problem As Well As National

EDITOR, THE ADVERTISER—I have read in today's Chicago Daily News the report by Bert Collier to the effect that you are reporting in your newspaper accounts of race conflict in the United States beyond the South. Let me, as a Northerner who has worked all his life in intergroup relations, state that I think you are on the right track just so long as you do not use these accounts as justification for a do-nothing policy. Two wrongs never make a right.

In fact the problem of race relations is a national problem. For nearly 20 years I have held to this point of view in my work. There are differences of degree and, indeed, of substance among various sections of the nation but the basic problem is the same. And since the problem is a national one, the solutions must be national in nature.

But I'll go you one better. The problem is a world problem. Wherever one goes, there is group conflict. For the past four years I have lived and worked in Europe, in the cause of Brotherhood. I spent most of that time in a dozen major capitals of Free Europe. And in all nations of Europe there are problems of group conflict. Where did anyone ever get the idea that the South is the only section of the human family with such problems?

In Holland, for example, Catholics and Protestants and "humanists" are always at war, with three kinds of all organizations, labor, professional, school, youth, radio, newspapers, even department stores. One wonders how Holland is able to keep a government.

In Belgium, there is constant conflict between Flemish Belgium and French Belgium, with petitions always being circulated to separate the two.

France has serious problems with Italian and Polish refugee workers and with North Africans who live there. Some 500,000 (at least) colored Frenchmen (not Negroes) are victims of many kinds of discrimination.

Germany has its refugees who are not liked by natives. North and South Italians are not cordial to each other. Even Switzerland has tension between its German and French speaking people. In Geneva, for example, there are twice as many German speaking Swiss "immigrants" who are not accepted by the French Genevese. And so on, ad infinitum.

As for the rest of the world, I need only to mention India versus Pakistan and Israel versus the Arabs to suggest some of the conflicts. And let us not forget South Africa.

So, wherever there are people, there is group conflict. That's because it is natural for people to cluster in groups of one kind or another. And the majority or dominant group always builds up a case of superiority over its inferior minority. That's as natural as breathing. But it doesn't make any group better or worse, by virtue of birth. It only proves that people are people wherever we find them.

The striking thing, all over the world, however, is that, for one reason or another, the depressed groups are rising up and demanding equality of opportunity and justice. And there are always enough people in the dominant group, with religious ideals and who follow democratic principles, to give solid support to the demands of the minority groups.

Also, all over the world, people are telling Americans that the American Revolution really started something and the rising up of people in Africa and Asia and Europe is a continuation of what we started in 1776. That's one reason why it is so important for the United States to keep the leadership in seeing that all people everywhere have the right to life, liberty and the pursuit of happiness.

So, let the United States solve its own problems but give help wherever there are people without full justice, whether in the South or the North or in Europe or Asia or Africa. The tide of affairs is such that the American revolution cannot be stopped. Our forefathers started something not yet finished. In fact, it may never be finished but a lot of us need to help it along right now.

Keep It Up

Editor, The Advertiser:

I wish to commend you for your series of excellent articles, "Publish It Not In The Streets Of Askelon."

I am often in the eastern cities and have carefully noted that they do have segregation and that they do not accept the colored race with open arms—as outside agitators would have us believe.

You are doing a good job on informing our people of the actual conditions in the North and East, and I hope that you will continue to do so.

Good Counterattack

Editor, The Advertiser:

As a long time subscriber to The Advertiser and regular reader of your editorial page, I wish to congratulate you upon your recent editorials, excerpts from other papers and the many letters concerning the segregation issue.

It is apparent that the NAACP and their left-wing rabble rousers were determined to cram complete and immediate segregation down our throats while we were still complacent and somewhat groggy from the initial impact of the Supreme Court decision. They were beginning to exert real pressure, but it now appears that the pressure is being lessened somewhat and I think you have the answer. The way to relieve and divert that pressure from the South is to arouse public opinion, not only in Alabama and the South, but throughout the rest of the country by turning the spotlight right back in their faces, by revealing the glaring examples of some of the segregated, poverty stricken and crime ridden sections of cities in the East and North.

The peoples of the South are beginning to rouse themselves to the danger facing them and as a recent speaker said, "When white people become aroused and make up their minds, they can be devilishly clever and determined."

Keep up your good work by continuing to turn the penetrating spotlight of truth on to some of these Northern and Eastern cities and their misguided crusaders. Let them clean up their own back yards before coming South with their "Holier Than Thou" attitude.

Stevenson Comes South

The Lee County Bulletin

Gov. Adlai Stevenson's campaign tour of Florida and The Montgomery Advertiser's poll of candidates for delegate to the Democratic national convention join to furnish interesting speculation.

Will Mr. Stevenson be able in Florida to reverse the tide and re-assume the position of No. 1 Demicratic candidate?

Will the Florida preferential primary reveal anything conclusive about the rank and file voter sentiment with respect to Stevenson's chances over Kefauver? Montgomery, Ala.

Will the Folsom forces in Alabama be able to capture the majority of this state's delegate places for Kefauver?

The answer to the first two questions is wrapped up in (1) how well Gov. Stevenson does in Florida and (2) whether the ever growing Republican vote down there is used to scuttle Stevenson as some believe the Minnesota Republicans helped head him off up there.

To get his campaign train back on the track Mr. Stevenson will have to defeat Sen. Kefauver by a rather handsome majority. A close vote will help Kefauver. No matter that most Florida Democratic party leaders favor Stevenson. If rank and file Democrats do not turn out in large numbers to re-fire his lagging bid that will be a sign that Adlai has had it. He says even that result would not stop him from going ahead with his bid for California's delegation. But a narrow win in Florida would be no victory at all, and most likely would result in Stevenson leaders advising him to throw in the towel.

Family Squabble

The Selma Times-Journal

Angrily denying that he and other members of the state Oil and Gas Board have "personal interest" in the well-spacing bill which caused a four-day filibuster in the Alabama Senate, House Speaker Rankin Fite declared he holds no "spot leases" and would not benefit from the legislation.

Fite's denial was prompted by charges made by Senator Reuben Newton, whom the House speaker characterized as the "polecat senator from Walker County."

Not satisfied with this blast from the House floor, Fite sought out Newton and repeated his denunciation face to face.

As both of the major figures involved in this set-to are Folsomites, and as Folsomites know each other better than anyone else, The Times-Journal does not feel inclined to comment.

But if both of them just will keep on talking, "perhaps the people of Alabama will learn a good many things they should know.

Dixie Editor Bares North's Own Racial Crisis

Herald

Sixth in a Series

By BERT COLLIER
Herald Staff Writer

MONTGOMERY, Ala. — Once again this beautiful city has become the capital of a civil war.

This time the weapon is the pen, mightier than swords or atom bombs, and victory most likely will go to the South.

Grover C. Hall Jr., editor-in-chief of The Montgomery Advertiser, has set out to prove that repression of Negro minorities is not strictly a Southern blight.

He has succeeded beyond his hopes.

So far Hall has spotlighted racial strife and tension in New York, Chicago and Detroit and there is much more to come.

"I could keep five reporters busy on this story if I had the staff to do it," Hall said.

Mon. 4-2-56

"I AM SIMPLY trying to demonstrate the evident, but sorrowful fact, that race disharmony follows wherever the Negro settles in significant numbers."

Hall's idea developed when the world's press descended on his city to report the disturbing and continuing boycott of the bus company by Negroes. It was an economic protest against a social custom — segregated seating — that is without parallel in this country.

There were more than a hundred regular and special writers, TV and radio commentators in this usually quiet city.

They came from England, France, Germany, Japan, Canada and Australia, as well as from most American cities.

The majority, at one time or another, found their way to the editorial sanctum of Hall, personable young editor who succeeded his late father in the job.

HALL TRIED to indoctrinate the visitors in the mores and attitudes of the Deep South, and help them cover a difficult story.

He did a good job. Ralph Hammond, press secretary for Alabama's Gov. James (Kissing Jim) Folsom; who also had problems with the writers' regiment, says the whole outlook of the visiting press changed during progress of the story.

"Many of the reporters came down with a specific assignment — to castigate Alabama for mishandling the race problem," said Hammond.

"The longer they stayed, the better insight they had into local attitudes and beliefs. Their writing became more objective, their stories temperate and understanding.

"It has been the first opportunity to get the Southern point of view before such a widespread audience."

Hall was both pleased and annoyed by developments. He agreed that the bus boycott was one of the big news stories of the decade. But he felt that important stories on race tensions remained untold in the home towns of newspapers covering the Montgomery situation so thoroughly. He decided to turn the tables and go after them.

THE ADVERTISER was just the paper to take up cudgels for the South. Born 128 years ago, in time to support Andrew Jackson for president, it lambasted the North through the pre-Civil War debates, covered Jefferson Davis' inauguration, which occurred in shouting distance of its office, and is fond of referring to Montgomery as "the first, the best and the next capital of the Confederacy."

Hall chose New York for his first target. In an open letter to James A. Wechsler, editor of the New York Post, he charged that race tension existed in that area which newspapers "with some notable exceptions merely peck at, often approaching it like a chicken gasping with the pip."

But the Southern press, said Hall, has "squatted on its hams and failed to redeem the dereliction" of its Northern colleagues.

Hall proposed to go to New York and in cooperation with the Post, root out and report race tension.

The project fell through, chiefly over a minor point that Wechsler wanted to assign Ted Poston, his capable Negro race relations expert, to the job. Hall preferred to work with Murray Kempton, the Post staffer who covered the Montgomery story. Hall and Kempton had become friends.

WECHSLER wrote Hall suggesting this hesitancy about Poston was based on race. Hall, who works daily in an atmosphere of mutual respect with a Negro editor, put this down as further proof Northern editors wilfully misunderstand the South.

However, the Post started work on its own series, which Hall reported unrest and tension in Trumbull Park, a housing development in Chicago.

Letters poured in from all parts of the world, pointing up racial dissension in likely and unlikely places. The Advertiser printed them in support of its position.

"I don't blame the Northern and foreign press for covering the Montgomery story," said Hall. "It's worth every word it got.

"But think of the fat expense accounts they would save if they kept their reporters home to cover that with which their own backyard reeks.

"We are trying to fill the journalistic gap by pointing out that where the Negro presents problems of numbers, he is rejected, candidly in the South, pharisaically in the North."

Hall has promised to carry in the Advertiser.

"Mission accomplished," said Hall.

The big payoff came when Hall began calling officials in northern cities and interviewing them (by tape recording) on racial issues.

He published these interviews under the striking Biblical quotation: "Tell it not in Gath, publish it not in the streets of Askelon." (Samuel II, 1:20).

Mayor Orville Hubbard, of Dearborn, Mich., told the Advertiser:

"I am for complete segregation, one million per cent, at all levels.

A Northerner's Tour Of Dixie

Advertiser 7-1-56

EDITOR, THE ADVERTISER — My name is Steve Stavis, Johns Road, Marblehead, Mass. For nearly two months I have been pursuing my trade as a salesman throughout the South.

When I say the South, I do not mean Miami or other noted resorts. I mean the South of the red earth farming areas, the Deep South of Alabama, Georgia and Mississippi. I have been to all of the big cities in each of these states. I have stayed for days at a time in each of the following cities: Montgomery, Tuscaloosa, Selma, Mobile and Dothan, Ala.; Dublin, Albany, Thomasville, Cairo and Blakely, Ga.; Hattiesburg, Vicksburg and Natchez, Miss.

Montgomery, Ala.

I am writing this, sir, because the powers that allow me to think and see and feel have undergone a change and I do not wish to leave this gentle Southern earth in silence.

Before this trip the South was a stranger to me. It wasn't so much of a stranger, however, that from my home in the North I didn't know of its Klu Klux Klans, its Huey Long and its Bilbo, its Emmett Till case. It was never a complete stranger, though, for I read of its Negroes and how badly they were treated.

Sun. 3-18-56

But I have come here now and I have seen. I wish it were possible for all thinking people in the nation to come and to see what I have seen.

They would know first of all that if the situation were reversed, that if the masses of Southern Negroes were in reality masses of Northern Negroes, the Negro, in his present Southern way of life would have less white friends and less help in the North than he now has in the South. If, on a morning not too long ago the people could have been with me, they would have seen a white farmer in Dublin, Ga., pick up the injured son of his Negro employe, and, while the father looked on, rush the boy to the hospital. During the incident, not one word was said between the farmer and the Negro father. It was as though what happened had happened before in many ways and many forms, and it would happen again and when it did the white man would again pick up the Negro boy and the boy's father would watch and there would not be a word said between them. This episode taking place in the South? No, it could not be, at least not in the South that was locked in my mind. But it did and it was as though I had wronged a man, a whole race of men in thinking what I did and I thought then that distance is not the proper atmosphere in which to pass judgment.

SHOW OF FORCE

The conflict in the South is not a conflict between the white man and the Negro in the South. It is a conflict arranged by a Northern Negro organization that now, having the power of the Sureme Court ruling behind it, is flexing its muscles and means to cram integration down the throats of the Southerners.

The NAACP is now having its day. It is acting not out of wisdom but out of an impending sense of power. If the motives of the NAACP were honest, they would know they cannot bring about integration by violence. They cannot quicken the process by defying 125 years of tradition. Their actions cannot be justified, for their actions mean violence and they must surely know that the people of the Deep South are in no mood to accept the Supreme Court ruling and have it enforced by a Northern Negro organization at one and the same time.

The thing the NAACP fears the most is that the nation may learn all too soon that the white people in the South are now and have for the last 10 years developing by peaceful means what the NAACP hopes to do by violence. The NAACP fears that if they do not force integration now they will be exposed for what they truly are, the betrayers of the very very thing they say they are fighting for.

I have come here now and I have seen.

I know that in the Deep South there are two ways of life, the white and the Negro. The history of the white South has such hallowed depth that its family ties are the strongest in the nation. The history of the Negro South is one of scant material possession, little or no education, but a people free of worry, of conventional standards. The two ways of life are integrating to an extent even at this moment. The reason for this is not noble. It is sheer necessity. The Negro population in vast sections of the Deep South overwhelm the white population, and yet in those areas, as it is all over the South, the whites carry 90% of the tax burden. Despite this, and the fact that over 80% of the people on relief in the Deep South are Negroes, I have not visited a county in the Deep South where the Negro schools are not models to behold.

SHARING THE RESPONSIBILITY

The white Southerner knows that if his earth is ever to realize economic prosperity, the Negro has got to absorb a far greater share of the financial responsibility. And here is the heart of the local problem. While more and more Negroes are responding to a better community life, the vast majority are still rebelling against changing their way of life.

It is very true that Southern Negroes as a whole have less of everything, including less need to worry. There are very few heart attacks in Negro communities, and I have come across no Negro psychiatrists. A vast number of Negroes look forward to their Saturday night and don't worry too much about Monday. If they're hungry or sick they know they'll be taken care of.

The material and social sickness of the Negro in the Deep South will improve only as quickly and to the degree that he wants it improved. But it is improving. The NAACP cannot hurry the process, and violence will destroy all the progress that has been made so far.

It is of extreme importance for we in the North to know that the white South is much more of a friend to the Southern Negro than we have been led to believe. It is also important for us to know that the NAACP is apparently interested first in its own strength and second in the destiny of the Southern Negro. The Supreme Court wisely did not set a time for integration. Is the NAACP wiser than the Supreme Court—or are there other motives?

A Tragic Gesture Of Brotherly Love

EDITOR, THE ADVERTISER—I wish to comment on your recent editorial on racial tension, in which you state the subject has been swept under the rug here in Chicago. I will say it most certainly has been and I feel I can speak with some knowledge on this subject. I am a Christian, a Republican voter and lived on the near north side of Chicago for over 30 years, where this business has been very serious.

First, regarding the Trumbull Park housing rioting. Our previous mayor (Kennelley) encouraged the Negroes to move into this wholy white housing project, by offering them all the police protection they wanted and they got plenty, 1,500 in three shifts for two years. During the rioting that occurred from this tragic gesture of brotherly love, the worthy mayor lived in security and luxury in the most exclusive hotel on the north side. "The Chicago Beach Hotel." No Negro lives within three miles from this millionaires' domicile and this worthy ex-mayor still lives there so far as I last heard reported of him.

Our present mayor (Daley) tells us that all things have quited down at this project as only 250 extra police are necessary now, after 2½ years of protesting of this colored invasion.

The racial problem here is not primarily a matter of color of a man's skin as the local press tries to inform us. It is rather a matter of morals. During World War II some 5,000 Japanese (Neisi) moved into this neighborhood. There was no objection raised against them; they have the lowest criminal record in such crimes as dope addiction, rape, murder and theft, while the Negro has the highest. This is never mentioned in the local press.

What are the white people doing for the protection of their homes and loved ones? Simply migrating to the suburbs, outside of the city proper, where they can build and own their own homes, have their own schools and band together for their own protection.

Federal figures show that the white population increased only 4% while the Negro population increased 43% in 10 years and the Negro is drawing down 75% of the welfare funds paid out here. No wonder he is flocking here, where he can take things easy.

In closing my friend let me say imphatically that you are fighting a battle for all America, not for the Southern states alone.

JOHN MACDONALD TAYLOR.

No Parlor Pink Debates

Editor, The Advertiser:

I observe the dilemma which you have been successful in involving yourself. In the old days the Caesars would bring home captive chieftains and parade them in chains to the delight of the residents of Rome. But this is the first time I have heard of one volunteering to be lead captive through the fleshpots of Harlem. It proves to me the immaturity of The Advertiser's editor-in-chief. Perhaps the harshest criticism is to say that he has lowered himself to the level of Mr. Wechsler. And that is pretty low.

The immaturity of the editor is such that he seems to think he can get some favorable publicity in an affair which he believes is a parlor pink debate. But the facts probably are that he and Mr. Wechsler are fanning the flames of a genocidal conflict from which may flow millions of casualties. Neither of these men nor both should seek personal publicity at such a potential cost.

¶ Obtain from the copyright holders, the right to publish the autobiography of Ethel Waters. This includes the picture of the securing of a beachhead by Negroes in Philadelphia, and is substantially true of their efforts in every American city. It shows the callousness of the people of these cities. Later Negroes had to fight racial attacks which were designed to drive them out of their beachheads. This is one of the great American classics of the 20th Century.

¶ Following the racial wars in Philadelphia, New York, Detroit, Cleveland, Chicago, Los Angeles, etc., realization commenced of the fact that there had been no race riots in the South. Thereupon, Mr. Eugene Meyer of The Washington Post editorialized to the effect that the national government should press the South until race riots appeared therein. Reproduce that editorial. That such an editorial should have been published in the Washington Post is not a matter of small importance such as the appearance thereof in the New York Post. For The Washington Post and The New York Times have influence of great mesaure.

The editor is not engaged in a pink tea affair. This is a matter for long heads and not for boy scouts. It's a long term pull, or curtains for the South.

JUDGE J. J. MAYFIELD FOUND SHOT TO DEATH

Alabama Court Justice, 45, Is Apaprent Suicide

JURIST DIES IN BED

By The United Press

MONTGOMERY, Ala., April 4.—Associate State Supreme Court Justice James J. Mayfield, 45, was found shot to death in his bed Wednesday, a 22 caliber pistol clasped in his hand. Authorities said it was apparently suicide.

The judge's body was discovered in his apartment here Wednesday morning by a maid. She notified a neighbor who telephoned Gov. James E. Folsom. The Governor immediately sent Public Safety Director Bill Lyerly to the scene.

Investigation Ordered

Mr. Lyerly and Coroner M. B. Kirkpatrick agreed the death was obviously suicide, but Governor Folso ordered a thorough investigation.

The judge, the youngest member of the Supreme Court, was running for re-election in the May 1 Democratic primary against State Senator James S. Coleman Jr., Green County. The judge's death leaves Mr. Coleman as the automatic nominee.

Officers said no suicide note was left and they could give no reason for the action.

The maid, 28-year-old Lorine Lewis, said the judge had been despondent lately and appeared worried over his race for re-election.

She said Justice Mayfield told her he was "having a devil of a time over segregation, and that some man was trying to get his job."

Justice Mayfield died of a bullet wound near his right ear. He apparently had been dead several hours when the body was found.

Telephone Off Hook

Officers said a nearby radio was playing and the telephone in the bedroom was off the hook.

The maid said she arrived at the apartment at about 7 a.m. and "fixed breakfast and made coffee" before entering the bedroom to awaken the judge. When she saw the body, she said, she ran for help.

In the judge's bed were pictures of his mother and his son, James J. Mayfield Jr., about 4, who lives in Tuscaloosa with his mother, Justice Mayfield's divorced wife.

Justice Mayfield was graduated from the University of Alabama Law School and taught there following his graduation. A fervent pro-segregationist, he was elected to the court in 1954 to fill an unexpired term.

Told His Stand

In Lanett, Ala., last week, he declared he would not be bound by the U. S. Supreme Court's desegregation ruling.

Mr. Coleman, the man opposing him in the primary, said news of Justice Mayfield's death came as a "tragic shock."

Bills to pare authority are said in making

BY HUGH SPARROW
News staff writer

MONTGOMERY, Ala., March 20—If Gov. Folsom calls the Legislature back into special session, as he has threatened, to consider again his request for a constitutional convention, it could cause him considerable trouble.

Several senators strongly indicated today that if the governor goes through with his threat to call another special session, there would be bills to cut down considerably on the governor's present benefits.

One senator said that he was considering offering a bill to reduce the governor's mansion fund

One senator said that he was considering offering a bill to reduce the governor's mansion fund appropriation from $60,000 to $10,000 a year.

REPORTS WERE in circulation also that bills would be offered to prevent the governor from transferring money from the emergency fund to the mansion fund and to require the state to buy everything on bids.

Reports of reprisal measures circulated in the Senate chamber shortly after the Senate secretary had read a sharp message from Gov. Folsom demanding anew that the Legislature act favorably on the convention resolution.

Gov. Folsom's message reiterated some of the things that he has been saying in speeches yesterday and today in his so-called report to the people.

The governor's message did not provoke a floor discussion. It was merely ordered placed in the Journal of the Senate.

The governor's message together with the threat to call the Legislature back into session to force action on the constitutional convention resolution could be the beginning of a sharp break between the legislative and executive brances.

THE LEGISLATURE already has twice refused to act favorably on the constitutional convention plan.

Both houses during the last special session turned thumbs down on a joint resolution providing for the convention.

Last similar resolutions were pigeonholed both in the Senate and the House.

In his message to the Legislature today, Gov. Folsom said:

"I believe that the Legislature of Alabama by resolution—term it "interposition," "nullification," "dissolution," "revocation" or any other name—cannot relieve the governor or any other elected or appointed official, including the Supreme Court of Alabama—of their sworn oaths," his message said.

GOV. FOLSOM reminded that heand other public officialsl have taken an oath to support the Constitutions of the United States and the state of Alabama.

"These and similar oaths are required not only of public officials but also of the board of trustees of our educational institutions and every member of our armed forces," he said.

"Such interposition or nullification resolutions having been passed were not legal and shall have no force and effect unless such action shall be approved by the sovereign people of Alabama in convention assembled for that particular purpose.

News

"Not being a party to this action and believing that such resolution accomplished nothing and only muddied the water, I did not sign it when it came to my office."

P.6

GOV. FOLSOM noted that he asked the Legislature to submit to the voters an opportunity to require a constitutional convention to tackle the racial problem, but as yet no action has been taken on it.

"Therefore, I again call upon you to show your own sincerity to those people who elected you just as they elected me by allowing them to vote on Aug. 28—with little or no additional cost to the state—on whether or not they desire this convention," he said.

"There are some among your colleagues who differ with my approaches to our problems and rather than oppose my recommendations on their merit prefer to term caution, discretion and careful consideration as being 'insincere,'" he said.

"As the chief constitutional officer of this state, I have oftentimes disagreed with many provisions of our Constitution and I have sought repeatedly to have it revised in keeping with our growth and modern advances, but in no instance have I ever refused to carry out my oath of office to uphold both the Alabama Constitution and the Constitution of the United States."

Dead Judge's Friend Told Reason For Act

TUSCALOOSA, Ala., April 5.—(AP)—James J. Mayfield, associate justice of the Alabama Supreme Court, wrote a note saying "I cannot continue" before he took his own life in Montgomery Wednesday, it was revealed Thursday.

P.3

Memphis, Tenn.

A note from the judge was delivered to political reporter Bob Kyle of the Tuscaloosa News Thursday, two hours before the funeral here. Mr. Kyle was a lifelong friend of the judge.

The note, dated March 19 and written in longhand, was addressed to Mr. Kyle and The Associated Press. It was on Alabama Supreme Court stationery and had been left with a friend to be delivered "if anything happens."

The note:

"Every decision I have ever made has been honest and nonpartisan. While some people may criticize my economic beliefs none can say I have not honestly tried to do my duty.

"I have been true to the heritage of my grandfather, a Confederate cavalryman, and to my father, a justice of this court. I want to thank my friends all over the state for the confidence they have shown in me.

"My health is such that I should not have undertaken a campaign. I regret that I cannot continue. I send my love to all my family.

"(Signed) James J. Mayfield."

Judge Mayfield called Leroy Simms, Birmingham correspondent for The Associated Press, last week and arranged a breakfast meeting in Birmingham for March 28. He spent more than an hour discussing the Lanett, Ala., speech on March 29 in which he pledged his efforts to uphold segregated schools in Alabama, and criticizing the U. S. Supreme Court decision holding segregated schools illegal.

Albert Boutwell's Service To State

News P.6

BY EDMUND BLAIR
In The St. Clair News-Aegis

Birm., Ala.

I believe I can say without fear of successful challenge that no man in Alabama has risen in stature as fast and as far as Albert Boutwell, state senator from Jefferson County.

A successful lawyer, the people of Jefferson County have elected Boutwell to represent them in the State Senate for three consecutive terms. This in itself is a vote of confidence from the people of our largest county that should get a "long look" from the people of Alabama when the time comes to choose another governor.

All members of the State Senate as well as members of the lower House, political friends and enemies alike, have tremendous respect for the integrity and ability of Albert Boutwell.

Recently I was in the state capital during a legislative session. I was in conversation with a senator who opposes Boutwell in just about everything. Nevertheless as Boutwell passed, this man said, "I would not want to be in this Senate unless Albert Boutwell was here." Another senator said, "Boutwell has done more to hold down the wild spending that has been proposed than all the other members combined."

If it had not been for Sen. Boutwell and a tight band of friends who think as he does, who have thrown up many a roadblock in the path of ambitious plans of the administration, Alabama might be bankrupt now, instead of facing bankruptcy as the state's budget director warned last week when he said it was possible the state would not be able to pay its bills Oct. 4.

But Sen. Boutwell's most sterling worth to the people of Alabama has been the greatest fight he and other senators and members of the Legislature have waged to keep Alabama's schools segregated.

A man of deep convictions, Sen. Boutwell, Sen. Englehardt, Sen. Walter Givhan and others are waging a determined battle to keep this state's schools segregated. As a result of their efforts, the interposition bill, and the school placement bill, both designed to keep segregation, passed both House and Senate with flying colors.

The interpostion bill, written by Rep. Charlie McKay of Talladega County, was called "hogwash" by Alabama's governor. The governor signed neither bill, preferring to let them become law without his signature of approval — sitting on the fence, a "mugwump" as it were.

Sen. Boutwell has from the beginning of the Folsom administration waged a vigorous battle against the world spending that has brought the budget director fears the state cannot pay it's bill in October. He opposed the raise in pay for members of the Legislature which has cost the taxpayers multiple thousands of dollars that could have very well been spent wisely otherwise.

True Boutwell lives in Jefferson County. For some years, there has been a saying that no man from Jefferson County could be elected governor. To borrow Gov. Folsom's expression, I think this is a lot of "hogwash."

I don't believe the people of Alabama care where a man comes from be it Birmingham, Chisel Switch or Ishkooda. If he shows the ability, integrity and leadership that Albert Boutwell has shown, I think the people of our state would elect him governor.

If Alabama selected their candidates in convention similar to the methods used in a national convention, I would be honored, if a were a delegate, to be the first to place in nomination the name of Albert Boutwell.

I believe many thousands of other Alabamians feel the same way.

Better Reporting Of Racial Ne

Advertiser P. 4 Sun. 3-18-56

The Dallas Morning News

WHEN racial integration in public schools struck a snag in Alabama a few weeks ago the subject became a hot news story. Many Northern and Eastern newspapers assigned reporters to cover day-to-day developments for the information of their own readers.

Quite in keeping with a modern trend in journalism these correspondents have undertaken to give the reasons behind the insistence of Negro leaders upon immediate integration and the reluctance of writes to be crowded precipitately. Their reports were their evaluation of the situation based upon what they could learn in a relatively brief period.

Grover C. Hall Jr., editor of The Montgomery Advertiser, who has been helping these visiting correspondents cover the boycott and Lucy stories, charges that some of these articles, especially in New York, Chicago and Minneapolis newspapers, were sensational and colored.

Hall wrote to James A. Wechsler, editor of The New York Post, who, it will be remembered, had a hassle with Sen. McCarthy a few years ago and who advocates overnight implementation of the Supreme Court's decision.

Hall told Wechsler that Northern newspapers ignore or play down instances of anti-Negro discrimination in their own circulation areas while playing up similar instances in the South. Murray Kempton, The Post's reporter on racial relations, suggested to Hall an exchange of racial news between the two papers. Hall agreed. It is now up to Wechsler.

Hall's purpose is to prove that the problem is an American one, not exclusively a Southern one. Honest, factual accounts of what happens to Negroes in the North would go far to proving Hall's point, if other Northern newspapers also will print racial news in their own areas.

The experiment should help to clear the atmosphere and develop a better understanding between the people of the South and those of the North. There usually are some things to be said for both sides of any question.

CONSTITUTIONAL REVAMP

Gov. Folsom Gives 'Formula' For Solving Racial Tension

Advertiser P. 1 Wed. 3-14-56

Montgomery, Ala.

After proclaiming himself a defender of "democracy against mobocracy (mob rule)," Gov. James E. Folsom yesterday advocated a constitutional convention as the "only real" way to solve Alabama's racial problems.

Folsom sent a special message to the Legislature proposing a convention to rewrite the state's organic law to let the people voice their "wishes and desires concerning the preservation of our traditional way of life."

A constitutional convention, he said, is the "only real, effective and forceful means at our disposal to express the will of our people on these problems."

The governor accompanied his message with a resolution to submit the convention question to a statewide vote Aug. 28. If the voters approved the call, delegates would be elected at another election on Nov. 27 and the convention itself would start Dec. 11.

Arguing for speedy consideration of the resolution, Folsom pointed out that Negro coed Autherine Lucy, who has been expelled from the University of Alabama, has asked for a court order to readmit her next fall.

Her presence on the campus has already caused mob violence, and may provoke further rioting, the governor said, unless the Legislature takes "some action that is legal and constitutional to avoid any further incident."

Is another Folsom message coming?—

Lawmakers wonder whether to adjourn or take recess

B'ham, Ala.

BY HUGH W. SPARROW, News staff writer

MONTGOMERY, Ala., March 22—Legislators—especially Senate members—were looking ahead somewhat speculatively today concerning two things which could happen tomorrow.

For one thing, they were wondering whether it would be best to adjourn the present special session Friday or to declare an immediate recess until after the May Democratic primary.

Sentiment today, at least, appeared to be building up in favor of final adjournment. But Madison County legislators were working frantically to get an agreement whereby the Legislature would remain in session or at least recess until May.

SPARROW

Madison legislators didn't want the session eo end abruptly tomorrow because they are anxious to pass local legislation —which will be eligible for introduction next week — of importance in connection with Redstone Arsenal expansion plans.

Senators in particular were speculating as to whether or not Gov. Folsom would send up another of his socalled "publicity seeking" messages demanding anew that the Legislature approve a resolution calling an election to decide the question of a constitutional convention.

Gov. Folsom sent a third consecutive message to the Legislature yesterday. The House was not in session and did not receive it. But the message was read to the Senate and immediately provoked sharp retorts.

Read yesterday

THE SOMEWHAT brassy message read yesterday contended that the Legislature does not have authority to "override" the U. S. Supreme Court's racial segregation ban. The message so declared on the grounds that the governor, members of the Legislature and other state officers promised by their oaths of office to defend the state and U. S. constitutions.

The message insisted, as did others which preceded it, that the only way to set aside the moral responsibility of the state to abide by the school integration ban ruling would be for it to be done by a constitutional convention.

What three top ranking senators, James A. Coleman of Greene, Joe Calvin of Morgan and Albert Boutwell of Jefferson, had to say in reply amounted to a blistering denunciation of the governor for his actions and motives in connection with his present series of messages.

Which constitution?

SEN. COLEMAN started the discussion.

He said:

"The governor in his message refers to 'the obligation of the Legislature to uphold the constitution of the United States.'

"I would inquire which constitution the governor refers to? Does he refer to the constitution so interpreted prior to 'Black Monday' May 17, 1954? Or does he refer to the constitution as interpreted by the Supreme Court of the United States on that day?

"FOR MORE THAN 60 years the doctrine of 'separate but equal' facilities was held by the Supreme Court to be a compliance with the 'equal protection' clause of the 14th amendment to the constitution of the U. S.

"On May 17, 1954, the Supreme Court reversed itself and decreed that the 'separate but equal' doctrine was no longer the law of the land.

"Now, which constitution is the Legislature obligated to uphold? Is it the constitution before May 17, 1954, or the constitution as interpreted by the Supreme Court on that day?

"I strongly disagree with the governor's statement that a constitutional convention in Alabama is the proper way to deal with the segregation problem."

Bid for publicity

"I WONDER who it is giving the governor advice on constitutional law?" asked Sen. Calvin.

"Who is telling him a convention can in any way change the state's relation to the federal government?

"I think it was mentioned in the newspapers that the governor wanted to be relieved of his oath of office and that he insisted the way for him to be relieved was to convene a constitutional convention.

"This, I say, is just a bid for publicity.

"The governor has referred to the Legislature's activities on the interposition resolution as 'hogwash'

"I respectfully submit that his statement that he wanted to be relieved of his oath to uphold the Supreme Court's ruling is hogwash.

"THE PROHIBITION LAW was a failure because the states did not enforce it. So it is with interposition.

"The people of Alabama have expressed themselves through bills passed by the Legislature and they will express themselves on Aug. 28 when they vote on the 'freedom of choice' amendment.

"I say that he is sending us these messages for the double purpose of obtaining publicity and befuddlement.

"I think we as legislators know the tempers of the people and I think we share their feelings when we say the people do not want a constitutional convention."

More 'hogwash'

MACON SEN. Sam Engelsion and called for a constitutional convention or reapportionment and stated that all he wanted to do was to secure reapportionment. However, within a week he issued conflicting statements declaring that he wanted a full scale constitutional convention.

Is it 'hoodwink' move?

"DOES GOV FOLSOM have any ulterior motives in trying to hoodwink the Legislature into calling a limited constitutional convention with the hope that the Constitution will permit him to succeed himself as governor or to permit him to run for U. S. senator, or some other state office immediately after he finishes his present term in office?

"Under the present Constitution he is barred from offering for public office for 12 months after the term for which he is elected has expired. Could he, therefore, have in mind altering that or other constitutional safeguards which protect our Supreme Court and other judicial offices."

Failed to uphold oath

SEN. BOUTWELL was interrupted by a question from Sen. Coleman.

The latter asked Sen. Boutwell if Gov. Folsom had failed in his oath to uphold the Constitution when he failed to fill a Circuit Court vacancy in Jefferson County which existed several months.

Replying, Sen. Boutwell said that at the time Gov. Folsom swore to uphold the Constitution of Alabama when he took his oath as governor the Constitution of Alabama provided that the governor "shall" (not may) appoint a judge from a list of three nominees when nominated by a judicial commission such as is provided in the Constitution for filling court vacancies in Jefferson.

Mandatory move

SEN. BOUTWELL pointed out that in spite of the fact that the Constitution made it mandatory that Gov. Folsom make an appointment he failed to do so. It then became necessary, he added to amend the Constitution to assure appointment to the vacancy.

The Legislature, he said, submitted a constitutional amendment which Alabama voters ratified on Dec. 6. It permitted the chief justice of the Supreme Court to make the appointment when the governor failed to make the appointment after 90 days.

"The people ratified Amendment 20 which was the only one approved out of 30 amendments submitted on Dec. 6," Sen. Boutwell said. "In this instance it was necessary for the people to provide other means of securing an appointment for a vacancy in the Circuit Court of Jefferson because of Gov. Folsom's failure to make this appointment as provided in the Constitution which he swore to uphold."

hardt interrupted to ask a question.

"Would you say it would be a 'hogwash' session if we should be called back to consider the governor's convention plan?"

"Yes," replied Sen. Calvin.

"Already we have spent more than a million and one-half dollars attending a regular session and five special sessions called by the governor so far. We have given enough time to Folsom's many demands.

"I think that if he should call us back into special session it would be the best for all concerned if we promptly adjourned the session sine die."

Encourages NAACP

SEN. BOUTWELL recalled that since he took office in January, 1955, Gov. Folsom has refused to sign any legislation which would help to preserve segregation in Alabama.

"He has followed a course of action which has encouraged the NAACP and other outside agitators to try to force integration of the races in Alabama at this time," he added.

'PUBLISH IT NOT IN THE STREETS OF ASKELON'—VII

Advertiser P. 4-A

By Joe Azbell

City Editor, The Advertiser

Wed. 4-4-56

THE University of Wisconsin, where integration is an old hat, has dispatched two young students to Alabama to report on the Lucy incident and the bus boycott.

The Alabama assignment is being financed from a Reader's Digest fund furnished the U of W's School of Journalism for such reportorial chores.

AZBELL

The students who have cased Montgomery from Peacock Tract to Boguehoma are Herbert Lawson, of Stillwater, Minn., and Alfredo Cuomo of Rome, Italy.

The pair wanted to take back to Madison, Wis., a souvenir of Montgomery and a report on a date with a Montgomery Negro girl. After some consideration they discarded the idea of dating a Montgomery Negro girl.

Racially mixed couples, they reported, intermingle in student activities with no explosive reactions but a majority of the white students on the campus oppose dating Negroes.

"I count among my closest friends a mixed couple, a white girl married to a Negro man," Lawson said. "They are accepted quite normally among my friends. They have children and the children are integrated in the community quite normally."

Montgomery, Ala.

Mental Note

Q. What do you think of mixed dates?

Lawson: I think it's fine. I believe in it.

Q. What happens to a girl's reputation when she dates a Negro boy?

Lawson: It causes some criticism, I suppose, from a part of the campus, but I have never heard any big vocal reaction. None of my friends ever comment on it. They accept it.

Q. Does the girl become marked?

Lawson: There is a mental note made of it when a girl dates a Negro boy. I think something like the thought, That girl dates Negroes. But when you see the girl alone, you don't think about it. Southern students date Negroes on the campus. [Less than 2% are Southern students.]

Q. And neither of you have any inhibitions about dating a Negro girl?

Lawson: None whatsoever.

Q. Why then is the majority of the campus opposed to it?

Lawson: I think it's because they feel that mixed marriages are so hard on the children. I think the majority of Northern people agree that mixed marriages should be opposed because they are so hard on the children. But I have friends who are mixed couples and it doesn't seem to affect them in any way.

'Raised Eyebrows'

A CALL was placed to Bob Taylor, director of the University of Wisconsin News Bureau who confirmed that mixed dating does occur on the campus.

"But it is not so common that it doesn't cause raised eyebrows," he said.

"At formal events you see Negro couples together but I don't think you see mixed couples. You see the mixed couples at the informal events at the hangouts and the like. It does go on. Yes."

Q. Do you register students by races?

Taylor: No. They are not classed racially. A white student might draw as his roommate in one of the dormitories a Jewish person, an Egyptian, or a Negro.

Q. Do you know of any mixed married couples on campus?

Taylor: I don't know of any on the campus but there could be. It is a big campus. I do know of some mixed couples in Madison—at least one. They are members of a socially prominent church here.

Q. Do you have any regulation at all about mixed dating.

Taylor: Oh, no. The mixed dating is up to the student personally. The entire campus is integrated.

Q. What about discrimination on the campus?

Taylor: There is none on the campus. But there are two private dormitories off campus that operate on the quota system. They allow only a certain number of students in those dormitories racially. The school authorities have talked with them about doing something about this quota system.

'What's Trumbull Park'?

THE students said that there are about 200 Negroes among the 14,000 students on the campus. They told of a boycott staged by students against a white barber who refused to cut a Negro's hair because he said the hair was "too kinky."

"The students felt he was discriminating against Negroes," Lawson said.

Q. What about communism on the campus. There was an Alabama student who went to the University of Wisconsin and returned here a confirmed Communist Party member and leader.

Lawson: There is a Marxist group—the Labor Youth League. It is on the attorney general's list. It is a mixed group. But it has little influence because everyone knows what it is.

Discussing their mission in the South, the two students said they had heard the bus boycott and the Lucy incident discussed at long length on the campus:

Q. What about Trumbull Park?

Lawson: Trumbull Park?

Q. Yes, isn't Chicago close to Madison.

Lawson: It is about 150 miles away.

Q. Didn't you know that racial violence has been waged there for 30 months with 150 policemen having to guard Negro families day and night because they moved into a white housing section?

Lawson: I have not heard about that. It hasn't been discussed.

150 Miles Away

Q. Did you know that in Milwaukee, Wis., that the mayor's race is now turning on the segregation issue because of the migration of Negroes to Milwaukee in large numbers?

Lawson: I have not heard about that.

Q. How far is Milwaukee from Madison?

Lawson: It is about 150 miles away.

The student said the social unrest in things such as the boycott and the Lucy incident and Trumbull Park were indications of the compulsion of the Negro to make progress.

Lawson said in his hometown of Stillwater, Minn., where there are only two Negroes, that there is an "amazing amount of racial prejudice although the people have not come in contact with Negroes." He added: "There once was a Ku Klux Klan there."

Cusseta's Negro School

EDITOR, THE ADVERTISER—[In reply to a railroad man's letter criticizing the Cusseta Negro school as an easily propagandized eyesore].

We, in Cusseta, have been, and are, working hard to keep the Mt. Ebo colored school going. True, the building is old and decrepit. But it is a basically sound building, and could be repaired at not too much expense. The state of Alabama stands ready to repair it, just as soon as the Mt. Ebo Negro church, on whose property it stands, will deed that land to the state, for school purposes only. The state cannot and will not repair it while the building is on church property. So far, no argument has prevailed on the Board of Deacons to deed the land to the state. And we've met every objection or condition so far offered.

Montgomery, Ala.

These children are not forced to attend school here. Since the consolidation of public schools in Alabama, all the kids are or would be picked up by bus, and carried to the big new consolidated schools some 10 or 12 miles away. There are new well-appointed schools in LaFayette, Ala., and Fairfax, Ala., for Negro students. But, the parents feel that the young children are better off closer to home, receive more personal attention, and better teaching through the grammar school grades in this school in Cusseta. The white parents of Cusseta, of whom I am one, are realizing that we would have been better off to keep our white grade school operating after consolidation. For high school work, the consolidated schools are better, with their labs and typewriters, extensive research libraries and intermural sports. But not the grades, with overloaded teachers and crowded classrooms, in white and colored schools alike.

There is only one teacher in the Cusseta school, Mrs. Mary Lou Shealey. She is a magnificent woman, an able teacher, and a person I am proud to know. She has established a lunch room, instituted home economic classes for the older girls, besides teaching the required subjects for over 18 years. There are movies every other week, audio-visual education as it is now called. The kids get a free hot lunch every day, and audio-visual education surpassing that found in most white grade schools, plus good teaching in things beyond the textbook. We have been promised topsoil for that muddy yard, long before your letter. Now I feel that we will get it.

As a child, didn't you like to wave at the engineer on that big, beautiful monster, the train? I did.

Wilson Did The Job

Editor, The Advertiser:

May I have this to say in behalf of Leonard Wilson.

He and his young associates used the only implement of defense available to them when rock and eggs were employed to rid our university of the presence of the Lucy Negro and her NAACP cohorts.

It is my firm belief that if they had not done so, she would be attending classes there today.

If there is any shame in it anywhere, it lies in the fact that the grown men and women of the state of Alabama have fooled around the last 10 years with "a wait and see" attitude regarding segregation.

We let the moment arrive with the entire responsibility falling on the shoulders of those young, inexperienced boys.

No one can say they didn't do the job well, and I for one am grateful to them.

EDITOR, THE ADVERTISER—As one of millions of Yanks not interested in Southern racial problems, I wish to present a simple solution to your difficulties that should satisfy everyone.

Don't Be Hoodwinked

Editor, The Advertiser:

Don't be fooled by the Northern people and newspapers. They have their problems here just as well as you have in the South. In some respects more so.

I was born and raised in the South and have been a resident of Chicago for 15 years. From my observation I believe a Negro would be to advantage living in the South. From my view I have been unable to see whereby a Negro would be able to prosper or have advantages here, other than he would in the South. Certain union organizations will not accept them as members. Numerous plants and shops will not employ them, except in a minor capacity such as porters, etc. I have never seen or heard of a Negro attending a white Protestant church. I have never heard of or seen a Negro in a white barber shop or beauty parlor. In first class night clubs, restaurants and bars I have never seen a Negro.

So don't let the Yankees fool you. There is just as much discrimination in the North as there is in the South. Best wishes and good luck to you and your staff. UNRECONSTRUCTED.

Poston Is Not Reliable

Editor, The Advertiser:

It was very good to read the AP news release from New York dated March 17 which showed that you had declined to team with Negro reporter Ted Poston of the New York Post.

I would say that based upon much that I have read that Ted Poston could be the least desirable person to want to be associated with on anything of this nature, unless one might put editor Weschler just below him.

There has never been anything constructive in anything I have read from the pen of this Poston. There are, of course, some quite reliable and outstanding Negro journalists and for those I do have respect, although we do not always agree.

The Pittsburgh Courier has a couple of good writers on its team, and it of course has some that are so biased that they cannot write any decent story touching on racial matters.

I have read The Courier consistently for several years now and I would say that if you could have been teamed with their George S. Schuyler, who has been with that paper now for some 30 years, some good could have come from your reports. Schuyler writes objectively as a Negro, and can say some harsh things, but generally he is quite fair with his words and certainly he has handed out much good criticism and advice for his fellow Negroes. I have often referred to him as the black Pegler, because of his hard hitting way of handling some things. He has traveled quite extensively over the years, both here and abroad, and has been able to furnish interesting stories of those travels. I often regret that I did not keep some of the series of articles put out by him. One titled "What Is Good About The South" possibly was productive of some good at that time.

In the series Schuyler took many individuals and showed their accomplishments, and in just about every case he showed that some good white man had supported the black one in his efforts to get established. Today, judging from what one reads, that is no longer possible, and that is the really sad thing about what is happening. A few years ago no one of us would have believed it if we had been told that the black man would make the progress that he has made. During that time, of course, many of us had the feeling that some one was going to upset the apple cart, either the Negro himself or some of his bleeding heart white friends. And, so it has happened.

More of our white people, in all sections, should be reading the Negro press, which shows the growing trend toward impudence, and the feeling that they are going, somehow, to put the Southern white people in their place. Well, any time the minority can rule it will establish something that has never worked out in previous history.

Folsom Stirs Ala. Political Fire With Committee Race

Journal & Constitution
Atlanta, Ga. Pg-F

Lines Drawn Sharply Around Forces For and Against Governor

Sun. 3-11-56

By FRED TAYLOR

Staff Writer, The Birmingham News
Special to The Atlanta Journal-Constitution

MONTGOMERY, Ala., March 10—Alabama is living up to its reputation for producing just about the hottest political races, election after election, of any state.

38a

And, as could be expected, Gov. James E. Folsom again is the central figure in combination party and public office campaigns which will be fought out in the May 1 Democratic primary. There will be a runoff May 29, if necessary, to settle any of several contests.

Except for Gov. Folsom's last-minute entry as candidate for Democratic National Committeeman from Alabama, this and other political campaigns in this state would have been tame affairs.

Race Comes Alive

But this race for the key post of national committeeman—the man who serves as Alabama's official connecting link with the Democratic national governing body—came alive when Folsom qualified as candidate shortly before the deadline for filing. This job, as in all 48 states, pays no salary, but it carries with it tremendous political prestige.

Since Gov. Folsom has several other close friends and political appointees engaged in fights for state offices, slates have formed automatically for the scrap ahead, with the governor spearheading his group.

Thus, those backing and opposing the governor have lined up in formidable battle array.

Win or lose, Gov. Folsom picked his adversaries with his eyes wide open. Already qualified as candidates and running for national committeeman when the governor jumped into the race were Talladega Rep. Charles McKay Jr., Sylacauga lawyer and one of Folsom's most outspoken critics, and Roy D. McCord, Gadsden attorney.

Of the two, Rep. McKay, freshman legislator and author of Alabama's interposition resolution, which declared the U.S. Supreme Court's integration ruling "null, void and of no effect," is regarded as much the stronger. McKay also is head of the

ALABAMA

Talladega County White Citizens Council, one of the 30-odd such organizations which have sprung up rapidly in the state to help maintain segregation of the races.

The Talladega legislator immediately tore into Gov. Folsom, pointing out that he had permitted the school placement bill (a measure to help maintain classroom segregation in Alabama) and the interposition resolution to go into effect without his signature.

McKay also criticized Gov. Folsom for having entertained—and "wined and dined"—New York Negro Congr. Adam Clayton Powell at the executive mansion.

Gov. Folsom had labeled McKay's interposition resolution as "nothing but hogwash," saying it reminded him of a "hound dog baying at the moon."

Gov. Folsom sought to ease racial tensions in Alabama by placing before the Legislature a plan he worked out with a committee of editors and publishers from over the state.

It called for creation of a 25-member biracial commission to help settle racial disputes growing out of the Supreme Court's desegregation decision.

Folsom also planned to take the stump to campaign for legislative reapportionment — something McKay had voted against—and make a "stewardship report" to the people on his administration. This stumping tour, which the governor is expected to begin within a few weeks, will give him an opportunity to take his campaign for national committeeman into the various counties.

Before Folsom made his surprise entry into the national committeeman race, observers had become convinced he would jump into the campaign for delegate to the Democratic National Convention at Chicago next Aug. 13.

They became convinced he would run, despite his earlier statement he would not even run for "dog catcher," when he declared "it's the duty of any governor to go with his party's delegation to the national convention to help write a platform that will be acceptable to the people.

'Working Out' Solution

"My main interest," Folsom added, "is working out a solution to our racial problem in Alabama and the South. In the event I go to the convention, you can rest assured I will be standing shoulder-to-shoulder with those from our neighboring states. We will be striving to work out a platform that will be acceptable and suitable to our region."

Slated with Gov. Folsom in the campaigns under way are state Democratic Chairman Roy Mayhall, a Jasper circuit court judge, who was an 11th-hour qualifier against veteran Alabama Supreme Court Justice Davis J. Stakely; Supreme Court Justice James J. Mayfield, who won his high court seat with Folsom's support in 1954 and who is seeking renomination against strong opposition from Greene state Sen. James Coleman Jr., Eutaw attorney and Folsom critic; Court of Appeals Judge Rowan Bone, appointed by Folsom and who has Montgomery Atty. Aubrey Cates Jr. and Birmingham Atty. William Conway as opponents; and John E. Drinkard, Cullman automobile dealer and close friend of the governor, who is seeking to unseat Jack Owen, veteran president of the Alabama Public Service Commission. Birmingham's Billy Tucker, polio-stricken former Auburn football star, also is a candidate for this post.

Greeley Was A Dixiecrat

Editor, The Advertiser:

From the editorial, "The New York Herald Tribune's Enlightenment," I see that the Herald Tribune has pulled out their old editor Horace Greeley to show how long the Tribune has been in "the fight."

Mr. Greeley was no friend of the South, but I wonder if The Tribune remembers an editorial which I found in "The Life of St. John's Parish," by Mattie Pegues Wood. A few days after Mr. Lincoln took office Mr. Greeley wrote:

"If the cotton states shall become satisfied that they can do better out of the Union than in it, we insist on letting them go in peace. The right to secede may be revolutionary but it exists. Whenever a considerable section of our Union shall deliberately resolve to go out, we shall resist all coercive measures designed to keep it in. We hope never to live in a republic whereof one section is pinned to another by bayonets."

Then on Dec. 17 Mr. Greeley wrote:

"If the Declaration of Independence justified the secession from the British Empire of 3,000,000 colonists in 1776, we do not see why it would not justify the secession of 5,000,000 Southerners from the Federal Union in 1861."

These two editorials would put Mr. Greeley and The Tribune in the states rights camp. Interesting, isn't it?

Kaiser Bill Also Invoked The Deity

Editor, The Advertiser:

I am one of your paper's deepest admirers and feel that only The Advertiser, Journal and Mobile's papers (sometimes) reflect the true temper of their age and geographical location in Alabama. I feel that Birmingham's scalawag rags do no justice to the faith and adherence of multiple thousands of paid subscribers with their insipid editorial policies and slanted news articles.

It seems to me that if the bus companiese continue providing service to the Negro sections for the length of time it takes the NAACP to carry their appeals to the Supreme Court, then we have 'em by the nape, e.g., should the court uphold the conviction of the ringleaders we can break up all this NAACP stuff. Should the Negro's court, on the other hand, strike down convictions and declares boycotting just and legal—oh, boy! Then we can have a field day. We can boycott these agitators right out of their pegtop clamdiggers. First we cut off their membership at the source by firing all known members and cutting off all credit to even those sympathizing with the association.

While we are about it, why not use the same grounds Congress used in declaring the communist party unlawful (conspiring to overthrow, etc.) to outlaw NAACP? I'm like Tic Forrester—the Negroes had better give up on this thing, cause they certainly can't win.

Preacher King said they would win because God is with them. Kaiser Bill said the same thing when he tried to rape the world and take what was not rightfully his from the people who had it. They even went so far as to make uniform belt buckles with the inscription, Gott Mit Uns. That still didn't put Jehovah on their side, and neither does saying it put Him on the side of a bunch of Negroes.

A pox upon 'em all.

An Expatriate's Views

Editor, The Advertiser:

I am white, was born in the South, lived in North for 38 years.

Here in the North Negroes and whites attend the same schools but they don't mix as much as one hears they do. The Negro of the South has it better by having his own schools, own section to live in. They still don't live in white sections here. Each is a proud race. If let alone we will not be rioting and hating each other.

AFL-CIO Blasts Ala. Riot; Urge Ike To Probe Terror

Defender Sat. 2-18-56 P. 10

Chicago, Ill.

By MARTIN MURPHY

MIAMI BEACH — (INS) — AFL-CIO President George Meany, speaking for organized labor's 15-million members, protested to President Eisenhower the racial situation in Alabama as a "disgrace to the good name of our country and our democracy."

Meany, in a telegram to Eisenhower, denounced the failure of Alabama authorities to protect the rights of Negro citizens and declared the authorities are permitting "lawless interference with civil rights."

The telegram, signed by Meany in behalf of the federation's huge membership, was drafted by the labor group's policy-making executive council which is meeting here.

OTHER DEFIANCE

The labor leader complimented Eisenhower for having the Department of Justice investigate the "defiance" of law at the University of Alabama, but said there have been other incidents of "violence and terrorism" in Alabama.

He urged the justice department investigation be broadened to include incidents involving Negro labor leader Edward Nixon and Rev. M. L. King, both of Montgomery, Ala.

At a press conference following the executive council meeting, Meany strongly denied reports that the AFL-CIO has drawn up a "blacklist of certain Republican senators."

Meany said there was "absolutely no" discussion of political candidates at the meeting of the committee on political education at which the alleged list was drafted.

Meany said he personally is reserving comment on Presidential candidates until after the nominating conventions this summer.

The political committee meeting was boycotted by Dave Beck, head of the 1,400,000-member teamsters union and M. L. Hutcheson, president of the carpenter's union.

MAKE OWN DECISION

Beck pointed out that his union has not attended political committee meetings for many years and traditionally makes its own decisions on candidates.

In other developments, Meany urged President Eisenhower to veto the Harris-Fulbright Natural Gas Bill; said he would be glad to meet with Charles L. Sligh, chairman of the board of the National Association of Manufacturers, next Wednesday if Sligh desires, and denied that the International Boxing Guild could get a charter from the AFL-CIO if it seeks one.

The Trouble Is Political

EDITOR, THE ADVERTISER—I read the editor's statement in U.S. News & World Report. For the most part, I think people appreciate the problems of the South. It is just the left-wingers and politicians who are creating issues. So long as labor goons can throw their weight around and defy the law, it ill behooves the North to criticize the South.

Action And Reaction

Editor, The Advertiser:

I have read with interest your interview in the U.S. News & World Report of Feb. 24. I think you will be glad to learn that you were mistaken in one statement, as you will see from the inclosed copies of Human Events. It, of course does not have as wide a circulation as the U.S. News and Harpers but the publisher is doing his best to acquaint the rest the country with the problems and difficulties faced by the South. Another excellent article, "Not to Be Solved On A Slide Rule," by James J. Kilpatrick was published in the May 14, 1955 issue. I regret that I haven't an extra copy to send you.

As for the problem of integration, I fear that we of the North—our forebears, rather—created it in the first place and that meddling on our part is ill-advised, especially as the South has been making efforts to solve it. It seems to me that racial relations were improving slowly—such things are better for slow growth—and steadily before the Supreme Court handed down its decision. Regrettably, the court appeared not to be aware that Newton's Third Law of Motion applies to psychological as well as physical phenomena.

Religious Radicalism

Editor, The Advertiser:

I notice in today's paper that one of the grocers arrested for keeping his store open on Sunday states that he will take the case clear to the Supreme Court. I was glad to see this. I am for separation of church and state, on which our country was founded.

Our Constitution guarantees religious liberty, yet this law is a discrimination against the many religions in the world which observe the Seventh Day, or Saturday as the Sabbath Day.

I am not going into the right or wrong of their choice, but regardless of this, it is their right to keep their stores open six days of the week, or including Sunday. Also it is one's right to keep their stores open seven days a week if they see fit.

Religion and church-going cannot be legislated. It is a matter of one's conscience. Besides, why close grocery stores and leave all other business open? This in itself shows how useless such a "blue law" is.

The Bible not only says do not work on the Sabbath, but it says do not seek your own pleasure. Then why not close picture shows, ball games, and any other form of pleasure? All this though, is unimportant compared with the infringement on religious liberty.

I don't understand how intelligent lawmakers, also Christians, can see this in any other light. Let's stop and consider this in a logical, intelligent way, and I think anyone with a fair amount of gray matter can see where such legislation would eventually lead. We might be back to burning people at the stake for not attending prayer-meeting, and, more radical still, at some particular church on some particular day.

Yankee Yak

Editor, The Advertiser:

The admittance of a Negro woman to our University, which resulted in the demonstrations at Tuscaloosa, has been termed by some as "mob violence." It is apparent the users of this term are either Negroes or have pro-Negro sentiments. Call these demonstrations by any name you may, I am extremely proud of those fine people who took this resolute action to stop this Negro when it had been clearly shown there was no other way. These people of Tuscaloosa were strong enough in their convictions to accomplish that which could not be done by mere words.

To Northerners, and others of Yankee inclinations, it would seem there was an undue amount of feeling over what Yankees would think an unimportant incident—this Negro's admittance. All Southerners know her entering our University would quietly serve as a "foot-in-the-door" for Negroes in their despicable effort for racial equality. They are determined to bring about racial equality inch by inch, bit by bit, on such a gradual scale that they hope their final aim is not evident to us until it is upon us. Unsegregated buses are another step in that direction. Here and now is the time to prevent all this before the Negro gets well started on his corrupt attempt at racial equality. That is exactly what the people of Tuscaloosa realized, and instead of idly standing by, they did something about it.

The comments of the Yankee yak do not matter one iota. If the North is content to have their white population swallowed up and combined with the Negro in intermarriage it doesn't matter to us. We are proud of our people here and will not have them become a hodge-podge mixture of every origin as they have in the North. Don't let any Yankee deny this fact because I've seen it in all their leading cities.

We offer a salute to the people of Tuscaloosa who rid themselves of this infamous Negro and did a commendable service for Alabama. Our hats are off to you! EUGENE KINNETT.

Congratulations, Mr. Mayor!

Courier P. 9 Sat. 4-14-56

If the Montgomery (Ala.) Advertiser, which has been doing some salutary thumping of Northern communities by showing that all prejudice is not restricted to the South, wishes to be impartial, it should publish the other side of the story, too (as The Courier has done in its stories about the South).

Pittsburgh, Pa.

We refer The Advertiser's star reporter and sleuth to the city of Milwaukee where Mayor Frank Zeidler has just been re-elected to a third term despite a vicious whispering campaign based on race.

We congratulate Mayor Zeidler on his victory and the people of Milwaukee for ignoring the false rumors spread about him. It is to their credit that they have re-elected a man who has been a good mayor.

As a matter of fact, the Mayor of Montgomery (Ala.) might take lessons from the Mayor of Milwaukee. Mr. Zeidler's chief crime has been to show what is described as a "normal concern" for the health and welfare of the 31,000 Negroes who live in the Milwaukee metropolitan area.

If the Mayor of Montgomery showed the same "normal concern," Montgomery might not now be furnishing the abundance of grist which the Communist propaganda mills are turning out to defame the whole of America in the eyes of the world.

Needed: Responsible Negro Leadership

EDITOR, THE ADVERTISER — Please permit me to say a word concerning the boycott called by some Montgomery Negroes against the bus company. While my residence is not here at present, my business keeps me here about half of the time, and I read The Advertiser regularly. It seems to me that you give more space to letters from Negro preachers and a few white people who don't seem to realize the seriousness of what is happening, than you do to the solid opinion of the community.

Adv. 12-28-55

I have talked with dozens on the subject — some of them colored friends. Without an exception the rank and file of the white are definitely against it, and nine out of 10 Negroes don't know what it's about and are simply terrorized. And as much as we regret it, some Negro churches are being used to organize and keep the boycott going. It is not true to say that violence is not being used. What about more than 20 cases of shooting into buses? What of many cases where Negroes have been beaten because they did ride the bus? Those who are the victims know what will happen to them if they continue. And yet the Negro preachers who signed the big advertisement in Sunday's Advertiser said they were not advocating "violence." They started the boycott and they have to take responsibility for all that goes with it.

Montgomery, Ala.

To my mind these people who organized this boycott are violating the law, and have set up an organized effort to stir the Negroes to bitterness and resentment against the white people who have been their real friends. Unfortunately, this committee of Negroes that met with the mayor and his committee, classifies everybody who doesn't yield to their demand as "anti-Negro." If there was ever a time in Montgomery when sane, responsible Negro leadership is needed it is now. Where are those Negro leaders who have prosperous businesses and have found in Montgomery a place of friendship and cooperation among both races?

One man, a Rev. King, has been quoted over and over as calling different people "unfair." He said that about the mayor, about the committee the mayor had appointed. He is listed as the head of the "Montgomery Improvement Association." I don't know what it is or who it represents. I have been told that it is the local name for the NAACP. It is certainly time for some of the older, widely respected Negro citizens of Montgomery to come forward and take a hand. I lived here several years. I don't believe this boycott represents the best thought of the colored people of Montgomery. It is the kind of thing with its violence, its beating people who don't do what they say, that happened in Germany with the gestapo and happens in Russia. Some of these breeders of race hatred are doing a fine service for the cause of communism.

There may be discourtesies by bus operators. That is not unusual. We meet them everywhere and it is not a matter of race. If you look for them you may find them anywhere. That Sunday ad listed under "complaints:" "Physical torture," and then told of a Negro mother with two children, and when the bus moved they fell off the seat. What possible good will come from magnifying incidents and making them appear what they are realy not?

These Negro leaders of the "Montgomery Improvement Association" are trying to do away with the state and city law governing separate spaces for White and Negro. Their plan—seemingly innocent—is to do away with separate spaces or sections for the two races. The "first come, first served" basis, does just that. They will not consent to reserved sections for each race. They will not consent to have separate buses on runs where the Negro patronage is heaviest. They want what they demand and they will not be happy without it. They have selected Montgomery as a place for the peoples of other sections to look at, and have them say they got rid of segregation in Montgomery. They want some Negro bus operators. They want the company and the mayor to give them the right to say who they may employ, whether this is done anywhere else in the South or not. Anybody who does not yield to their demand they tag as "unfair."

A lot of people I talk to are alarmed by what may come out of this. It is causing a condition that may become very serious. When anybody stirs up racial hatred they are fooling with dynamite. We have to live together down here, and we've gotten along pretty well. If we let the agitator control things we are in for trouble. The Negro preachers who signed the Sunday ad or who use their churches to inflame the people against their neighbors ought to think about what they have set in motion.

I want the Negroes to have equal facilities. I want them treated fairly and with courtesy. I want them to have just treatment in all conditions, but this is the wrong way to use "economic pressure" and spread fear among their people, and resentment toward others. We've got to live together and work together and help each other, and anything that makes that harder is not helping the welfare. We don't get very far by force. The white people are pretty solid on this subject, and after all they have some rights too.

What's Wrong With The Constitution

Editor, The Advertiser:

The branchhead, crossroad and grassroots voters have spoken out loud at what our legislature has done in two sessions this year. They also rebuked all pressure groups from their leaders in the farm bureau, labor, schools, and courthouses. Their verdict is that we will not take orders from the inner circles.

We are now confronting another one of these specials to carry out more expensive ideas of these pro-administration cohorts under the pretext of a new constitution.

Just who, other than our governor, is quarreling about the current constitution?

If anyone should appreciate it, he ought to after being elected governor twice by a large majority.

Press statistics indicate that a new life is being born every 10 seconds. In a few short years they will be hunting an education. In my humble opinion public money is sacred and every dollar should be used for the best to the most people and any official or employe who wastefully expends it is a criminal and should be held responsible for his acts. Convening another session of the legislature is going to do nothing but be a "happy payday" to those we elected in good faith on basis of their candidacy and solicitation but whose first official act was to pull a strike against the people of this state in refusing to serve for the salaries they were elected at.

Why on earth can any man spend the voters money without competitive buying and selling and using the lowest and best bids without fear or favoritism?

Former debt paying Judge Coleman, member of the Supreme Court, who approved the 1901 constitution, says it is good, and I revere his name.

Will The South Bend Or Break?

EDITOR, THE ADVERTISER — After glancing at the headlines of the paper on Sunday, I immediately turn to two most interesting pages of the Sunday edition, the editorial page and the page opposite it, which contains Mr. Ingram's column among others. I was very interested in his column Sunday.

He stated that the man elected president of the 1956 convention could, with a few changes, make the same speech as was made by John B. Knox. I wonder if we agree on the changes. Possibly we do.

Adv. 12-23-55

I was born and reared in the Black Belt of Alabama, but I, like a lot of others, have been forced to do a lot of thinking on the race question lately. I am afraid the Negro is not now, nor has ever been, as happy and content with his place as we Southern white people have believed. There has been peace, true, but some of it has been peace imposed by fear. Such peace always brings its dangers.

Montgomery

The Negro is a minority race and could therefore never gain control of our government, but he should much more rapidly be given a voice at the ballot box. This is the safety valve of democracy, and we Southern white people are wrong in being so afraid to use it.

Have you visited Negro rural schools in Alabama lately? You know and I know that "equality" doesn't exist. If we had been doing since 1896 what some of our urban areas have been doing since 1939 to equalize school facilities, the tension now present would be greatly relieved. The thing that hurts me most of all is the fact that we Southern people almost never take the initiative in doing anything for the Negro. The Negro has made more progress in the last 20 years than at any time in his known history. But who had to start it? The Roosevelt administration.

T. 2-6

We Southern white people may not have as much money as the Yankees, but we could go them one better and give the Negro our cooperation and good will, which would do more good and be even more appreciated.

Take the Negro bus strike. They are asking for so little. "First come, first served" is certainly not much of an innovation. Very few white people could object to it. But we are so slow in granting even this little change.

As I see it the Negro, in some measure, stands today where the French peasant stood before the Great Revolution, and we white people, to a certain extent, stand in the shoes of the French nobility. We have two choices, we can, like the British, bend with the wind, and rise stronger after the storm, or we can be stiff and brittle like the French and be broken and wounded in the conflict. Somehow, I have the feeling that the British way would be a natural for us and that way will be our choice.

Unlawful Laws

Editor, The Advertiser:

Every one who reads or thinks nowadays has had a chance to ponder over the word law. In my mind, it has become a confusing thing. Every nation has a law of its own and, when that law is violated, will fight to preserve it. Then there are international laws which cause nations to unite in battle to defend them. Here in the United States we claim to have the best laws of all nations; a law of democracy.

Laws will give every individual the rights to protect themselves from injustice. Some time ago, the Supreme Court of the United States of America interpreted some of the laws of the Constitution of the United States which made the Negroes the happiest people in all the world. They hailed it as their second emancipation. The Negroes who always honor and try to keep the laws of his country saw the light of truth as it was handed down by the court went about preparing themselves for its realization.

I have been in America all of my life except the bloody days I spent overseas wading through mud, sleeping in pup tents, with the earth my couch, my elbow my pillow, and snow, sleet, and rain my often companions. Many cold nights I comforted my comrades by telling them that we were fighting for the best and the greatest country in the world.

We believed it then and I still believe it now. I then gave Uncle Sam the best I had, because, I gave him not only my life's blood and tears, but in those hours of deepest depression, I gave this country my prayers, faith, and loyalty. I gave it hoping that when we came again to the sweet old U.S.A. I would find the white man's hand and the black man's hand clasped and cemented in one spirit of love to God and Man.

I was not the only one who did just that, many others went over but all of them did not come back. Some of them died over there and I looked in some of the faces of those who slept away in the arms of Jesus, thinking that everything would be all right back here for his loved ones and for the comrades at their sides.

Can the laws of our land be so desecrated that men can make and execute laws entirely contrary to the laws of our great commonwealth? If in America men can make and execute laws contrary to laws of the Constitution, then we all can look for another Dark Age wherein peace can only be obtained by the edge of the sword.

Then all we have fought for from the Revolutionary War, Civil War, and World Wars I and II, and every dollar spent trying to bring the nations across the seas to peace will be mixing fire with gasoline. For if America fails to protect the poor and defenseless in her own land, I doubt whether other nations will feel the sincerity of efforts put forth by our country.

Misuse Of Religion

P. 4-A

EDITOR, THE ADVERTISER—It is unfortunate when advertisements appear in our daily papers (Advertiser, Dec. 29) under the name of the "Montgomery Improvement Association, Rev. M. L. King, president, calling for the people of Montgomery to open their churches and pray for what amounts to the success of the boycott against the bus company.

Mon. 1-2-56

The statement asking people to pray that the people may "move about the city of Montgomery without fear" is so untrue to the facts that it should be rebuked. The only people moving about our city in fear are those who have been terrorized with threats should they ride the buses.

Montgomery

It is a pity that churches built to worship God in should be used to stir up race bitterness. These colored preachers who ask their people to follow their lead in this senseless effort should find some other places, not God's house of worship, to keep going their propaganda.

What is the Montgomery Improvement Association? Wnat are its proposals? Who are its members? Are any white people in it? From the way it operates to divide the American people—stir up racial bitterness—it must be a delight to communists everywhere. It may be time when public officials should look into what is going on.

If my Baptist pastor should open our church for a day of prayer for such propaganda, many of us would get out.

Montgomery, Rt. 1. R. T. BONHAM.

Where Will They Strike Next

Editor, The Advertiser:

I have been reading some of the letters in Old Grandma concerning the bus boycott. They seem to be written mostly by Negroes or Negro sympathizers. Being neither one of these I would like to put my 2¢ in.

I am not a bus rider, but I am concerned over the bus boycott, because I know if the Negroes win this boycott, it is only the beginning. Suppose the bus company is forced to bow down to the Negro through these methods. Who will they strike next? Most likely the department stores! And what for? A seat at the white lunch counter and colored sales girls. These stores can be bowled over one at the time just as the bus company is being done now.

The Negro has tried to make this boycott appear as a strike against the bus company, but the way I see it, it's another strike against the white people to gain superiority. They have already proved it is not equal rights they want. The bus boycott is a very good example of how well the Negroes are organized, and the people that like the South the way it is had better stand up and take notice.

Why should the bus company and the 30-odd drivers that have been laid off be expected to stand this loss alone, when it is to the interest of so many. It is known that some white people are now making donations through the bus meters. Which seems like the best legal way to beat the Negroes at their own game. So what do you say we all help the bus company, who is trying to uphold the laws of our state as well as our way of life. J. P. JAMES.

Let's End The Boycott

EDITOR, THE ADVERTISER:

Montgomery has always had the reputation as a city of "good will, pleasant living, and cordial relations between the rates."

I, for one, think the vast majority of its people still believe this to be true, and cannot understand why the bus boycott has dragged on and on, and hasn't been settled long ere this. There is so much basis for compromise, without violating either city or state laws on segregation, if only men will meet together with "open minds and good will in their hearts."

There is no reason not to take in good faith the statements and advertisements of the Negro Improvement Association, that they are willing to compromise, and are not asking a violation of the segregation laws. The threatening ads of the Central Alabama Citizens Council, that bus fares will be increased or buses will be discontinued if the boycott is not called off, certainly do not help the situation nor tend to solve it. Threats have never solved any problem.

The committees which Mayor Gayle appointed have twice met and failed to get together on a single issue. It's up to Mayor Gayle, or the other members of our city commission, to now take the initiative, appoint entirely new committees, with no pre-conceived opinions, to meet together in "good will," and settle this issue. Every day that it drags on not only hurts the reputation of our fair city, but its economy as well. It must be settled with dignity on both sides, and there is no reason why it cannot be done. Let's re-establish Montgomery once again, as a city of "good will, pleasant living, and cordial relations between the races." Mr. Editor, perhaps you, too, can help to bring this about.

Alabama Senate Asks Court To Reverse Ruling

Wed. 3-21-56

MONTGOMERY, Ala., March 20.—(UP)—The Alabama Senate Tuesday unanimously approved a resolution that in effect asked the United States Supreme Court to veto its own decrees calling for integration of the races in Southern schools.

P. 19

However, the upper chamber postponed a vote on another resolution asking Congress to apportion Southern Negroes among Northern and Western states "or wherever they are wanted." It appeared unlikely the measure would ever come to a vote in this special session of the Legislature.

Memphis, Tenn.

The resolution aimed at the Supreme Court was a House-approved measure introduced by Representative Karl Harrison of Shelby County. It passed by a unanimous vote but the senators altered the wording of the measure which will have to be approved by the House before it is sent to Gov. James E. Folsom for his signature.

The second resolution was sponsored by Senator E. O. Eddins of Marengo County and asked the Federal Government pay for transporting Negroes to other states.

Senator Ben Reeves of Pike County, who opposed the measure, said, "I don't want to send them anywhere. Some of the best friends I have in Pike County are Negroes. And I'm their friend."

Senator Harrison's resolution asked the Supreme Court modify its integration rulings because they interfere "with the social fabric of the Southern way of life."

Circuit Judge Cites Possible Penalty For Conviction On Anti-Boycott Laws

Advertiser Montgomery, Ala. 2-14
Wed. 2-15-56

Organized boycotting of lawful businesses is against the law and punishable by heavy fines or stiff sentences, Circuit Judge Eugene B. Carter advised, following his charge to the grand jury this week.

Persons convicted for unlawful boycotting are jubject to a sentence of not more than six months in the county jail and fines of not more than $1,000 or not less than $100.

MAY BE DIFFICULT

Judge Carter, observing that Montgomery County has seldom been confronted with boycotts of any kind in the past and never with a boycott of city buses, said enforcement of the law may be difficult. He pointed out that the law applies to situations where persons are forced to boycott business organizations "involuntarily" through leadership or conspiracy. Simple failure to patronize a firm, even among a group, does not constitute boycotting, he said. However, persons responsible for inciting or organizing resistance to a business operation may be prosecuted, the judge added.

Judge Carter, who directed the jury to investigate acts of boycotting—emphasizing the current bus boycott—and determine violations of the law, cited Title 14, Chapter 20 of Alabama Code of 1940 which reads in part as follows:

"Two or more persons who, without a just cause or legal excuse for doing so, enter into any combination, conspiracy, agreement, arrangement or understanding for the purpose of hindering, delaying, or preventing any other persons, firms, corporation, or association of persons from carrying on any lawful business, shall be guilty of a misdemeanor."

OTHER PROVISIONS

Other provisions of the code relative to boycotting make unlawful the following: "loitering or picketing, printing or circulating notice of boycott, using force or threats against persons engaging in lawful occupation, maintaining blacklists, attempt or threat to injure or destroy property of another, teaching, printing books or papers, or organizing persons to boycott . . ."

Penalties for violations of the boycotting statute are set forth in Title 14, Sect. 62 which reads as follows:

"Any persons, firm, corporation, or association of persons violating any of the sections, shall, on conviction, be punished by a fine of not less than one hundred dollars, nor more than one thousand dollars and may also be imprisoned in the county jail or sentenced to hard labor for the county for not more than six months for the first conviction, at the discretion of the court or judge trying the case; and on the second and every subsequent conviction, at the discretion of the court or judge trying the case; and on the second and every subsequent conviction, in addition to the fine which may be imposed, the convicted party must be sentenced to hard labor for not less than three months nor more than six months, to be fixed by the judge or court trying the case."

New Suit For Shores

EDITOR, THE ADVERTISER — Lawyer Shores is about the luckiest Negro in Birmingham, now that he has found Miss Lucy and the U. of A. Before Miss Lucy, the law practice of Lawyer Shores, according to my understanding, wasn't so good.

But those days are gone now (that he has Miss Lucy) and it is wonderful to be eating regular again, have a client, and wear new clothes like other folks. And his name is on the front pages of all the papers over the nation. But he must keep busy trying every trick in the bag in order to stay in the news. He must also prove to his colored lawyer friends up North how smart he is, because if he loses his case, his bubble is busted for good.

Should Lawyer Shores win his case, and Miss Lucy returns to classes at the University, what if the other students stage a general strike and refuse to attend the same school with her. Would Lawyer Shores then get a court order ordering the school to remain open for Miss Lucy to be the one and only student at the University?

The Court Proposes, Congress Disposes

Editor, The Advertiser:

The writer has read much in the papers about the decision of the Supreme Court of the United States being the law of the land. We have even read statements by some members of the Congress who proclaim that the decision of the court is the law of the land and should be obeyed.

We will have to admit that we are not as well learned, in law, or many other subjects, possibly, as the distinguished gentlemen who have made these statements, and should not be so presumptuous as to take issue with them. But,

The fifth section of the 14th Amendment clearly states as follows: "The Congress shall have power to enforce by appropriate legislation the provisions of this article."

This section of the amendment shows without doubt, that the states in adopting the amendment delegated the power of enforcement to the Congress describing the manner in which Congress should enforce it. (By appropriate laws.)

Therefore, the Supreme Court is without power, in the absence of such appropriate legislation and the violation thereof, to enforce any decision they may hand down concerning the 14th Amendment, or for that matter, any other amendment where enforcement is vested in Congress.

For any member of the Senate or House of Representatives of Congress to contend that such decision or decree of the Supreme Court is the law of the United States, is for such member to contend that the Supreme Court is a superior lawmaking body than that of Congress and has the power to make, adjudge and enforce their own laws in disregard to the provisions of the Constitution. (The law, the judge and the jury.)

You've Made Your Bed, Now Lie In It

Editor, The Advertiser:

Before you condemn the Negroes, in the "Battle of the University of Alabama," consider the following facts and ask yourself if you and I aren't the ones who should be blamed?

I contributed money and lots of my time to the election of Mr. Eisenhower (approximately 18 months before his election, in a lengthy article in Collier's magazine, Ike stated in no uncertain words, that he believed in states rights), and so did you and millions more support and vote for him.

The President appointed Mr. Warren chief justice of the Supreme Court, a known radical when it comes to socialism and civil rights, in keeping with the times, as a reward for Warren's help in politics, with little regard as to his qualifications. But wait, Democrats, don't laugh. Before Mr. Warren could take office he had to be confirmed. I never heard or read of where Mr. Sparkman, Mr. Hill or any other Southern or Northern senator got up in Congress and raised hell because an unwise or unqualified appointment was going to be made. And remember, too, members of the Senate are far more informed than you or I.

The same situation took place under Truman, yet your Hill and Sparkman played party politics as usual and as usual you good Democrats continued to support the party, come hell or high water. Now, need I mention Mr. Roosevelt and his Supreme Court packing?

Now don't miss the point. The same applies to the Republican Party as well as the Democratic Party: When a party fails to change (when need be), then it's time to change the party.

In Support Of Senator Eastland

Advertiser Montgomery, Ala. Adv. 2-21-56

The Greensboro Watchman

Sen. Eastland, who again appears before an Alabama audience this week, is rapidly emerging as the foremost Southern leader of the day. Fearless and determined, he is furnishing Alabama the leadership which it so desperately needs in the miserable failure of its own.

This is a presidential election year.

In every probability, Alabama will insist on remaining Democratic—regardless of the radical position of its Democratic candidates or the wording of its Democratic platform.

But the temper of Alabama today is not what it was in 1954, or even in 1952—when, like so many sycophants, we accepted the anti-Southern leadership, on both state and national levels, as natural.

Today, the pendulum has swung back to 1948, when Alabama took the lead in the Southern fight. There have been many factors in this swing, but the most important are the Supreme Court decision, the situation at the University of Alabama, and the apostasy of that professional vulgarian, Jim Folsom.

Today, Alabama does not want Adlai Stevenson, nor the lightweight radical from New York, Harriman, nor the socialist Kefauver.

They do not represent Alabama.

But Sen. Eastland of Mississippi does represent Alabama—or at least a very large portion of it which is growing larger by the day with each new aggravation.

And those who believe as Sen. Eastland believes have a chance to do something about it. They have a chance to be heard on a national scale. To be heard, they have only to enter candidates for the Democratic convention in every congressional district in Alabama—pledged to this man from Mississippi. Against that left-wing crowd, he would sweep this state.

We know that Sen. Eastland himself cannot be nominated for the presidency, but with a formidable bloc of delegates at his command, he can do much to stop the nomination of another anti-Southern radical, and he can do much to stop the adoption of a platform aimed at the destruction of our civilization.

In Sen. Eastland, we have a man who thinks as we do. Let's back him to the hilt!

VOICE OF THE PEOPLE

Preserve The Federal Union

Our nation is a union of sovereign states. State sovereignty is recognized with two senators from each state in a U. S. Senate. Our nation is a union of sovereign citizens. Citizen sovereignty is recognized with a representative elected by a specified number of citizens, in the House of Representatives. This quality of sovereignty was brought about by our founding fathers who insisted that government officials are servants of the people.

U. S. citizens owe allegiance to the federal union with rights and privileges guaranteed and protected by the Supreme Court and federal courts within the states. U. S. citizens are also citizens of the states in which they live. State laws are legal only when they are not in violation of U. S. Supreme Court decisions. State court decisions are valid only when the U. S. Supreme Court says they are not in conflict with the federal constitution.

Our Legislature voting that a certain Supreme Court decision is null and void makes our federal union as phony as the Soviets' "People's Democracy." God help us to protect and preserve our federal union—the one and only hope for true world democracy.

Apparently John Brown Had Many Children

"John Brown's body lies a-moulding in the grave, but his soul goes marching on."

A fiery old abolitionist and arch-foe of slavery, there were no deeds too black, no acts too cruel to stay that old fanatic in his self-appointed, self-rightous mission. And his followers are legion.

Today it is stunning to see letters to the editor, pouring in from white people, vitriolically branding their white neighbors as "mobsters." John Brown is indeed marching on.

These overly-pious "John Browns" know that their white (mobster) neighbors would rather do without an education at the University than to attend it with a Negro. These John Browns care not that a thousand or five thousand white young people stay away, not so long as their frenzied fanatical and intolerant zeal enables them to put one Negro there.

"Call out the National Guard! Sweep the streets clean of these mobsters," they cry.

Condemnation Of Others Lies Heavy Upon Us

During the past year and half Alabama has seemed to possess a special affinity for headline news—most of which could not have, in any way, enhanced the good name of the state. The Phenix City story, the seemingly inexhaustible source of the governor's escapades and now mob violence.

I find the facts difficult to believe. The grandeur and sublimity of the rolling countryside refutes the merest possibility of the savage spectacle of a mob. The gentle, soft-spoken people belie the facts.

Having come from Pulaski, Tenn., I have always been a staunch defender of the South. Now I am forced to revise my opinions. My mind can no longer accommodate the Christian religion and so-called Southern tradition simultaneously. The South is beautiful, it is interesting and amazing, but it is too dead. The mob, the irresponsible and savage talk that one hears at one's every turn are proof of what happens when men become enslaved by prejudice and traditions.

To me, it seems that nothing here has changed since I was a small child. Some Yankee industry has moved in and government projects have put electric power in remote areas. These things have raised the standard of living for many. But what of the minds of men? Generally speaking, they remain suspended, where, long ago, they became so. Every effort is being employed to keep them there. There is a law whereby teachers may be fired for deviating from established dogma. Professors are quitting the posts because their intellectual development cannot accommodate old and stagnant thinking. Ministers have canceled speaking engagements because they are unable to squeeze their religion into the narrow, dark confines of prejudice and hatred.

John Stienbuck once said, "They have come to believe that all things passing their understanding are vicious and evil—things to be stamped out and destroyed." I believe this quotation might be applied to the thinking of the majority of Southern people.

It is the everlasting shame of this state to have one of its citizens offered free education all over the world, even the Communist world. The Communists love this situation made to order, but the condemnation of others is heavy upon us.

Should Outsiders Comment On Alabama?

Nobility of service to the community being the subject of Roscoe Drummond's column in today's (Feb. 13) Birmingham News (and as to many editorials by your staff in years gone by), it is becoming increasingly evident that your policies, if intended to be in the best interests of peace in the community, by adding fuel to embers of disorder, are serving the opposition of the interests of peace, rather than tending to promote the peace.

For instance, Walter Lippmann's column goes further toward promoting peace in the South than any of your own or of the others of your out-of-state contributors; yet, of what earthly good can it serve if it only delays and does not purport to solve the difficulty? He could have found many things in his own state, or in some other part of the world, not any another state of the U. S. other than his own, to dig with his barbs of criticism, regardless of their intention. Does not his own community need constructive criticism? And will it not appear more, that he is not trying to run our business? Does he think we cannot mind our own business? And a thousand other questions, including one for you. Do you write papers in his state, concerning matters there, you certainly do not know as much about as he does? And would the papers there print your opinions about their business?

It is suggested, rather pointedly, that you can better serve your community by expressing matters of state concern, by native Alabamians, and give us opinions of nationals on national and international matters. It will go far toward maintaining the peace of the community. As the leading newspaper and medium of public voice, you have a sacred responsibility that can make or wreck the community. The people of Alabama can govern themselves properly, only as they are properly informed.

Editor, The Advertiser:

I was reading today that our esteemed governor had finally taken a stand, however puny, regarding the segregation issue.

Could it be that he is waking up finally to the fact that communistic agitators from without the borders of our beloved state and our beloved South are on the threshold of destroying the civilization and harmony between the peoples that go to make up the population here?

Or could it be that he realizes he is politically doomed should he continue to take the jellyfish stand he has taken.

Two News Stories

Editor, The Advertiser:

The incident that happened at the university when two Negro men assaulted a teen-age student was a cowardly act and certainly will not be overlooked by the students. Miss Lucy was not atacked, or assaulted even though the Northern papers and the Eastern papers said she came very near being. It seems that they know a great deal more about what happened than we do. They vastly exaggerated what actually happened, as usual. I am wondering if they will give the incident yesterday as much publicity as they did Miss Lucy. In all probability it will be entirely ignored.

The Segregation Problems

(The Alabama Baptist)

The nation, and the South in particular, is faced with a grave problem which is a result of the Supreme Court's decision, declaring that segregation in our public schools is illegal. The ideal thing, from many angles, would be to see our nation comply in an orderly manner with this decision of the Supreme Court. However, the ideal is not always practical.

There are many problems facing the nation in carrying out this Supreme Court decision. There are certain problems which arise out of human nature and other areas. There are many prejudices relative to this question and these cannot be erased by a legal act. Traditions and customs cannot be thrown in reverse overnight. The interference of man's set ways has a tendency to arouse one's passions instead of his reason. These factors in this problem call for a rational approach and not a sudden action which will result in troubles for all concerned.

There are other influences which are complicating this problem, especially in the South. There are cultural factors which enter into the problem, since some of our citizens have not developed in this field to the point where they would be acceptable by those who have.

Further complicating this situation in the South is outside interference. It has been publicly stated that the Communists are aggravating the problem here in our own state. All of our citizens should recognize that this is highly possible and not be stirred up to do things which would cause regrettable results.

Then there are those who will use this touchy subject to gain politically. Coercive and subversive influences should be guarded against.

This is not a problem we can dismiss by a statement or an attitude. We believe that most of our people want to be law-abiding, yet we realize there are some things the law cannot immediately control. It is the human factor which makes it very essential to move with moderation in this grave crisis. We should not enter into hasty action in any direction. There are some things which can be accomplished better by some sudden action, then there are other things which must occur gradually lest there be more damage done than good accomplished. We urge upon our people on both sides to exercise their Christian graces and to manifest real intelligent concern for the problems which we face in this court decision.

All sides should appeal to God in prayer for guidance, thus bringing a solution to this problem through godly means instead of through some means which would be contrary to that which is right.

FEDERALS GET WARNING

State Circuit Judge Ready To Order Arrest Of 'Invading' U.S. Officers

UNION SPRINGS, Ala., Feb. 6 (AP)—A circuit judge accused government investigators of "gestapo methods" today and threatened to jail any federal officers engaged in "deliberate invasion of state sovereignty."

Circuit Judge George Wallace said he would order the arrest of "every member of the FBI or other federal police" who attempt to investigate grand juries or courts in his judicial circuit.

And in his formal charge to the Bullock County Grand Jury, he urged the jurors to request local officials to enforce state laws requiring segregated travel despite the recent interstate commerce commission ruling barring separate facilities for whites and Negroes on interstate carriers.

"The ICC has no more right to overturn a state law than the Veterans Administration has," Judge Wallace declared.

The south Alabama judge, whose circuit is composed of Bullock, Barbour and Dale counties, pointed to the recent federal investigation of grand juries in Cobb County, Ga., as an "unwarranted and deliberate invasion of state sovereignty by the federal police" and a "direct insult to the people of that county and to state sovereignty."

"If at any time, this grand jury, this court or an agency related to its makeup is investigated by the U.S. Justice Department through the Federal Bureau of Investigation or any other unit of federal police, I shall consider such investigation a gross violation of state sovereignty, and illegal, and an open insult to the people of the counties of my circuit . . .," Judge Wallace told the grand jury.

He said he would "invoke the full power and authority I possess and shall issue an order for the arrest of every member of the FBI or other federal police so involved in such investigation."

And he said if any federal agents are "physically present within my jurisdiction" they would be jailed for contempt of court "for such conduct in my considered opinion is contemptuous."

The Cobb County, Ga., investigation which drew Judge Wallace's fire followed the reversal by the U.S. Supreme Court of the conviction of Amos Reece, Negro convicted of raping a white woman.

The Supreme Court said the conviction was set aside because evidence showed no Negro had served on a Cobb County Grand Jury prior to Reece's indictment on Oct. 28, 1953.

But the justice department, after its investigation, said the current method of jury selection in Cobb County involved no illegal discrimination. The FBI report said Negroes had been included on grand juries there since August, 1954.

Communiting on the Georgia investigation, Judge Wallace said: "Unless we assert ourselves and if we continue to allow such Gestapo methods in local affairs, then surely local government in America will be dead forever."

A former member of the Legislature, Judge Wallace is a candidate for delegate to the National Democratic Convention this year. As a delegate in 1948, he refused to walk out with other delegates in protest to the racial policies of former President Harry Truman.

Less than a month ago Judge Wallace also charged the grand jury in his home county of Barbour to enforce Alabama's segregation laws.

On the same day, the grand jury indicted a white man for the slaying of a Negro. The defendant was sentenced to life in prison less than three weeks later after a trial at which Judge Wallace presided.

Arresting The Cops

Advertiser

If at any time this grand jury, this court or an agency related to its makeup is investigated by the U.S. Justice Department through the Federal Bureau of Investigation or any other unit of federal police I shall consider such investigation a gross violation of state sovereignty, and illegal, and an open insult to the people of the counties of this circuit. I shall issue an order for the arrest of every member of the FBI or other federal police so involved in such investigation . . . They will be arrested and put in jail for contempt of court.

Mon, 2-6-56

This remarkable challenge was made yesterday by Circuit Judge George Wallace before the Bullock County grand jury. In effect, it is a one-circuit nullification proclamation in keeping with the spirit of the legislature's abrogation of the Supreme Court's segregation decisions as "null, void and of no effect." For Judge Wallace is in effect nullifying the Civil Rights Act which has been interpreted as giving the FBI authority to investigate alleged violations of civil liberties, including those involving jury service.

It would be interesting to see who would prevail should Judge Wallace carry out his threat. An FBI agent, like any other cop (J. Edgar's distaste for the word notwithstanding) has no immunity from criminal law. If he breaks the law in Bullock County— by, say, an act of assault or traffic violation—he is as accountable as the next man. But, on the other hand, if an FBI agent is lawfully doing his duty under federal law, the federal courts might hold that any interference—including arrest for "contempt"—would be obstruction of justice.

The local constabulary might subject themselves to prosecution for false arrest in jailing the feds. And the judge who issued the warrant might himself be jailed and prosecuted, though this would certainly be tantamount, in these times of reasserted state sovereignty, to his election as governor if not U.S. Senator.

That the FBI has been used indiscriminately on a number of occasions recently is indisputable. One instance which comes to mind was the experience of the Mayor of Memphis, in the recent Dixon-Yates controversy. When the mayor pulled the rug from under the contenders with the statement that Memphis would build its own municipal power plant, thus obviating the need of the disputed power contract, he was promptly visited by FBI agents who questioned him sharply on his sincerity, his plans, motives, etc. Atty. Gen. Brownell called the visitation "routine." If it is, we have fallen on bad times.

Judge Wallace's statement was probably intended as nothing more than a judicial rebel yell. But morbid curiosity over the conflict of laws involved has us hoping that he will be given an opportunity to carry out his threat.

'Y'All Come' Pops Up Again

The Gadsden Times

IN 1954, before "Big Jim" became Gov. James E. Folsom of Alabama, he used a homey little slogan to good advantage—"Y'All Come." Before it was over a lot of people got rather tired of hearing and reading about "Y'All Come." More folk apparently didn't mind because plenty of them came.

Mon, 2-6-56

But now it seems the phrase has become of such historical worth that it will be imprinted on 1957 license plates.

With "Y'All Come" at the bottom and "Heart of Dixie" at the top, Gov. Folsom's own heart should beat with glee with his political message designed for statewide and nationwide distribution for 12 months out of the year.

Of course, there'll be plenty of people like ourselves who will flatly refuse to serve as messagers for Mr. Folsom's cause. Whether it is political advertising in neon lights or a simple wording at the bottom of automobile tags, most persons will object to serving as objects of mobile outdoor advertising for Gov. Folsom or anyone else.

We find this business extremely objectionable, and open to the severest criticism. Mr. Folsom, we are confident, feels very warmly toward those "three little words," but his affrontery in assuming that all Alabamians share such sentimental taste is unparalleled in our memory.

Montgomery

There is a state law (Title 51, Section 708, of the Alabama Code) which refers to "defacing" automobile licenses. Fortunately the law was written solely to discourage criminal intent, for it says that an auto tag cannot, without fine, be mutilated or altered "for the purpose of deception," and there's the out.

Anyone wanting to use a dab of black paint (a simple job since the colors, black on orange, are likely to be reversed next year) or a pair of tin-clippers wil be completely within their legal rights to do a little blotting or trimming.

As a matter of fact, using a little paint or a cutting utensil, for many of us, will be following the letter of the law—ridding ourselves of dictated deception.

The Last Straw

The Dothan Eagle

THE last straw has not yet been piled upon the camel's back in this ecstatically happy State of Folsomania.

But it's coming.

Bob Ingram, who does the Capitol chores for The Montgomery Advertiser, reports that when Alabama automobile owners line up to buy their 1957 license tags next fall they will be in for a great, big surprise.

The "Heart of Dixie" slogan will still be there, at the top. Something new will be "Y'All Come" at the bottom.

It's already in the works. The unblushing report was confirmed by Revenue Commissioner Larue Horn and again at Kilby Prison where the tags are made.

Thus, every automobile owner in Alabama will be displaying the governor's personal slogan, front and rear, and paying for the privilege. And every driver who keeps his eyes ahead will be part of one, vast captive audience.

So, you don't like it? You voted against him, or since changed your mind? You'll just scratch out "Y'All Come" or cover it with something else? Oh, no you won't. There's a law against that. It's the statute known as defacing or marring license plates.

If the governor orders the slogan as long as he's in office, you'll carry it—front and rear—through 1959. That's because he's in position to do exactly that until he goes out of office in January, 1959. His successor can do the inscribing for the 1960 tags, but no sooner.

Then, maybe, you can get a new message, like "He Went That-Away," but not before.

"Y'All Come!"—and the line forms on the right Oct. 1, 1956.

Montgomery's Bombing

The Talladega Daily Home

RACIAL agitation and resentment of that agitation reached a regrettable climax at Montgomery last night when a bomb of some sort was hurled at the home of a Negro minister who has been a leader in the bus boycott of recent weeks.

We deplore the situation. We condemn in precisely equal measure the hoodlums who hurled the bomb and the minister who helped to bring on unbearable tension by deliberately working to create a crisis over racial segregation in public transportation.

The City of Montgomery has posted a reward of $500 for information leading to the arrest and conviction of the bombers. That is an action which all right-thinking people will commend.

Under Montgomery city law segregation of the races is required in public conveyances.

The boycott began when a Negro woman was found guilty of violating that law and given a moderate fine.

From week to week the tension has mounted. The boycott leaders, this particular minister loud among them, have turned down proposal after proposal designed to meet whatever complaints Negro passengers might have had.

Their refusal to go half way in the situation made it perfectly plain that their goal was not an agreement reached in Montgomery's traditional understanding and good will between the races, but the breeding of animosity and controversy in order to attack segregation.

The incident but points up the necessity for calmness on the part of both white and Negro as Alabama charts her course for the difficult days ahead.

The Sensible Approach

The Clarke County Democrat

Clarke County citizens, at a meeting held here on Tuesday night of this week, decided to take positive steps toward maintenance of friendly relations between the whites and the Negroes of Clarke County. The group meeting here included county and city officials, legislators, leaders of farm activities, and others. Jan. 3-11-56

A few Negroes, recognized as representative members of their race, had been invited from every beat in the county, and a goodly number of those invited was present. Necessarily, the number invited from each precinct had to be limited. Montgomery, Ala.

It was the concensus of opinion at this first meeting that a vast majority of the whites desire to continue friendly relations with the Negroes and that a similar majority of the Negroes is equally desirous of maintaining friendly relations with the whites.

It would be nothing short of tragic if paid agitators and professional trouble makers were permitted to come in here and disrupt the conditions under which the two races now function so smoothly and under which the Negro race is making such rapid advancement.

As stated previously, we are definitely in favor of of a bi-racial organization in this county. It will afford a medium for bringing leading members of the two races together for friendly discussion of such problems as may exist.

Such an organization is imperative in this time of crisis. It should be composed of the best members of both races, men who are tolerant of the views of others and who will study with sympathetic understanding all problems coming before them.

As far as can be judged, the racial antagonism which is doing so much harm in other sections of the state, is conspicuously absent here. Instead, there is the same friendly spirit between the races which has existed for many years. With the two races cooperating, it can be kept that way. Let's do it.

Alabama Might Take The Lead

Daily World

Well has it been said that it is a bad wind that blows nobody good. So, coming out of the wash of the current transit debacle of Alabama's capital city, there may be some helpful suggestions for the advancement of better relations. Sat. 2-4-56

Alabama has for her governor a repeater; that is to say that he has served a previous term as chief executive of that state and has excellent advantages in improving over his former administration. Atlanta, Ga.

It must be said for Governor Jim Folsom that he made a good record at Montgomery in his first administration; that he was accessable to all the citizens of Alabama for counsel and the implementation of his offices for the good of the citizens whose taxes paid the freight. P. 6.

While Governor Folsom did not do all that he might have done for our particular racial group, he made an excellent beginning toward the ends of impartial administration of the affairs of state. 38 a ce

In the dispute between the colored citizens of Montgomery and the transit authorities, the governor has not impugned the motives of the leaders of the cause nor has he suggested violence. In the fight of Southern governors around the segregation question, he has not consorted with those who flew in the face of the court and used defiant language in their tirades against the court's decision.

In the case of Miss Autherine Lucy, who at last has received a letter favorable to her entry in the University of Alabama, the governor has not expressed any displeasure nor served notice that he would openly defy the courts.

Speakers at the local Hungry Club praised Governor Folsom and referred to him as a high type of an executive, believing in justice and fair play to all.

Governor Folsom as the chief executive of a deep South state has a laudable opportunity in these times of stress and delicate tensions; his cool headedness and the ethical methods in the employ of a native technique which he possesses might lend him to this occasion as a powerful leader, a criteria with that courageous vigor to point the way for all the South.

If given proper support the tall Governor of Alabama, who once said he wanted more Negroes to vote than were voting in Alabama, might emerge to lead the South out of the house of bondage of bias into the promised land of tolerance and human justice.

But That Was Different

Fri. 3-9-56

EDITOR, THE ADVERTISER—During the reign of Earl Warren as governor of California, there occurred riots here in Hollywood that would make the Alabama gathering look like a stiff breeze compared to a full size hurricane. Montgomery, Ala.

Opposing studio unions battled with clubs and what have you, and for a long period of time.

Herb Sorrell, leader of the rioters, cheered on his cohorts from a low flying airplane equipped with loud speaker at the "Battle in front of Warner Brothers."

People were injured, property damaged and a major highway (in front of Warner Brothers) was unsafe for neutrals who were compelled to make a wide detour since this highway had the only bridge over the river and road through the hills for a couple of miles.

Gov. Earl Warren did not intervene.

A newspaper said he had no authority to, under the law, unless requested by local officials.

Yet you will notice how The Los Angeles Times' cartoon points a finger at Alabama!

You might have the matter looked up as a comeback at this holier-than-thou stuff the doctrinaire press is shouting.

Put Love And Service Ahead Of Fear And Hate

News P. 10

The sooner our people of this nation realize that peace and brotherhood among all peoples cannot be achieved by legislation and the passing of laws alone, but through that love made manifest by Christ, the better off all things and situations will be. There is no problem on any scale which cannot find its solution through a love and knowledge of God. There are many among us who express fear of the outcome of the current "problem" of segregation. This is truly a time of testing of the faith of Christians everywhere; many are worried as to the duties and responsibilities of others about them, to the neglect of their own. On one occasion, when Peter and John were together with the Master, Peter was extremely worried as to what John would do. Whereupon, Christ replied to Peter, "If I will that he tarry till I come, what is that to thee? Follow thou me."

If any of us truly follow Christ, we do not condemn our neighbor because he happens to differ in opinion from us, or because he happens to be of another religion or race, but through humility and love we strive to minister to his spiritual and physical needs. In the day of Christ there existed, as there does today, various "social" levels of society. Let us remember that Christ did not seek to force all peoples into one level of the world's society; He did more than that. He lived and taught and proved to the world of all generations that all people can live together in peace and understanding brought on through love of God and one another. Even though all today are not on the same social level in the eyes of men, all can meet on spiritual ground that brings love and understanding. Far too many of us are too prone to point the finger of accusation at the other fellow, forgetting that our own lives may not be above reproach in His sight who sees us all as we really are. Very few can put ourselves in the other person's place and thereby sympathize with him in his problems of life. In a sermon at Christ Church in New York, Dr. Ralph W. Sockman pointed out that "religion must help us to make the motives of love and service stronger than the motives of fear and hate." (He also added that "we of the North should show what we can do in community integration rather than merely shout to the South what it should do.")

Let White Southerners Pray March 28, Too

EDITOR, THE ADVERTISER—It is to the eternal credit of Montgomery Negroes that they have resorted to prayer in their "sufferings." But one questions their sincerity in posing such deep "love" for those who "hate" them so intensely.

Montgomery, Ala.

What irony! All that the Negro of the South is or has, he owes to the white race, who by taxation provides more than 90% of his advantages, educational, civic, and other public privileges. P.4-A

"Too weak to hold water" are the belated propositions made by their "patron saint" who sits in the governor's seat in Montgomery. His recent "face-about" in what seems to be a face-saving maneuver, appears to be the "voice of Jacob, but the hand of Esau." Most surely "them lyingnewspapers" and the present "hogwash" legislature will not fall for his late schemes, but will just let him, according to the great Winston Churchill, "stew in his own juice."

Beware of his tirades against outside influences causing all our troubles in Alabama! What was the import of his entertaining at a Scotch drinking social in the governor's mansion, the arch enemy of the South and everything Southern, the Rev. Rep. out of Harlem, N.Y., Adam Powell, and riding him around over the "Cradle of the Confederacy," in a tax-provided No. 1 Cadillac?

Now this high and mighty Reverend, finding it impossible to conquer and humiliate a pure-blooded Anglo-Saxon South, orders a day of prayer, March 28, for deliverance of the Montgomery Negroes from the wickedness of their white friends.

Let them pray; they should pray! But praying "till the crack of doom" will not bring integration.

A final suggestion to our Folsom: Proclaim March 28 a day of prayer for the white people of the South. Plead with the Lord to deliver the poor, deluded, Southern Negro from the evil designs of the gold diggers and political opportunists, above the Mason & Dixon Line.

Lincoln's Liberation

Editor, The Advertiser:

The following is from the greatest statesman of the United States, Abraham Lincoln:

"I will say, then, that I am not, nor ever have been, in favor of bringing about in any way the social and the political equality of the white and black races; that I am not, nor ever have been, in favor of making voters or jurors of Negroes nor qualifying them to hold office, nor to intermarry with white people; and I will say in addition to this that there is a physical difference between the white and black races which I believe will forever forbid the two races living together on terms of social and political equality; and inasmuch as they cannot so live, while they do remain together there must be the position of superior and inferior, and I, as much as any other man, am in favor of having the superior position assigned to the white man."

Gospel Of Hate

Editor, The Advertiser:

The Negro ministers of Montgomery ought to meditate and ask themselves if they are preaching the truth. Namely, that the white people are their enemies and hate them. If they honestly believed that they wouldn't want to force their society on us. They don't believe that themselves, therefore they are not preaching the truth.

They know white folks are making the laws and taxing themselves to give them good schools and all the other facilities that we have. They get more relief money, 10 to one, than white. They are given good jobs where they are capable.

It is a true saying the more you help some folks, the harder they are to please and the more demanding they are.

What The Negro Stands To Lose

Advertiser P. 4-A

EDITOR, THE ADVERTISER — Inasmuch as we are Southerners, having been born and raised in Alabama, we are familiar with segregation in the South and realize the necessity of it.

For the past several years one or both of us have lived in states other than Southern: West Virginia, Kansas and Oregon. We are therefore in the position of having a bird's-eye-view of a situation with which we are familiar.

We have a high regard for the Southern Negro as an individual. We have equally high contempt for the agencies and implements such as the NAACP and the Supreme Court decision which would, through their radical and unlawful actions, cause the Southern Negro to inadvertently lose the respect and good will of his best friend—the Southern white man.

It Started With FDR

Editor, The Advertiser:

I have just read your interview in U.S. News & World Report.

There is no doubt that there is hypocrisy in the North. It is in the Democratic party, however. Your good friends, Franklin and Harry started it.

You must realize that there is a lot of difference between between a Southern and Northern Democrat. The strength of the Northern Democratic Party is the slums of the cities.

In the North you can tell the character of any community by the registration.

Most Northern Negroes are pawns of Democratic ward healers.

These Northern Democrats tell the Negroes that the South is behind the times and that the Democraic Party of the North does not need the South.

I wish that a lot of you intelligent Southerners could go to a slums political meeting. I am a Mason and a Rotarian. There are very few Democrats in either organization in the North.

Birmingham ministers ask calmness in racial trials

News Birmingham, Ala. Tues. 3-6-56

BY LORINE ALEXANDER, News staff writer

All people were called on yesterday to "exercise calmness, goodwill, restraint, courtesy, kindness, and sympathetic consideration for the dignity and well-being of all people in these days of race relations crises."

The appeal was made in a resolution adopted at a Birmingham Ministers Assn. meeting at the First Methodist Church.

THE MINISTERS asked that each person exert individually his influence in a peaceful way toward the solution of the complex and difficult problems "which mutually confront us."

"Let us look up prayerfully and in great faith to God who giveth wisdom and grace to all, and upbraideth not," the resolution asked.

The resolution added that "we, the ministers of Birmingham, are praying daily for God's guidance in the solution of our common problems."

THE ACUTE NEED for more nursing facilities for aged persons was emphasized in an address by the Rev. David Cady Wright. The Rev. Mr. Wright, rector, St. Mary's Episcopal Church, told the ministers that of the 66 licensed nursing homes in Alabama, not one is housed in a fireproof building, not one employs a professional dietitian, not one has dining room facilities, and only one employs graduate nurses.

Of those in Birmingham, the speaker said, there are three he would not "allow my dog to sleep in."

Under the Hill-Burton Act the government will pay two-thirds of the cost of building a privately sponsored nursing home, and for two years the money provided under this plan for Alabama has gone unused and was returned to Washington, he said.

PLANS ARE UNDER way for an 80-bed home in Jefferson County to be built under the sponsorship of seven Episcopal churches. However, 800 beds are needed in the county.

This minister urged his fellow clergymen not to forget the older members of their congregations. He told of a club in his church which meets on Mondays in a local restaurant in which members must be 65 or older.

Dr. John M. Lukens, president of the association, announced that a group would meet to continue plans to establish an inter-denominational spiritual guidance program for the University of Alabama Medical Center here.

Stop A Fire Before It Starts

(From The Christian Science Monitor)

Make no mistake; positions on the segregation issue are hardening, tensions are rising, temperatures are going up. The trouble at the moment centers in the Deep South, in the state of Alabama in the cities of Tuscaloosa and Montgomery, But rising tensions widen excitement. Higher temperatures can cause combustion. And fires spread.

For these reasons what Governor Folsom has proposed for Alabama and Adlai Stevenson has urged for the entire nation bring notes of sanity into a situation fast becoming far too emotional. They both propose biracial commissions, that for Alabama to be appointed presumably by Governor Folsom himself. And Mr. Stevension calls on President Eisenhower to name one for the whole country.

Such steps should receive the strongest possible support from every thinking person.

What might such commissions accomplish in today's situation? "Study commissions" are sometimes set up as devices to postpone definitive action. But these should not be primarily study commissions. They should provide concentrations of leadership for both races toward reasonable thinking, toward cooling tempers, and away from bitter resentments and frantic fears.

Some observers have asked whether there is time or room for compromise between hostile positions already so far advanced. There is more room but perhaps less time than one might think. Compromise, however, may not be the first business. The first necessity may be to agree to disagree for the time being.

Important as may be full abolition of segregation to some Negroes, as complete preservation of separateness may be to some whites, there is a greater value, greater to everyone, at stake. That is the unity of these United States and of the people who dwell within them.

The two races, now with some 144,000,000 whites and 16,000,000 Negroes, will have to continue living side by side, in North and South alike, for time out of mind. Are they going to live in peace and friendliness or in conflict and bitterness? Not so much how the segregation issue is finally worked out as how that working out is approached is likely to form the answer.

Respected and trusted commissions might do much to persuade the leadership of both races to compromise not on principles but on pressures, and that to push temporary advantages and win local skirmishes could lose for each the goals it seeks.

Those goals are no longer "white supremacy" in the sense some whites have meant nor racial "integration" as, no doubt, some Negroes have defined it. The goal for all is a modus vivendi in which races and individuals are neither kept apart nor forced together by law — in which voluntary association and disassociation both are given the freest play.

Judge Promises To Uphold Segregation

Supreme Court Ruling Assailed By Alabaman

Jasper, Ala., March 28 (AP) — An Alabama Supreme Court justice today pledged to uphold segregation and accused the United States Supreme Court of "twisting the Federal Constitution so as to arrive at its famous integration decision."

Justice James J. Mayfield, a candidate for re-election, said in a speech to a civic club here that he "will not stand by and see the United States Supreme Court abolish our Southern way of life."

The U. S. Supreme Court has ordered integration in the nation's public schools. Mayfield declared he has taken an oath to uphold the State Constitution, which forbids mixed schools.

Had Promised To Quit

"I have sworn to uphold the Constitution of the sovereign state of Alabama, and when I can no longer carry forth my oath of office to maintain segregation in Alabam, I shall resign," he said.

Mayfield said he had promised to withdraw from politics when he took office, but declared he was "forced back into the political areana by political opposition."

He is opposed in the May 1 primary by Senator James Coleman. Although he mentioned no names, Mayfield yesterday accused Coleman of using the White Citizens Councils of central Alabama "as a political forum."

Mayfield said:

"There is no good legal constitutional mind in the South that believes that the U. S. Supreme Court had the power to twist the Federal Constitution so as to arrive at its infamous integration decision. This is judicial legislation and usurpation of the police powers of the Southern States at its very worst.

Called 'Judicial Legislation'

"I am unalterably opposed to this type of judicial legislation and will not stand by and see the U. S. Supreme Court abolish our Southern way of life."

Mayfield reminded his listeners that Alabama has adopted a nullification resolution, and added, "When we are joined by other Southern states we will be able to assert sufficient power within the Federal Government to effect some form of relief. . . .

"As one Southern justice of a Southern supreme court, I do not feel myself bound by, nor will I be bound by, a decision that I know is morally and intellectually dishonest and based on no legal precedent or legal authority."

Two Editors Clash Over Negro Reporter

NEW YORK, March 16 (AP) — The editor of the New York Post refused today to replace a Negro reporter for a suggested series on racial discrimination in New York.

Editor James A. Wechsler said he assumed Editor-in-Chief Grover C. Hall Jr., of the Montgomery (Ala.) Advertiser was unwilling to work with Post reporter Ted Poston because the latter is a Negro.

"But I am sure you would not expect me to abide by Montgomery's segregation system in handing out assignments on the Post," Wechsler added.

Wechsler addressed Hall in a Post editorial.

Hall originally proposed that Post columnist Murray Kempton be assigned to him. Hall suggested racial intolerance was by no means confined to the South.

Wechsler replied that both he and Kempton considered Poston more qualified for such a survey.

Hall said that if Kempton wasn't available he would like to have Wechsler himself work with him.

Wechsler replied in today's Post:

"To the best of my recollection we have never met; I must therefore conclude that the only thing that qualifies me as a satisfactory substitute for Poston is that I am not a Negro.

House-Approved Resolution Runs Into Snag In Senate

A House-approved resolution commending The Montgomery Advertiser for its current editorial campaign showing that racial strife is prevalent in the North as well as the South hit a snag in the Senate late yesterday when a Folsom leader sought to kill the proposal by sending it to the Rules Committee.

Sen. E. L. Roberts of Etowah, one of Gov. Folsom's leaders in the upper housee, objected to the immediate consideration of the resolution, thus sending it to the administration - dominated Rules Committee.

Several other Folsom senators were standing by and prepared to object, had not Roberts filed his protest.

MATHISON

ROBERTS

The joint resolution whipped through the House by a vote of 82-3, despite opposition from several Folsom supporters. All three opposition votes came from administration lawmakers — Speaker Rankin Rite of Marion and Reps. Bryce C. Davis of Cullman and Emmett Oden of Franklin.

Rep. G. B. Mathison of Henry County introduced the resolution, commenting that he had been prompted to do so "by the wide favorable reaction shown by the people of my county for The Advertiser's editorials."

Rep. Davis, a long-time foe of Alabama newspapers, immediately took the floor in opposition. While insisting he did not object to the resolution, he noted that The Advertiser was not read in his part of the state, adding "we do not really know what sort of job they are doing."

Reps. McDowell Lee of Barbour and Walter Emmett Perry of Jefferson immediately took to the floor in behalf of the resolution.

Lee, charging that Davis had a "personal reason" for opposing the bill, told the House "just because the gentleman from Cullman hasn't read The Advertiser should have no bearing on whether we give credit where credit is due."

"Mr. Grover C. Hall Jr., the editor, has done a very excellent job in showing people of Alabama and the nation that the race issue is a national problem, not just a southern problem," Lee declared.

Hall's remarks about segregation in explaining his vote, commented to the House:

"I think it's fine when the press of the nation falls out with each other."

The resolution sponsored by Mathison urged other Alabama newspapers "to join in The Advertiser campaign to present the Negro in his true light — as an American dilemma — in the hope that the northern press will assume its obligation to present the racial problem in its proper perspective."

The resolution declared further that the approach followed by The Advertiser would bring "greater understanding of the problem" and that it would result in "the repudiation of agitators and troublemakers in our society and the cessation of the outside attacks on the southern way of life."

Moments after the resolution was approved, Speaker Perry said that the northern press will as-

Some Specific Questions About The Races Are Directed Toward Whites

May I use the freedom of the press to ask some people a question or two?

Why is it that you can let our colored women come into your house and cook and care for your children? Don't you think that's mixing? Why is it that you let our colored boys go overseas to fight for you and be killed and your sons be there to, side by side? You go in the same stores, walk the same streets and there are the same taxes on the colored person's dollar as on yours.

The majority of the colored people don't want to marry out of their race. We are proud of our race. That is the reason why we fight to free it. We just want to have the same opportunity and privilege as you have. It's a shame to say this but it's true—there are dogs treated better than we are.

Why don't you put colored police on the force so that we can get our bad and filthy areas cleaned up? Your police don't care what our people do as long as it doesn't affect your race.

Dual System Of Schools Is Needed

The recent case of violence at the University appears to me to be the result of mounting resentment against attempts by federal courts to destroy long-established racial customs in the South and to specific actions by Arthurine Lucy and her attorney.

This case points to the lack of wisdom in attempting to change local customs by court edict. It appears that a wiser procedure would have been a stricter enforcement of the "separate but equal" principle in handling all problems regarding facilities and opportunities for Negroes in the South. However, the federal courts have chosen to pursue a different course, and therefore must assume responsibility for the consequences of their rulings.

As an alumnus of the University, I regret that violence occurred on the campus. I especially deplore the actions against Dr. and Mrs. Carmichael. However, I see nothing wrong with public demonstrations of feeling, no matter how strong they may be. Had there been no demonstrations during colonial days, we probably would have still been under British rule. To this extent, I support Leonard Wilson in his activity on the campus. I think the great majority of the people in Alabama agree with his sentiments in that the University should remain all-white.

Our dual education system in Alabama should be retained. Any existing deficiencies should be corrected, but the system should not be destroyed; at least not for a long time to come.

The Hour Is Late, But There Is Yet Time

EDITOR, THE ADVERTISER — Your editorial Feb. 7 on the "University Tumult" was good. It is very true, as you said in the concluding parpgraph: "The rash intrusion of the federal government into Alabama affairs has to be resisted . . . it is an unhappy thing that so much of our energies have to be diverted from the more wholesome concerns of the flowering South."

The time has come when we must be not only calm but sensible about this whole business. There is resentment and hatred but there is still a great reservoir of good will among the white people and the Negroes throughout the South. The trouble has been caused by outside influences—meddlers from the fanatical organizations which thrive and make their promoters rich by stirring up class and race hatreds.

This bus boycott is a perfect example of how scheming leaders find it profitable to prey on the ignorance of thousands of unsuspecting people. It is so ridiculous that you begin to wonder how anybody could fall for it. The bus owners—the National City Lines—are big operators in cities throughout America and Canada. The boycott in Montgomery will not break them. They operate with a franchise under state and city laws.

The people who get hurt are the hundreds and hundreds of Negro employes in stores, homes, and industry who are being gouged in public meetings and in taxi fares (some of these owned by the very people who are keeping the boycott going). They listen to so-called leaders who ride in big new cars and whose sole interest is publicity and profit for themselves.

We do not need any more meetings or committees. Joe Azbell wrote a very good article in Monday's paper asking for the races to select a committee made up of "true representatives." Would a mass meeting select them or would a group who considered themselves "true representatives" select another group of the same type "true representatives?" We have had enough committees and too many meetings. The facts are crystal clear. Some want the boycott to go on for their own profit. It is even possible that to keep the thing going sympathizers may stage a mock bombing, or burn a fiery cross, etc. People will find out the truth sooner or later, and how such a thing cannot win.

No doubt the situation will get serious unless there is enough good will and common sense to return to our normal way of living. White people still like Negroes and vice versa and they will get along fine if they shut the mouths of the agitators and quit furnishing money for them to continue their rackets. We live together here in the South. We have a lot in common. It is time to be sensible before it is too late. There are good Negroes who like white people and there are white people who down in their hearts hold sincere friendship for their Negro acquaintances.

The NAACP has been bad medicine for the best interest of the Negro in the South. Through every possible channel they have carried on a campaign of propaganda against the South and its people and its customs. If it ever had any virtue it lost it by its vicious tactics. It created more bitterness and hatred in the hearts of Negroes than was ever engendered by the Civil War. The more intelligent and reasonable Negroes are now learning that if these pressures continue from the NAACP, the Negro in the South will be a stranger in a strange land—separated by these fanatical extremists—and they will find it increasingly difficult to find employment or to engage in profitable business simply because they have destroyed the foundations of good will and mutual helpfulness. It is very late, but not even now too late, for the Negro leaders to profit by what they must be learning for the good of their race.

The Citizens Councils have been organized to combat the vicious and unreasonable tactics of the NAACP and other race baiters. I am not a member and never attended a meeting, but it seems to be growing throughout every Southern state. It can be a good influence for law and order while waging an aggressive fight against every effort to force integration on the South. Fortunately it seems to be in the hands of responsible and representative citizens. It must not be spoiled by hot-heads or trouble makers. All efforts that are effective have to take organized form. Nothing can be done without organization. There will be criticisms and accusations, but the course is clear: preserve our racial customs.

¶ Demand of public officials in every elective office a clear statement of their position.

¶ Give legal support to every individual, local, and state government in resisting all efforts toward integration.

¶ Discourage violence or any type of mob activity.

¶ Discourage the defeatist attitude of those who say: "Well, it's coming eventually." It need not, and it will not if the races have the sense and the courage to preserve what the Creator made them.

Just now something can be done. Start rebuilding good will, ride your buses, and quit giving money to agitators who are getting rich through your inconvenience.

Advertiser

Montgomery, Ala.

Dear Mr. Hall:

When I invited you to work with Ted Poston on the series you had proposed on race discrimination in New York. I did so because in my judgment he was best qualified by background and experience to get the full story. Poston has been covering race relations in this city for more than 20 years and if Murray Kempton or I or anyone else were to prepare a series of this sort, he would be the first man to interview. As I wrote you, Kempton entirely concurs with my estimate of Poston.

Ref. 3-17-56

I can only assume that your reply ignores my proposal that you work with Poston (and reiterates your desire to collaborate with Kempton) simply because Poston happens to be a Negro. That is your privilege. But I am sure you would not expect me to abide by Montgomery's segregation system in handing out assignments on The Post.

As a newspaperman I had also hoped you would realize that in offering Poston's services I did so in all good faith; the fact that he has lived as a Negro in this city for most of his adult life would surely make him more rather than less sensitive to the discriminations that survive here. In short, I was proposing an arrangement under which you would obtain maximum knowledge and perspective about the New York story. At the same time I made it clear that all the facilities of The Post would be at your disposal; I am sure Kempton and I and everyone else here would have done whatever we could to supplement Poston's effort to make your inquiry a fruitful one.

You say that you want to do this series with Kempton because of your "prior plans and personal relationship" with him. Yet you also say that, if he is unavailable, you would be willing to undertake the project with me. To the best of my recollection we have never met; I must therefore conclude that the only thing that qualifies me as a satisfactory substitute for Poston is that I am not a Negro.

I-1-A

I am sure you will realize on reflection that for me to replace Poston under these circumstances would be an affront to one of my most valued associates. It seems to me an unhappy consequence of the segregation position that a Southern newspaperman would prefer to get an inadequate story with the help of someone like myself rather than work with a Negro reporter who could most effectively help him.

It seems to me equally sad that you apparently cannot consider the lively prospect of publishing Poston's report side by side with yours in The Montgomery Advertiser—as I had offered to do in The Post.

I fear the world will quickly weary of our published communications; let me simply express the hope that you will reconsider your decision and come up to New York to start working with Poston on Monday.

In any case we are, of course, proceeding with our series.

To Mr. Wechsler (Finis)

MR. JAMES A. WECHSLER
Editor
The New York Post
New York, N.Y.

Dear Mr. Wechsler:

Thank you for your March 15 telegram bearing on my proposal to equalize press coverage of race disharmony between New York and Alabama. I am, of course, running your statement in full in the Saturday edition of The Montgomery Advertiser.

I had originally proposed that I handcuff myself to your star columnist, Murray Kempton, for a week in New York as he rooted out the story of New York's racial discrimination. Kempton told me he had planned for sometime to do such a New York series, that he would be delighted to bird dog the story for me, and also that he was going to render the series regardless of whether I came to New York.

I made ready to take plane this weekend, not as an act of sniveling or frivoling, but to play a part in surrendering the South's corner on the production of news of race strife. If the story of race strife is national, then the American press has a duty to nationalize it.

Kempton assured me the story grew on trees in New York. A Nov. 8 editorial in The New York Times uncorked the phrase, "the explosive issue of segregation in New York's own schools."

Your Mayor Robert Wagner followed along with the statement:

"I have been increasingly concerned with the realistic situation of factual segregation in our elementary and high schools."

Plainly the story was there, informing the nation of the sorrowful but evident fact that the Negro encounters rejection wherever he migrates in significant numbers. I say compassionately, as my father wrote years ago in The Advertiser, it is a hard lot in life to be born a Negro.

Anyhow, my first proposal and your acceptance did not mesh. My lively, antic friend Kempton has gone silent and his ancient project is sunk without trace. Next, since you are an editor and I am an editor, I proposed a parley-at-the-summit collaboration with you. Again, you rejected my proposal.

Your alternate proposal—my reliance upon the assistance of the well known Negro reporter, Ted Poston—is obviously an inadequate arrangement for obtaining this particular story.

By the way, I have lately printed some nettling things about the news handling of race strife in Chicago (where a hundred policemen are on duty today to guard 24 Negro families at Trumbull Park) and Detroit. The response was a phone call from that austere Roman, John S. Knight, who publishes in both these cities. He said that he was directing his papers to give me anything I asked should I wish to visit either city. He was as good or better than his word, for almost instantly I had a challenging but hearty invitation from Basil Walters, who bosses Knight's Chicago Daily News, to come and get it, free style.

Finally, Mr. Wechsler, even though Kempton is a fugitive from me and his own project, I have the hope that our exchange of notes may have made some Southern editors and publishers wonder if the time hasn't come to rise from their inert hams and commence staffing Northern race strife to give the American people perspective on what Adlai Stevenson calls "an American, not a Southern, dilemma."

Give my regards to Broadway.

Yours faithfully,

NEW YORK—All the agencies here controlling Negro acts and shows and many of the bigger white bookers are planning to bypass the embittered Montgomery, Ala., because of the strong boycott of the city's transportation system due to gross discrimination.

Both those who control white and colored talent feel that the success of any show is now in great danger as the location of the best place in town to present shows makes transportation a vital factor, thus more than half of a show's potential audience is in danger of being lost.

Keeping shows out of this city will have a dire effect on all types of business and cut off one of the more lucrative forms of revenue. One of the bigger shows have been reported to have failed at the box-office. Everybody Is In Step But Folsom

Advertiser p.2-B

EDITOR, THE ADVERTISER—It seems that Jim Folsom now has a sudden urge to talk to the people. His frantic efforts in recent days to get in step with the people on segregation are amusing. Just a short time ago he was entertaining the New York Negro congressman. Just a very short while ago he was vetoing segregation bills of a local nature in Alabama. Just a few days ago he was referring to the interposition resolution passed by the legislature as "hogwash." Just a few short weeks ago he failed to sign the school placement bill. Was he thinking about the people then?

Adv. 4-1-56

Now, he wants to be Democratic National Committeeman so that he can invite "Soapy" Williams, South-hating governor of Michigan, to speak in Alabama again.

Montgomery

Now, he wants the people of Alabama to elect his slate of candidates to the judiciary so that he can have control of the courts in Alabama.

Now, he wants a constitutional convention under the guise of segregation so that he can change things to suit himself. (and who can tell what this would finally be?) and have control of the lives of our people.

Now, that he wants to set himself up as the dictator in Alabama, he feels a sudden urge to talk to the people.

The people will hear a lot of double talk, but they won't be told what the real motives of Jim Folsom are. I think, however, that the people have seen enough of this small town Caesar. They will not support his "Y'all come, Miss Lucy" ticket this time.

Editor, The Advertiser:

I voted for Folsom for governor. I attended his meeting here at the Coliseum during the campaign. I put a contribution in the suds bucket as it was passed around at Dothan.

However, I must now admit it seems that he is proving himself to be utterly incompetent from every standpoint to serve this state.

In fact, he has shown himself to be a great detriment to our state morally, financially, racially and politically. Certainly, the legislature should give careful consideration to any plan which will extricate the people from this most unfortunate predicament in which we find ourselves.

There is no discrimination against either the Negro or the white person.

Editor, The Advertiser:

Your recent valuable and exceptionally clever work in furthering the cause of segregation, or I should say, prolonged segregation, should entitle The Advertiser to a vote of thanks and endear you to the hearts of all Southern members of the Citizens Councils.

Your contributions in presenting the facts on this subject and your brilliant and interesting manifesto in proving that segregation is not sectional but is a national problem should at once afford you free membership to all councils in the South.

You and the Advertiser have done more constructive work in the newspaper field than any other paper that I know of concerning this momentous issue, in fact it is quite remarkable that from a position of highly adverse criticism often heaped upon you and The Advertiser, that today the situation is reversed and you are praised and held in honor and esteem.

The Point Is Proven

Editor, The Advertiser:

I have long subscribed to the belief that, despite the hostile publicity given our sentiments and "dealings" with colored people by northern publications and magazines like Look, Life, Time, etc., mere geographical location does not control people's centiments on racial discrimination. But thanks to you, Sir, that fact is being aired, as it should be.

Thanks From The Hub Cap Trap

EDITOR, THE ADVERTISER—The roar which you heard, from down Normandale way was one of approval of your editorial, "Floyd School, An Island In The Mud."

3-31-56

Those of us who own property contiguous or near to "Floyd" have but two states of mind—gloomy, from living behind doors and windows sealed against the dust, and wrathful, from watching young hopefuls trudge along muddy, pock-marked streets en route to erudition.

Your editorial has given us a third state—hopeful. Hopeful that the powers that be will help us make this corner of Montgomery actually as attractive as it promised to be.

There is one significant feature of our particular unpaved street which I think bears mentioning. We have a collection of hubcaps bounced off of passing cars—if they are uncalled for within 30 days we shall put them out for the trashman.

Also we residents along Le Bron Road (eastern boundary of school grounds) have twice paid a few dollars to have our street oiled in an attempt to quell the dust. But, the "life" of this surfacing—now that we've relieved the flow on Norman Bridge—is so short as to make paving seem cheap at any price. I for one am ready to be permanently "enhanced" rather than skin deep only at $3 per oil-job.

You are personally invited to use my chunk of pavement at any time you wish. My carpool joins me in my thanks to you. R. J. PARTRIDGE.

One Complaint Against The South

Editor, The Advertiser:

You are absolutely right in saying the press plays down the racial picture as it is here in the North. The one newspaper that gives full coverage and descriptions is The Evening Bulletin.

If all the people in Philadelphia were truthfully polled there would probably be more people in favor of segregation than in the entire state of Alabama.

When a Negro moves into an all-white neighborhood there is immediately an exodus of whites away from this area into a community that is all-white or else they move into the suburbs of this city. And Mayor Clark has accused the suburbanites of discrimination by not accepting the Negro into their communities. How long this can continue is a question. They cannot run forever nor can they continue to build new communities.

The white man has become a shell of a man through the political action of the NAACP and the cheap political bosses. He does not voice a protest. Yet every so often you hear in a whisper a hope that some one will organize a White Citizens Council such as you have in the South.

The fact that the Negro represents only 20% of the population he is accused of committing 70% of all major crimes.

The Negro gangs that roam the streets of Philadelphia have open warfare with knives, guns, every known weapon. It is so widespread it is no secret. And each community has its own gang that wages war with the next gang in another community.

The white children pay tribute to these gangs for protection and in many instances have been severely beaten.

The most heinous of all crimes has been the very, very many attacks upon the women of Philadelphia, young and old, in their homes, on the street and in the subway. It got so severe they placed police at all possible places to protect these poor unsuspecting women. The newspapers called them the Jungle Patrol.

These hypocrites who yell and shout to the rooftops about desegregation find it more convenient and more safe to live in all white communities.

This so-called minority with the shrill voice that reaches the political factions is the one who criticizes the South but never is found to be living in the colored neighborhoods. But they reach the ears of the political factions and drown out the feeble pleas of those who are being deprived of a voice in how they live or with whom.

The only complaint we ever heard of the South was that they are driving too many Negroes North.

The Negro struts around like a peacock. He has no respect for the white man's law. He holds the white man in contempt. He has nothing to fear for he believes he has the politician by the throat as evidenced by the actions of those who have been cowed into submission by these people.

Yes, you have more supporters here in the North than you realize. What they may be worth in courage and wisdom such as you display in the South is another question.

The Negro Will Be Duped Again

EDITOR, THE ADVERTISER—40 acres and a mule. This slogan of the carpetbaggers was extremely rife from 1865 until 1870. The intent was to qualify and vote the Negro. It succeeded in making the Republican Party. For 20 years the South struggled with the problem, lifting the Negro race to substantial citizenship. But the Negro race still remained in the Republican Party in the whole Southern region.

The Democratic Party when it came into power decided to make a stab at capturing the Negro vote, and succeeded with the desegregation of the Army and Navy, then followed it up with the FEPC, and climaxed it with the famous "opinion" of a Democratic Supreme Court. The poor Negro will be duped again, as in the carpetbag days.

Time For Realism

Editor, The Advertiser:

I thoroughly enjoyed your letter to Mr. Wechsler as reported in U.S. News & World Report. The point is well put, and for once, because I don't believe they can sidestep this kind of approach, the purpose may be achieved.

Let's not forget the significance of the two articles quoted from the Minneapolis and Chicago newspapers. If desegregation were achieved in the South, this sort of intimidation would be practiced on a much more massive scale in our schools, and a much more hate-compelling scale in our housing projects. Nothing but harm can come to both races, and so let's not necessarily point to "changes that should be made in the North" but expose the real danger both North and South, and try to get some realism into the national attitude toward this unending problem.

Segregation Flourishes In Los Angeles

EDITOR, THE ADVERTISER—Since I sent you yesterday's news item on the intimidated witness here, I am enclosing today's and, also, the editorial version of The Los Angeles Times.

There is a lot of first-class hypocrisy here in our press, and public officials and the like.

The rank & file of the people feel just about as they do in my native state—Texas—that is, the race problem is not as acute as in the Deep South.

Just the same, segregation is widespread. The unions manage it. Churches manage it. Residence districts manage it—so far, except on border lines.

But to hear our public officials and press rant you would suppose this to be Boston — 1856 — when God communed with the Lowells and the Lowells spoke only to God.

Negroes take advantage of their "Barbara Frietchie" position. A friend of mine owned a first lien trust deed against one of our judges, who was a Negro. The judge paid if, as and when it pleased him, which was not often. Whenever my friend pressed for his money he was met with, "Oh, you're race conscious, aren't you." The friend, an ex-Coloradoan, finally sold the note in disgust, at a discount, because of the arrears.

I've always got a laugh out of the outcome. The man who bought belonged to another minority and promptly pressed for his legal rights, getting them.

Extension Of Remarks

Editor, The Advertiser:

Congratulations to City Editor Joe Azbell for catching so much of the drift of the stimulating and wide-ranging conservation in your office.

No offence meant to him (I talk very fast and he was only meant to take "rough notes" anyway) but I would like to re-clothe in its context one naked statement attributed to me. When I talked about it sometimes being quite a shock for English people when they first see a colored man (not "Negro," a term used in England only about America's colored citizens) I was referring specifically and exclusively to rather poorly educated English people of low economic status.

Actually, according to the sociologists, working class Englishmen tend to be zenophobic—the foreign-lookingness of a newcomer is perhaps the key, rather than the color of his skin (plus the usual economic fear of possible sources of cheap labor). As soon as you go up the educational scale in England you find all institutional pressures favoring complete non-discrimination.

All that London's midget-size West Indian problem probably proves is that when a strange group is moving into a city, public and private social service agencies ought to get busy early. The South's problem, of course, is something else again. I should like to reserve my all-too hastily garnered impressions on that until I can arrange them in some sort of readable shape for the readers of The Economist. But I can't leave Montgomery without thanking everyone whose time I have taken up, and especialy you, sir, for your courtesy to one member of the "Bohemian Brigade."

Times Have Changed

Editor, The Advertiser:

Having lived in Montgomery for years, I am naturally interested in anything that concerns what I call my home town.

It's difficult for me to realize this bad publicity is taking place in the Cradle of the Confederacy, which our forefathers fought so hard to preserve. One would hardly believe the state had a governor, since he is doing nothing. Why does Montgomery ignore these outsiders who know nothing about the South? If this attitude had existed during Reconstruction days there would not have been a South.

The situation, to say the least, is very distressing and I sincerely hope it will soon be settled. Since members of my family life there, I'd like my name withheld.

Case Dismissed

Editor, The Advertiser:

Gov. Folsom promised to give the old people a $50 a month pension without new taxes. Instead of giving us a $50 pension, he is making us pay more taxes, and we are still not getting any more than before the new taxes were placed on us. He also promised an efficient administration. The people believed him.

Why should the people of Alabama trust him again when he says to give him a constitutional convention and he will solve the segregation question in Alabama. If he is for segregation of the races in Alabama, why did he fight the "freedom of choice" amendment in the legislature, which will give us segregation in our public schools, and why did he refuse to sign the school "Placement" bill and the interposition resolution?

I pray that the people of Alabama will not be hoodwinked into letting him have a constitutional convention, which could do away with segregation of the races in Alabama, and also let him succeed himself as governor.

Speaking Of The Law

EDITOR, THE ADVERTISER—We are hearing a great deal since the bus boycott began about "this being the law." And that "it must be enforced." And that the "bus lines must obey the law," that "they have no choice but to obey the laws."

Sat. 12-31-55

As these statements have continued to be issued I have found myself becoming "law" conscious. And it seems that I have not been alone in this for a friend of mine called me aside and spoke to me along the same lines and whispered the thought that if we were going to go by the laws of the state and the municipalities there were some laws on the statutes of Alabama that should be called to the attention of the constituted authorities and the good and law-abiding citizens of our city and state. I thereupon took it upon myself to make inquiry of the matter and I found much that needs to be called to the attention of those who are zealous for the proper enforcement of our laws.

P.A.P.

Among the laws I first came upon were the Sunday Blue Laws. At first glance the Alabama Sunday laws (Code of Alabama of 1940, as amended, Title 14, Section 420 and 421) appear to be somewhat confusing and the suspicious minded might even detect the influence of special interest groups in their making. However, we know that the Almighty moves in mysterious ways His wonders to perform, so the laws must be good and just and all right-minded, God-fearing people should insist upon their strict enforcement.

Montgomery Ala.

Moreover, if read more carefully, the pattern of the laws emerges and they do not appear nearly so confusing as at first glance. Instead of setting out these laws in full, I have broken them down into separate categories and the activities with which they deal, classifying them as non-corrupting, wholly corrupting and quasi-corrupting. The categories may not be wholly complete, as every conceivable activity cannot possibly be set forth in a statute, but I think the list will be useful as a source of ready reference to you and the Montgomery Ministerial Association, and other good citizens.

NON-CORRUPTING SPORTS AND PLEASURES

1. Fishing.
2. Dominoes, checkers and mahjong.
3. Basketball, hockey, hide and seek, and water skiing.
4. Automobile and motorcycle races.

WHOLLY CORRUPTING SPORTS AND PLEASURES

1. Gaming.
2. Shooting and hunting.
3. Horse racing.
4. Dog racing.
5. People racing.
6. Bridge, poker and old maid.
7. Boxing and wrestling. (This is dealt with under another provisions of the Code, Title 55, Section 346).

QUASI CORRUPTING SPORTS AND PLEASURES

1. Baseball. This sport is comparatively pure. It corrupts only in cities of 15,000 to 60,000 population and there only if an ordinance is adopted declaring it corrupting.

2. Football. Football corrupts everywhere but in cities of 60,000 population or over. It does not corrupt in cities of 60,000 or over unless declared corrupting by ordinance.

3. Tennis and golf. These sports appear to be absolutely corrupting outside of the limits of municipalities. They corrupt in cities of 15,000 population and over only if they are declared to be corrupting by municipal ordinance.

4. Movies. Movies corrupt absolutely outside of the limits of municipal corporations. In cities of 15,000 and up, they corrupt only if declared corrupting by local ordinance.

5. Vaudeville. Vaudeville corrupts absolutely outside of the corporate limits of municipalities and in cities of less than 60,000 population. It does not corrupt in cities of 60,000 and over unless declared corrupting by ordinance.

BLUE LAWS RE: BUSINESS ACTIVITIES

The law concerning business activities is not quite so clear as that dealing with sports and entertainment, but I will try to summarize the provisions as best I can:

1. It is unlawful to compel any child, apprentice or servant to perform any labor on Sunday "except the customary duties of daily necessity or comfort, or works of charity." Under this provision, I suppose we could make our children chop wood for the fireplace and even cook breakfast, but I am not sure whether we could make them shine our shoes or not, the Supreme Court not having yet spoken on the subject. The use of the word "charity" by itself leaves some uncertainty.

2. There seems to be no question but that the work of railroads, public utilities, etc., can go on as usual and so can the work of any manufacturing establishment which is required to be keep in constant operation.

3. Gasoline, motor fuels and motor oils can be sold, but the sale of tires and anti-freeze does not appear to be within the exceptions granted.

4. Newspapers can be sold but I find no provision which would allow them to be printed or written.

5. Drugstores can operate as usual and open stores may be kept by florist shops, fruit stands, ice cream shops and parlors, lunch stands or restaurants, delicatessens or plants engaged in the manufacture or sale of ice, provided such business establishments are not operated in conjunction with some other kind of business which is prohibited. So apparently we can buy salami or bologna on Sunday but not roast beef or pork chops. It is clear that grocery stores cannot sell apples, oranges or peas but presumably these products become kosher if sold by delicatessen or fruit stands. A man can buy his favorite blonde a corsage on Sunday but there is not much he can do about getting her a diamond ring, which I suppose is all to the good.

It is rather interesting to note the special consideration given to motorcycle and automobile racing, which can be carried on anywhere at any time unless prohibited by municipal ordinance. This would seem to be a rather illogical exception until we remember Elijah went to Heaven in a fiery chariot, so it should be all right for an automobile racer to go the same way.

Respectfully submitted,

AUBREY WILLIAMS.

Bus Seating

Systems In 6 Other Southern Cities Differ From Our's, A Random Check Reveals

Sat. 12-31-55

By Tom Johnson

BECAUSE of an unyielding difference of opinion on what constitutes a fair and legal seating arrangement when black and white occupy the same buses, Montgomery wrangles today with an unaccustomed racial headache.

P.A.P.

For nearly a month, all but a handful of Negro commuters have refused to ride the buses of Montgomery City Lines because of what they claim is an unfair and humiliating seating arrangement. They demand a substantial change as the price for riding again.

As put by the Rev. M. L. King, the apparent spokesman for the protesting Negroes, the new arrangement must contain no reserved sections for either race on buses. Instead, he proposes that Negroes seat from the rear and whites from the front, with no reassignment of seats once the bus is filled by either race. "First come, first served," it has come to be called.

Montgomery

That means, he says, that if the Negroes completely fill the bus from rear to front, no one must be forced to give up his seat to a boarding white passenger, regardless of where he sits. The opposite is true when the bus is fully occupied by white passengers.

Ala

Attorneys for the bus company, reinforced by city legal opinion, contend such an arrangement is impossible under the existing law requiring separate and equal facilities. If a white person is forced to stand on a bus whose seats are occupied by Negroes, then obviously, they say, the white passenger does not enjoy equal facilities.

To find out whether the prevailing Montgomery seating system is usual or unique, The Advertiser called the bus companies in a half-dozen Southern cities—Baton Rouge, Macon, Nashville, Mobile, Birmingham, and Huntsville. These cities were selected at random.

Since the essence of the problem here seems to be over reserved sections, that was the question asked all of the bus officials. All but two—Baton Rouge and Birmingham—said the seating arrangements were "first come, first served." No reservations.

No Trouble

HOWEVER, in Huntsville, Manager Cecil Mitchell said the drivers "try to reserve" one or two seats for both races when the buses are crowded with one race. At times, white passengers take seats to the rear of Negroes on crowded buses when a seat suddenly becomes vacant. There has been no trouble he reported.

From Macon, Nashville and Mobile came identical reports and these definitions of local laws:

¶ Nashville: State law requires seating of whites from front and Negroes from rear. "Wherever they meet—that's it."

¶ Mobile: Thirty-six seats are assigned on first come, first served basis. "The first 36 who get on the bus get the seats." Negroes seat from the rear.

Birmingham buses contain a movable placard that is placed wherever the driver thinks it is needed. If he anticipates the busload will be predominantly Negro, he places the card well forward in the bus. If white, the card is placed to the rear.

Only in Baton Rouge are there fixed reserved sections, and it is a modification of traditional Jim Crow, said Manager Flynn Cauthen, formerly of Montgomery.

There, the two "longitudinal seats" that face the aisle behind the driver are designated for whites. The long seat across the rear is occupied by Negroes only. The rest of the bus is seated on a first come basis by the usual rear to front and front to rear pattern.

The Baton Rouge Solution

PRIOR to 1953, Baton Rouge's ordinance regulating segregation on buses was very similar to Montgomery's, said Cauthen. There was even a boycott, although shorter and not exactly for the same reasons.

Early in 1953, Cauthen said a "delegation from the NAACP" persuaded the seven-man City Council to abandon the Jim Crow plan and substitute one that involved no reserved seats.

For about two and one-half months, that was the plan used, until striking bus workers protested and engineered still another change—one that produced the present arrangement.

During the strike, Cauthen said the Negroes organized a boycott and, when the drivers returned to work, they stayed away—altogether for five days.

It was then that the Baton Rouge council, with the reluctant cooperation of the Negro committee, agreed to the reservation of the immediate front and rear seats.

There has been no further trouble, says Cauthen. Everybody knows the law and they all obey it.

Purely Economical

CAUTHEN expressed the greatest "sympathy" for the Montgomery City Lines, for which he worked several years. He sees it as an innocent party caught between the law on one hand, the opponents of the law on the other. He recalls his own difficulties when he grappled with a similar dilemma:

"Our problem was purely economical. We didn't enter into the sociological angle of it. We and transit companies throughout the country are suffering from lack of passengers. We took the position that we wanted the seats occupied by fare-paying passengers, regardless of color."

No Plastic Carpetbaggers

EDITOR, THE ADVERTISER — Your news account of "Boycott Experts From North" published in the March 9 issue calls for a frank rejoinder.

We are definitely not experts about Southern race relations on the protest of the Negro community of Montgomery against the severe segregation on the buses. We three clergymen came to Alabama to witness first-hand the situation and left wishing only that we could have stayed longer. We claim no "complete knowledge" about anything but tried in a short time to interview leaders in Montgomery representing several kinds of opinion. As a matter of fact, we came to the offices of The Advertiser not to be interviewed but to ascertain the views of the editor.

Above all, we do not want to appear to "hem or haw" about racism in our own northern communities. Racism is a national problem in America today and us Northerners can hardly come to Alabama with clean hands or consciences in this regard. However, just because we practice racial discrimination in the North makes such practices in the South no less immoral or irreligious. Likewise, our own Northern churches are basically white, if not completely so, and we realize that this, too, is a demonic judgment on our religion.

Montgomery, Ala.

No, we did not come to Alabama as modern William Lloyd Garrisons to start Civil War II or as plastic carpetbaggers to tell the South what to do. This is a national problem which demands calmness and charity, but it must be solved with urgency and with no vindictiveness on either side.

We would not be candid, however, if we did not state that all three of us were terribly impressed with the remarkable restraint, the courageous spirit, and wise leadership of Montgomery's Negro community. If this bus protest continues in a non-violent, Gandhian tenor, it might become one of the most important social movements of our time.

Tolerance Is Not Equality

Editor, The Advertiser:

There is something the Negroes should understand and which they evidently don't. I have lived in about half of the states, North, East, South and West, my husband being in the service. I have found in no state I lived where the Negro had equality with the white person.

It is true they attend the same schools, they ride the same public conveyances, but the "equality" ends there. They live in segregated sections of town, they do not patronize the same clubs, except in some cases a municipal golf course or something of that kind. They do not eat in the same restaurants. They are tolerated but I think I can say, at least it has been my observation, that they are not liked. They are nowhere in numbers as in the South, and the worst race riots in history are in the North.

They are in for a sad disillusionment if they think by going North, or to any "unsegregated" state, they can be on a level with white people for this is not the case. Some of them should go and find out and return to tell others who seem to think of the North as a land flowing with milk and honey for the colored. Why do other sections of the country have such a hypocritical attitude? They know they do not accept the Negro as an equal. Every little incident unfavorable to a Negro in the South is played up by the agitators.

Yesterday's paper carried a news item of four Negro youths jumping on a white boy—for no reason, sending him to the hospital. The same article tells of two teen-age Negro girls jumping on two white girls—for no reason. This in New York. Imagine the hulla-baloo that would have been made of this if the situation had been reversed—in the South. So far I have heard no comment from any source on that bit of news, certainly not from the North.

In Defense Of Leonard Wilson

EDITOR, THE ADVERTISER—Courage has always called for applause even among primitive and warlike peoples. The courage of a defeated foe was often praised.

Surely the red badge of courage should go to Leonard Wilson, University of Alabama student who was expelled today. For no matter how he may have erred in his judgment, no matter if—in excitement—he made statements, some of which he may regret, yet there can be no criticism of his standing by his convictions.

Leonard Wilson has been summarily punished. It is possible that he will not be permitted to complete his formal education at any university which is a member of the Association of Accredited Colleges — or whatever name such organizations take. He, therefore, is left with his mother and his part-time job at Tuscaloosa where he was helping to pay his way through school. In effect, he has been an inescapable sacrifice in the struggle to maintain segregation in our schools. This does not make him a martyr and there are no indications that he wishes to be a martyr. The net result of his expulsion, however, is that the expulsion of the Lucy woman is strengthened.

This young man has been called an egotist, a publicity seeker, a defiant trouble-maker, and other names by some who, at heart, are unwilling for their peace to be disturbed, even in order to maintain our racial customs in Alabama. Others sincerely felt that his headlong opposition hurt the cause he was trying to help. The stubborn fact remains, however, that if the vigorous protest led by Wilson and others had not occurred, the University of Alabama would now have been desegregated from top to bottom. His statements have spotlighted the ideologies prevalent among some of our college professors, which many of us have privately deplored but have not had the courage to denounce.

The Board of Trustees — whom he seems not to have criticized—of course, did the only thing they could have done under the circumstances. Yet—knowing some of them—I have no doubt that they considered the suspensions and expulsions as a very, very painful, but inescapable duty.

On sober second thought many will begin to remember that his face was turned in the right direction, although his feet stumbled. He is now being severely penalized. We should now remember that to err is human; to forgive is divine.

I would be glad to hear from any who share these sentiments.

Violence In Detroit

Editor, The Advertiser:

In reference to your editorial of March 10, "Montgomery Calling Detroit," you fail to mention one act of violence so brutal as to make Hitler look like a Boy Scout.

I refer to the horrible murder of the young white doctor on the night of July 5, 1943, at 11 p.m. The doctor was pulled from his car onto a bridge and methodically and unmercifully beaten to death by a mad, howling, savage mob of Negroes. Their excuse for this useless murder — he was white. Therefore he was their enemy. The ironical twist of this story of horror is the doctor was on a mission of mercy, racing to a seriously ill child—a Negro.

Ask your friends the Detroit editors to look in their paper morgues and they will find this story on Pg. 1; ask them too, before they try to wash Alabama's dirty linens, to wash some of their own first.

Crowd boos Folsom's name at Montgomery

BY HUGH W. SPARROW
News staff writer

MONTGOMERY, Ala., March 28—Gov. James E. Folsom's name was loudly booed last night by a large audience attending a meeting arranged by the Montgomery Citizens Council to report on how various candidates stand on the segregation issue.

Council Chairman Luther Ingalls told the crowd at the outset that Gov. Folsom, along with all other candidates residing in Montgomery, had been invited to respond to a questionnaire on segregation.

CANDIDATES, in addition, were invited to appear in person to deliver brief speeches.

Gov. Folsom, he declared, did not respond to the questionnaire and "did not show the council the courtesy of replying to the invitation to speak."

The crowd booed loud and sharp at the first mention of the governor's name. Further boos followed when Ingalls declared that the governor's action was no surprise to the council "in view of his long record against segregation."

Although Sen. Lister Hill was not present, a lengthy letter from him to the council, pledging to continue his fight to maintain racial segregation in Alabama and the South, was read by Chairman Ingalls.

Last night's meeting was held in the Montgomery City Auditorium. The crowd was estimated at between 1800 and 2000.

AMONG THOSE who appeared in person were Alabama Public Service Commission President C. C. (Jack) Owen, candidate for reelection; Rep. George Grant of the Second District and Wilbur Nolen, member of the Alabama House and opposing Grant, and John Crommelin, opposing Hill for senator.

Chairman Ingalls, in formally opening the meeting, said the Montgomery council had mailed out questionnaires to 104 candidates residing in Montgomery and the Second District.

Those questionnaires invited candidates to give a "yes" or "no" answer to these questions:

"Are you for segregation?

"Are you for mixing whites and Negroes in our schools?

"Have you or will you solicit the Negro vote?

"Do you here and now deny the Negro vote?

"Do you here and now say to the Negro that you do not want his vote?

"If elected will you uphold the Constitution of the sovereign state of Alabama?

"Are you opposed to the FEPC or any similar legislation?"

FIFTY-ONE OUT of the 104 who received the quetionnaire answered it, according to Chairman Ingalls. Several who answered the questionnaires, however, were unable to attend the meeting.

Enough speakers were on hand, nevertheless, to provide more than two hours of oratory, most of it largely repetitious. Candidates in most instances enlarged on what they had said in their written questionnaire answers.

The only non-candidate speakers were Montgomery's Mayor W. A. Gayle and City Commissioner Clyde Sellers. Both became members of the Montgomery Council after negotiations to end the bus boycott collapsed last January.

Both city officials, moreover, discussed problems arising from the bus boycott.

Chairman Ingalls told the crowd that most of the candidates failing to reply to the Council's questionaire were candidates for delegate to the Democratic National Convention from the state-at-large.

Among those who did not reply, according to the chairman, were Y. G. Allen, J. E. Brantley, Lowell J. Clemens, Dan Davis, James M. Dement, Karl C. Harrison, C. C. Horton, C. H. (Tip) Jackson, J. H. (Jack) Kelly, Leslie C. King, Ethel Ledford McPherson, Neil Metcalf, William I. O'Neal, T. E. (Ed) Rayfield, John D. Self Jr., Sen. John Sparkman and Graham Wright.

SEN. HILL did not answer the Council's questionaire but he left little unsaid as to his stand on the question of segregation in the letter read by Chairman Ingalls.

Sen Hill's letter said in part:

"I am, of course, opposed to integration in Alabama and in other states and will do all in my power to maintain segregation. The statement which I signed (the manifesto signed by other Southern senators and representatives) is a restatement of the strong stand I have taken ever since becoming a member of Congress to preserve and protect our Southern customs, traditions and way of life.

"As you know, I have been one of the Southern senators who stood in solid phalanx against the so-called civil rights bills and who by our efforts have defended these measures.

"We recall that they have tried to pass the measure that would kill the right to filibuster, the anti-lynching bill, the poll tax bill and the FEPC and other bills.

"We have fought these bills time and again on the floor of the U. S. Senate. We have not permitted a single measure to pass. I send you herewith a copy of my report against the FEPC bill."

"NOT LONG AGO," declared Mayor Gayle in his address, "Montgomery was a community that was widely praised because it was a community of peaceful people. But something has happened. We feel that outside influence have done away with these good relations.

"Since the bus boycott began we have received thousands of letters from every state and from many foreign lands. For every critical letter we have received three very favorable to the white people of Montgomery."

COMMISSIONER SELLERS said in part:

"We should not request but demand that all candidates say just how they stand, and make it so they can't straddle.

"Here in Montgomery we have been having a serious problem with the bus boycott. We should rededicate ourselves to the task of maintaining segregation.

"In the recent past we have been visited by newspaper men and magazine writers who have tried to throw up a smokescreen, namely, that segregation is a problem only for the Southern people. They knew all the time it is a world problem.

"Unless we stand together 100 per cent to main segregation in our schools and churches the Negroes will take over."

COMMISSIONER SELLERS was loudly applauded when he referred to "the nine old men" on the Supreme Court who seek to change our way of life."

He charged also that visiting newspaper men and magazine writers had been unfair to Montgomery and Alabama in their comments.

CHAIRMAN INGALLS reminded the audience that the Montgomery Council "isn't endorsing any candidates."

"All we want to do is to give you what inforamtion we have and to present speakers here so that you may make up your mind.

He told of how the questionnaries and the invitation to speak had been mailed out to all candidates residing in Montgomery.

After declaring that 51 had responded, he said:

"But there is one certain man running for public office by the name of James Elisha Folsom who did not show us the courtesy of saying whether he would come here tonight and speak and he did not answer our questionnaire.

"This is the man, remember, who has fought every effort made in Alabama to maintain segregation, while other Southern governors have been pleased to cooperate in every way to protect Sotuhern traditions."

M. G. WILLIAMS JR., a candidate for delegate from the state at large, expressed regret that "we haven't a governor in Alabama who will help us in our efforts to maintain segregation."

Carl Griffin, another state at large candidate for delegate and brother of Georgia's Gov. Griffin, said he was not "20 per cent for segregation, but 100 per cent, seven days a week, 52 weeks out of the year."

NED MOORE, delegate candidate from the Second District, expressed strong support of segregation. Roy McCord, Gadsden, candidate for Democratic National Committeeman, in a letter read by Ingalls, endorsed segregation but criticized the council for questions which he said unnecessairly reflected on Negroes.

Charles W. McKay, candidate for national committeeman and chief opponent of Gov. Folsom was not present. Ingalls told the crowd that "he is the author of the interposition resolution and his answers to the questionnarie were right down the middle."

Cliff Herren, a district delegate candidatel likewise pledged all-out stand for segregation.

Circuit Solicitor Joe Kettler of Luverne, another district delegate candidate, said he had never sought Negro votes and added that if he had to do so he would not want the honor.

Owen told the crowd that during his nine years as member of the Public Service Commission he had always stood for segregation. He cited the commission's actian in ordering segregation signs restored after the ICC abolished segregated waiting rooms in bus and railroad stations.

A long number of candidates for local offices were also heard.

No Plastic Carpetbaggers

EDITOR, THE ADVERTISER — Your news account of "Boycott Experts From North" published in the March 9 issue calls for a frank rejoinder.

We are definitely not experts about Southern race relations on the protest of the Negro community of Montgomery against the severe segregation on the buses. We three clergymen came to Alabama to witness first-hand the situation and left wishing only that we could have stayed longer. We claim no "complete knowledge" about anything but tried in a short time to interview leaders in Montgomery representing several kinds of opinion. As a matter of fact, we came to the offices of The Advertiser not to be interviewed but to ascertain the views of the editor.

Above all, we do not want to appear to "hem or haw" about racism in our own northern communities. Racism is a national problem in America today and us Northerners can hardly come to Alabama with clean hands or consciences in this regard. However, just because we practice racial discrimination in the North makes such practices in the South no less immoral or irreligious. Likewise, our own Northern churches are basically white, if not completely so, and we realize that this, too, is a demonic judgment on our religion.

No, we did not come to Alabama as modern William Lloyd Garrisons to start Civil War II or as plastic carpetbaggers to tell the South what to do. This is a national problem which demands calmness and charity, but it must be solved with urgency and with no vindictiveness on either side.

We would not be candid, however, if we did not state that all three of us were terribly impressed with the remarkable restraint, the courageous spirit, and wise leadership of Montgomery's Negro community. If this bus protest continues in a non-violent, Gandhian tenor, it might become one of the most important social movements of our time.

There is something the Negroes should except in some cases a municipal golf course or something of that kind. They understand and which they evidently do not eat in the same restaurants. They are tolerated but I think I can say, at least it has been my observation, that they are not liked. They are nowhere in numbers as in the South, and the worst race riots in history are in the North.

They are in for a sad disillusionment if they think by going North, or to any "unsegregated" state, they can be on a level with white people for this is not the case. Some of them should go and find out and return to tell others who seem to think of the North as a land flowing with milk and honey for the colored. Why do other sections of the country have such a hypocritical attitude? They know they do not accept the Negro as an equal. Every little incident unfavorable to a Negro in the South is played up by the agitators.

Yesterday's paper carried a news item of four Negro youths jumping on a white boy—for no reason, sending him to the hospital. The same article tells of two teen-age Negro girls jumping on two white girls—for no reason. This in New York. Imagine the hulla-baloo that would have been made of this if the situation had been reversed—in the South. So far I have heard no comment from any source on that bit of news, certainly not from the North.

To The Editor.

Dear Sir.

I am not sure that you are interested in what I have to say, but after reading an article which appeared in one of our news papers [The New York Post] which I think as a Negro, I am very much interested. I Thank it is only my duty to rbing something to light, now that an opportunity has arrived.

I am not saying that I agree with the Policies, or the laws of the South, the sole purpose of this letter is simply to give you, or whome it may consurn some idea of what it's like here in this Great City of N.Y.

Sun. 3-18-56

I am happy to say that we Negroes does have quite a number of privilidges of which we are difiently deprived in the South, but I will have to confess that equality is far, far from what our great northern press would have others to believe.

P. 2-B

We are supposed to have laws that say you cannot refuse employment or housing facilities to a citicen because of race, creed, or color. Well I can tell you from my own experience, that it is the policies of many firms to refuse in their very shrewd way to employ Negroes, regardless of his ability it is also the policy of most better Class Hotels, and decent neighborhoods to give acomoditions to Negroes regardless of his ability to pay. In other words, about the only difference one can earnestly see is that in the South the policy is to say straight forward that he is against the Negro and every thing he represent. And the policy here is to deceive, conive and pretend that we are all brothers while if the truth was known, he really feel as you do in the South. I wish to thank you sir for giving your precious time to read this letter, and I do hope it will of some worthy cause for you, my country, and my people.

New York, N.Y.

Montgomery, Ala.

Dear Mr. Wechsler:

To hand your telegram (I'm printing it in full) embodying the invitation to proceed to New York at once to gather material for a series about the racial discrimination in the North cited by Adlai Stevenson, Mayor Robert Wagner and The New York Times. This racial discrimination has now been confirmed by you in assigning your able Negro reporter, Ted Poston, to do a whole series on New York discrimination. All this goes far to accentuate that discrimination against the Negro is a national, not a Southern, practice.

My original proposal was that you assign your star columnist, Murray Kempton, to guide me about New York in quest of the discrimination situations he described so vividly in my office, out of which he worked for days on the Montgomery bus boycott.

Kempton and I planned the enterprise in some detail, including his rendition of a map of New York school districts. Kempton said that he would relish working with me for a week. And let me emphasize that Kempton said he had long meant to do the story and he was going to do it regardless of whether I was able to fly up. He enjoined me, however, to arrive in the coming weekend as he was taking his family to North Carolina for the Easter holidays.

I was quite willing to work with Kempton because of our prior plans and personal relationship. I am still quite ready to fly to New York if you authorize Kempton to work with me for a week. If for some reason Kempton has abandoned his conviction that it's a good story and one that he would write regardless of my visiting New York, then perhaps you, as editor of a newspaper, would work with me, your opposite number, in the stead of Kempton, seemingly hors d'combat.

As for what I might write, The New York Post and any Southern newspaper are thrice welcome, gratis.

As for Reporter Poston coming to do a story on Montgomery race relations, by all means dispatch him. The last Negro reporter I saw in Montgomery was the enterprising Carl Rowan of The Minneapolis Tribune. I assisted him in every way and steered him to one exclusive that appeared on Pg. 1 of his paper. But I will not promise you that Poston or any other reporter will find anything in Montgomery that hasn't been massively treated in The Post and other New York papers lately.

I am ready to fly to New York this weekend if either Kempton or you, my associate in the American Society of Newspaper Editors, will handcuff himself to me for a week to root out what Adlai Stevenson says exists in New York.

Yours faithfully,

MR. GROVTR C. HALL, JR., Editor-in-Chief, The Montgomery Advertiser, Montgomery, Alabama Advertiser

Dear Mr. Hall: P. 4A Thurs 3-15-56

We seem to have encountered another failure of communication between North and South. Montgomery, Ala.

On Sunday evening the Associated Press called and said you had announced that you had sent me a letter suggesting in substance that we assign a reporter to cover the story of racial discrimination in New York. The AP reported you had said that conversations with Post Columnist Murray Kempton led you to believe there was a big untold story in this area, and that you had challenged us to get that story.

I've now received the copy of your Sunday edition containing an "open letter" to me. Since I have received no other communication from you, I assume this is the letter on which the AP story was based. From it I deduce that your proposal is a little different from the one described in the AP dispatch.

As I understand it, you propose to come to New York and get the story yourself and want me to assign Kempton to assist you.

Before receiving the edition of your paper which carried your "open letter," I had, as you know, told the AP we would undertake at once a series on race discrimination in New York and would make it available to you for simultaneous publication in The Advertiser. We assigned Ted Poston to start on the series immediately. Poston has covered the problem of race relations in New York for many years and has registered many distinguished achievements in that field. I have, incidentally, discussed the project with Murray Kempton, and he agrees that Poston is peculiarly well-equipped to do such a job.

We are going ahead with that series. But I certainly hope you will come up to New York to work on the same story. We will be happy to make all our facilities available to you—beginning with our voluminous clippings in our morgue which indicate the extent to which we have covered the story of race discrimination in this city in the past.

You might wish to go out with Poston and the other reporters who have been assigned to work with him, and I am sure that all of them will give you maximum cooperation. Perhaps it would be interesting to see how your notes compare with theirs on such an investigation.

After you and Poston have both completed your series, I would propose that Mr. Poston conducted a comparable first-hand study of racial discrimination in Montgomery to be similarly published in parallel columns here and in The Post.

I hope this suggestion appeals to you and that I will be seeing you soon.

And if this works out as I hope it will, perhaps we could look forward to a return engagement in which you and Poston conduct a comparable first-hand study of racial discrimination in Montgomery to be similarly published in parallel columns here and in The Post.

Sincerely.

The Education Of A Southerner

EDITOR, THE ADVERTISER — As a transplanted Montgomerian and deep-rooted Confederate . . . Living in the North for the past five years has been a revelation and education to me. I had always believed that racial relations—meaning, particularly, Negro vs. white—were always in proper balance and that friction would be unheard of, in the "Nawth." That is just not so; at least, where I have lived.

As a minister of the gospel, I come close to black and white people's pride and prejudice, and countless times I have been told quietly by "white folks:" "I am a rock-ribbed Republican, but you Southerners have the right idea about the Negro."

It pains me to see my good old Montgomery splashed over the pages of our local papers, and the impressions that are made that the colored and the white there are lined up ready to slash each other to pieces. I spend my time assuring the local gentry that Montgomery is still a peace-loving city with deepest respect for everyone.

Certainly we are in the midst of a change, but no Supreme Court decree, nor any other fiat, is going to change deep-rooted customs overnight—that is what I tell these people, too.

Please exhort your readers to read carefully William Faulkner's "A Letter To Northerners" in this week's Life, even as I am exhorting those in this section to do so.

Across the vale of years I carry hallowed memories of the Montgomery of the days when I used to swap banter with your great father and the popular Atticus Mullins at Turk's; with the Patersons at Old Rosemont on Dexter; down a hot-dog at Chris'; get a shoeshine and paper at Mike Green's newsstand next to Hamrick's Drug Store, Perry and Dexter; see Elly Barnes and Mr. Holt of Holt Dye Works in the Passing Throng.

Save Our City

Editor, The Advertiser:

Cities, through the ages, have been conquered and destroyed—mostly from without; but not infrequently from within. To recall the names of men who have destroyed cities would not be difficult, but it would be infinitely more difficult to list those who have saved a city. Hence, the challenge here in Montgomery.

Surely those charged with the responsibility of leadership in our city recognize this fact, and are aware of the great responsibility and opportunity which is theirs. At present Montgomery is the target area, the testing ground. The eyes of the world are on us.

But is this what we want? No! Nevertheless we are on display, while the world looks on. What we are doing is applauded by some; assailed by others—televised, broadcast, scrutinized and criticized. I am sure there are thousands of Montgomerians who have begun to ask, why must our city become the show place, the guinea pig, or the battleground for other sections of the state or nation?

For us, people are praying; legislatures passing resolutions, churches collecting funds. But who wants to be the object of national pity, or rebuke? Moreover, who wants to make martyrs or criminals of any of our citizens?

If this is not what we want, what then can we do about it? Get our own house in order; Without fanfare or publicity — minus television and flash cameras—let us solve our own problem to our own best interest. Do this and we disappoint the sensation seekers. Do this and we pull the rug right out from under the communists who might have occasion to profit at our expense. And this can be done if leaders of both races, who have a desire and determination to save our city, will meet (without announcement or publicity) in an atmosphere of mutual trust and confidence; in a spirit of give-and-take, and work out a fair and honorable solution to this problem. Oh, I know it isn't so simple as that; yet I still have faith in man, and in his ability to solve his most pressing problems — the current crisis in Montgomery to the contrary notwithstanding.

In a fair and just solution, we could all rejoice; lift the indictments, throw out the impending trials and court cases; refund uncashed checks and unspent cash; and send the caravan of cameramen and reporters on their westward way—or northward or eastward.

Really and truly the issues involved are so small as to be almost totally obscured by the sound and the fury; the rumors and rumors of rumor. Looking at the whole thing dispassionately, one could hardly argue against according all busriders courtesy and fair treatment.

Secondly, a seating arrangement mutually acceptable to all concerned, would—if left to the passengers—practically take care of itself. With Negroes filling in from the rear and whites from the front of the bus, both spirit and letter of the law would be observed. A "mutually acceptable" seating arrangement would need no other name; custom, common courtesy and commonsense would take care of the rest. Since all fare-paying busriders, whether child or adult, are entitled to a seat, could it not be possible to provide extra buses when the demand for more seating space is caused by school children and working people at certain hours of the day?

And as for Negro bus drivers on buses serving "predominantly Negro areas," could there not be a committee appointed to survey and study the issue and to make appropriate recommendations? This problem, I believe, could be solved without incident.

The foregoing suggestions would be a small price to pay for the very preservation of our city, ad for the restoration of racial harmony and goodwill. There need be no question of who won or lost; for saving face is not so important as saving our city. There would need be no spectacular announcements; no victory ball; no ringing of the bells—only a silent prayer: "Thank God it's over!"

True greatness and statesmanship would be the reward of those who put love of city and fellow man above personal feelings. The world would applaud their actions; God would smile upon their deeds; and historians and generations yet unkown will write and speak of them as men who saved a city.

Preachers Should Stick To Pulpits

7-4-4 The Anniston Star

IN PROTESTING against the arrest of a large number of the leaders in the boycott of Montgomery buses several weeks ago, the Rev. L. R. Bennett, pastor of the Mount Zion African Methodist Episcopal Church, was quoted last week as having said: "No city in the world can afford to place in jail and make criminals of 24 of its preachers."

But it might be stated in another way to the effect that no city, and especially the Capital City of a sovereign state, well can afford to allow its citizens, be they white or black, to organize in mass assault against the laws of the city and of the state.

That is what a large number of the Negro preachers, and one or two whites as well, have done in defiance of city and state authorities at Montgomery.

Admittedly, the people of this country have been brought up to hold respect for the clergy of all races and denominations so long as they stick to their pulpits and their pastoral duties. But when they get into the realm of politics they bring about disunity in their churches and compromise their influence in the community.

Some of the ministers here, both white and colored, have lessened their standing in this way. And the Northern papers indicate that the pulpits of that part of the country have been a veritable sounding board for lectures against the South and its way of living together with its colored friends.

No body of ministers has a greater responsibility to their people than the Negro ministers of this country, especially those in this region. For there is no other segment of our population that is so given to immorality, to social disease, to violation of the criminal laws, the marital laws, the laws of contract, etc., as are the members of the Negro race. And they should be the paramount concern of the Negro ministry.

Before we even considered the question of integration in the schools and in public conveyances, it should have been the prime duty of the federal government—which in 1863 thrust the burden of an illiterate race on the Southern people—to see that they had substantial houses for home and school uses, and that their health and general welfare were protected.

But in addition to wiping out four billion dollars that the Southern planters had invested in slaves that were brought to this country by Northern exploiters, the Emancipation Act, which was largely political in concept and in execution, left it with the South to take care of the Negro and to shoulder all the other burdens incident to Reconstruction.

Moreover, instead of giving back to us more of the taxes we have paid into the federal treasury, not to mention an adverse trade balance that has lasted for generations, we have been discriminated against in every conceivable way. Also, the South has been taxed to the limit to help feed, clothe and rehabilitate the enemies of our common country abroad, and now we are threatened with the deepest humiliation of all.

Some of the preachers up North, and a few down South, now tell us that integration, which is the entering wedge to amalgamation, is the Christian way of life. But from the time of Abraham (Genesis 24-3) to the time of Ezra, chapters 9-10, who made his people divorce their foreign wives, Jehovah was trying to preserve the purity of the blood of his chosen people.

There also are some reformers who contend that this was purely a religious gesture, but the antipathy between the Jews and the Samaritans, who contended that they were descended from the Assyrians, was certainly more than religious. And the Jews, as have the Anglo-Saxons and other white races, have tried to preserve their racial integrity from time immemorial to this day.

What The Negro Stands To Lose

EDITOR, THE ADVERTISER — Inasmuch as we are Southerners, having been born and raised in Alabama, we are familiar with segregation in the South and realize the necessity of it.

For the past several years one or both of us have lived in states other than Southern: West Virginia, Kansas and Oregon. We are therefore in the position of having a bird's-eye-view of a situation with which we are familiar.

We have a high regard for the Southern Negro as an individual. We have equally high contempt for the agencies and implements such as the NAACP and the Supreme Court decision which would, through their radical and unlawful actions, cause the Southern Negro to inadvertently lose the respect and good will of his best friend—the Southern white man.

Editor, The Advertiser:

I have just read your interview in U.S. News & World Report.

There is no doubt that there is hypocrisy in the North. It is in the Democratic party, however. Your good friends, Franklin and Harry started it.

You must realize that there is a lot of difference between between a Southern and Northern Democrat. The strength of the Northern Democratic Party is the slums of the cities.

In the North you can tell the character of any community by the registration.

Most Northern Negroes are pawns of Democratic ward healers.

These Northern Democrats tell the Negroes that the South is behind the times and that the Democraic Party of the North does not need the South.

I wish that a lot of you intelligent Southerners could go to a slums political meeting. I am a Mason and a Rotarian. There are very few Democrats in either organization in the North.

Segregation 'Compromise' Attacked By State Lawmaker

Tues. 2-28-56 P. 1

Montgomery, Ala.

A member of the Alabama Legislature warned yesterday that if the white people of the state continue to "give in and be compromised" on the race issue "we will have but three choices to make—sell our homes and get out of Alabama, be humiliated or take up our shotguns."

Rep. W. L. (Doc) Martin of Greene issued that warning in speaking in support of a resolution he had introduced to the legislative interim committee on education requesting President O. C. Carmichael to furnish to the committee the names and addresses of all students who signed a petition urging the readmission of Miss Autherine J. Lucy to the University.

Such a petition was circulated on the University campus last week and reportedly was signed by 500 students, faculty members and townspeople.

After apologizing to the committee for having referred to the Negro student as "Miss Lucy" in the resolution, Martin added:

"If we expect to keep Negroes out of our white schools, it becomes the leadership of the Legislature to take this action. Let's find out who these students are who want to go to school with Negroes, and let's let them go."

Advertiser

It was at this point that Martin warned that continued compromise on the part of the white people would leave them with but the three choices—"sell out our homes and move out of the state, stay here and be humiliated, or we can take up our shotguns."

P. 6-A

"I don't want to do any of these things, but I want to stay in an Alabama that is controlled by white people," Martin said. "It is time to let the people know that white supremacy is going to stand in Alabama."

REP. W. L. MARTIN
'Three Choices'

Martin's resolution, introduced just as the committee had completed its detailed, two-week study of school financing, touched off a flurry of debate.

Sen. Albert Boutwell of Jefferson questioned the "benefit" of such a resolution, and Sen. Ben Reeves of Pike called it "out of order and improper."

"I feel as strongly as anyone on the racial question, but I think the resolution is out of order and improper at this time," Reeves continued. "I suggest you introduce it at the next special session, and I will be for it."

Moments later the committee voted 15-7 to adjourn until 9 a.m. today, thus avoiding a vote on the Martin resolution.

The seven members who voted against adjournment—and in effect were supporting the resolution—were Martin, Reps. Charles Ramey of Hale, Jimmy Dement of Limestone and James Branyon of Fayette and Sens. Roland Cooper of Wilcox, Walter C. Givhan of Dallas and E. O. Eddins of Marengo.

Martin said later th purpose of the resolution was only "to find out who signed the petition." Earlier, Sen. Cooper in support of the resolution had noted "we aren't doing this just to kick them out of school. We just want to see who signed the petition."

The segregation uprising overshadowed action taken by the committee regarding the school crisis.

The committee, after making several amendments to a report adopted last Friday, passed a resolution recommending that Gov. James E. Folsom call a special session of the Legislature to open Wednesday of this week.

The group meets with Gov. Folsom at 9 a.m. today to present their formal report.

Earlier yesterday afternoon, the committee voted to restore the appropriations to Jacksonville and Troy State Teachers Colleges which previously had been cut. Jacksonville was given back the $30,000 slashed last week, and $20,000 was returned to Troy.

To make up for this $50,000, the committee voted to cut that amount from the Teachers Equalization Training Fund.

Later, the committee heard arguments against a cut of the civilian rehabilitation fund of $211,000, but took no action on a request to restore this appropriation in full.

FOLSOM'S taste runs to bourbon, but it was Scotch & soda (with Powell of Harlem) that washed him up with Alabama.

You have to understand Folsom's low estate with Alabama—he himself recently confirmed that he "couldn't be elected dog catcher"—to understand his conference at the Capitol yesterday with Alabama editors and publishers.

Folsom has deeply offended and estranged dominant public opinion in Alabama. This is chiefly, though not entirely, because he has systematically and sometimes sportively refused to join the resistance to the holy-rolling of the reckless, pietistical abolitionists of the North.

Jour. 2-25-56

He is now paying a price for his folly. The jeers at the Coliseum well told him that the jig is up.

So he is out to work his way back into the fold by taking it all back.

The editors and publishers responded to their summons, which was their duty.

It was a large gathering. The proceedings were televised. Folsom had a statewide audience. By means of the editors and publishers, Folsom was associating himself with conventional white opinion. The newspapermen were potted palms in a Folsom pageant.

He talked of many things, but finally he made the following comment:

"Anybody with any sense knows that the Negro children and the white children are not going to school together in Alabama any time in the near future—in fact, in a long time."

Thus did Folsom seek to reverse his field. That's what he wanted white Alabama to hear him say. He is trying to work his way back.

It happened, because of the boycott arrests, that there were many reporters present representing the national publications. Only one or two have a sound grasp of what is going on in Alabama.

It is too bad that only one or two of them will comprehend the meaning of Folsom's pronouncement, above quoted. Here had been the only governor in the Southern states with a dissenting race viewpoint. He was in- forced to sw ch about.

MACHINERY KEPT OILED

Racial Crisis In Alabama Promises Long Session For State's Lawmakers

Advertiser 3/4 Montgomery Ala. Sun. 3-4-56

By LYNNE BRANNEN
Associated Press Writer

Due to continuing racial crisis in the state, it's beginning to look like the Alabama Legislature will keep its current special session alive for some time to come.

There is talk that members will keep the lawmaking machinery oiled so they can respond to any challnege from tthe efforts of the National Assn. for Advancement of Colored People to break the color line.

Already a resolution is half through the Legislature to set up an anti-communist investigating committee to look into activities of any group suspected of having subversive tendencies.

The sponsor, Rep. T. K. Selman of Walker County has already suggested that Autherine Lucy, a Negro coed expelled this week from the University of Alabama, be called as the first witness.

After the conferences with NAACP attorneys in New York, the Lucy woman said she expects to return "within the next week" to renew her fight to enter the University of Alabama, an all-white college.

To meet this threat, Rep. Charles W. McKay of Talladega, has offered a bill to tighten up on entrance requirements at state institutions of higher learning. It is pending in a house committee.

McKay's bill would require each apllicant to furnish three affidavits as to "character and fitness" signed by graduates of the institution concerned who are not related to the applicant. It would require three more such affidavits before the individual could graduate and receive a diploma.

The proposed anti-communist investigation resolution is now resting in the Senate Finance Committee where it was sent because it carries a $50,000 appropriation.

It proposes that the legislative committee make "full inquiry into activities of communists and communist front organizations in this state with a view to determining whether the NAACP or any affiliated organization in this state is substantially directed, dominated or controlled by the communists or by the Communist Party."

This group would have authority to subpoena witnesses. administer oaths, take testimony and employ such clerical and stenographic help as needed.

The resolution further directs the committee to "fully investigate and take proof of all violent and tumultuous proceedings in this state at any time since May 17, 1954 (when the U.S. Supreme Court ruled segregation in public schools unlawful) whether engaged in by residents of this state or by any person or persons from elsewhere coming into this state or encouraging others to do any acts of violence or public disturbance against the laws of this state, or the rights, peace and safety of the residents of this state."

Supporters of the proposed investigation say they feel racial tension in Alabama has "mounted too fast in the last few months" not to have been inspired by outside forces.

"I believe it is the work of communists working through the National Assn. for the Advancement of Colored People," Selman told the House of Representatives in asking support for his resolution. It swept through the house 75-0.

Some 50 bills were dropped in the House hopper the opening day. Many of them identical with measures which have been killed one or more times in previous legislative sessions.

Newsman Says Folsom Moderating Influence On Crisis In Alabama

By ROBERT S. BIRD
Of The New York Herald Tribune

[The following will appear in the New York Herald and several other major U. S. dailies this morning. It is printed simultaneously in The Advertiser by courtesy of the Herald Tribune. Alabama newspapermen will be amused by some of the hooch in Reporter Bird's study, but it is nevertheless an exceptional piece of work.—Ed.]

MONTGOMERY, Ala., March 17 — The most relaxed man in the whole state of Alabama today is the man around whom the storm of the race conflict beats most furiously. Gov. James E. Folsom, who is remembered in the North as "Kissin' Jim" and is known to all hereabouts as "Big Jim," remains totally unruffled by the winds that shake the colonnaded Capitol of Alabama.

While the outside world looks in alarm on recent events in Alabama and his own citizens cry for action from him, "Big Jim" sits enigmatically on Olympus. Or more exactly, sits most of the time in his office in the Capitol, and much of the time on the grassy bank of his favorite fishing stream.

He was just as imperturbable the other night sitting in the Executive Mansion, discussing the Alabama situation with this correspondent over champagne and T-bone steaks. In fact, he was so relaxed that when time came to sit down to dinner he unnotched his belt several inches and attacked his meat in shirt-sleeves from the lordly Chief Executive's chair at the head of the state dining table.

FOLSOM

BIRD

Mrs. Folsom, an attractive and thoroughly charming woman, had chided the Governor for insisting that our small dinner party of four (including the Governor's executive secretary) be served in the state dining room. The table was big enough to seat a regiment of hussars and the chandelier, had it been fully lighted, could have illuminated Times Square.

She suggested that the family dining room would be cosier. But the Governor overruled her with indulgent wave of hand as if to suggest that the presence of this interviewer rendered the occasion at least a semi-state affair, even if not full dress. So we merely pitched our conversation to a higher register in order to maintain communication with the vivacious Mrs. Folsom down at the far end of the table. We dined informally in the midst of elegance.

GARGANTUA

Gov. Folsom's height is well known — six feet eight inches. But that might as well read eight feet six inches because when a person of ordinary height stands beside "Big Jim" a couple of extra feet difference in his height wouldn't seem to make much difference. He is a startlingly big man.

P. 4-A

Give such a man the personality of an overgrown, slow-talking, hard-to-get-mad country boy with lots of hidden savvy and the first lineaments of his portrait appear. Enhance that with a political genius capable of engaging the fiercest loyalties and deepest enmities; of shrugging off abject defeats, personal contumely, backfiring razzle - dazzle political stunts, and rancor toward unrelenting enemies, some high lights begin to emerge. Sun. 3/18-56

Touch up the picture with the hint of a brooding, introspective look in the gray eyes, and a habit of lapsing into silences which he never seems to notice —and which he finally breaks by picking up the thread of conversation where he left off. Then dress this loungy giant in well-tailored clothes, invest him with legendary personal misdeeds both bizarre and horrendous, make his political maneuvers often seem suicidal and wholly inexplicable, give him a cat's ability to land on his feet—and you have a recognizable sketch of "Big Jim" Folsom, the so-called enigma of Alabama.

Montgomery Ala.

'HOGWASH,' QUOTH HE

At this moment, he would appear to be the most unpopular person in the state of Alabama. It all happened since integration became an issue, and his unpopularity seems to extend even to those ordinarily loyal constituents in the rural areas who voted him into office in the fall of 1954.

With the people of the state demanding piteously that he do something to help stem the "black tide" which threatens to engulf them, he is accused by some extremists of inaction so flagrant as to warrant impeachment. He speaks with disrespect for the white Citizens Councils movement, which is organizing throughout the state to fight integration, and a result is that Folsom people are plotting his downfall He gives a mild rebuke to Negro agitators and the cry goes up that he is really a "nigger lover" — the vilest label that can be pinned on a man here.

The desperate legislators, seeking to appease the folks back home, put through nullification and interposition legislation, along with other measures so wild as to cause even them to smile a little nervously, and the Governor says, "Hogwash," then goes fishing.

After six weeks of traveling around Alabama, encountering passion, fear, hatred and frustration in abundance, it was quite an experience to sit down and talk about it for four hours with the most relaxed man in Alabama.

IT AIN'T GONNA RAIN

Either he's all wrong and Alabama is in a mighty bad fix, or there is nothing to wrry about, he's a lot right and Alabama is watch carefully against safe; safe for itself and safe for folks trying to stir up trouble, the Union, with certain painless calm down and sit tight and let him handle matters in his own way. He'll give his people in his own way to go to his people with aid and comfort in their frustration. He is in the courthouse towns of all the 67 counties, he says, and they know it. And if their aroused passions are even little as elemental as the good earth itself, so is his unworriedness. At least, so he suggests. Wise in all ple of formidable candidates, including the author of Alabama's nullification law.

POPULARITY CONTEST

In short, the Governor is about one of them and they know it. And if their aroused passions are as elemental as the good earth itself, so is his unworriedness. At least, so he suggests. Wise in all the tricks of Southern stump politicking, "Big Jim" may yet quiet down this wave of race hatred. If he does, it will be another Folsom miracle.

He's going to tell them that He's in that race against a coalition of formidable candidates, including the author of Alabama's nullification law.

The experts laugh at the idea. They say he's too late; this time he has fallen flat on his face for good. He shrugs with unconcern. He may not win the committeeman post because, as he says, the wave of race hatred will not have passed until nearer the Fall election. And this committeeman showdown is to be in May. But he will draw fire away from other Folsom candidates, and away from his own legislative program. Later, he is convinced, all misunderstanding will have passed. "I've been through it all before," he says, with weary recollection.

LET 'EM BELLOW

"Let them spleen their vent, or vent their spleen, or however you say it," he adds. "All I want is for the people to speak.

The Governor has just launched what he considers to be an ingenius bit of strategy He has called for a constitutional convention to "legalize" the "hogwash" of nullification and interposition. As it happens, the Governor has long wanted a constitutional convention for altogether other reasons, largely to further his own state legislative program, which includes reapportionment of certain counties which are generally anti-Folsom. The Legislature in the past had no intention of giving him his constitutional convention because it feels that might open the door to all kinds of Folsom law-making mischief.

HUMBUG MEDICINE?

But now they are feeling the sting of a real needle, because the Governor has got a very simple stump-talk rationalization for the convention. Nobody understands interposition anyway, and the rural folks least of all. They are backing on the theory that any medicine is better than none. But here comes "Big Jim" saying that it is humbug medicine, and the real cure is a constitutional convention "to make every thing legal.' He pretends to be surprised that legislators are nettled.

"In such a convention they can even see-seed (sic) from the union," he explains. They can authorize me to call out the National Guard against the Federal troops. Like I say, there's been so much hell-raising I thought they would want to do it."

"Why," he says with a gleam in his eye, "they could require the Governor to take an oath promising not to support the Constitution of the United States. Do you know that all the state and county and local officials of Alabama are bound by oath to support the Federal government? Only a constitutional convention can release them from that oath. Let the people speak in convention assembled!"

'SAM HOUSTON DIDN'T'

Would the Governor accept release of his oath to the Federal government in such a convention?

"Sam Houston didn't he grins, "but all the other Confederate governors did."

"But would you?"

"Sam Houston didn't."

And the Governor's going to point out to his stump audiences another "important point." They seem to have overlooked the fact that the State of Alabama has not been made, up to now a party to any school integration suit. So why the rush to fret about the integration matter? And why hasn't it been made a party to such a suit. Well, the Governor's going to call attention to the fact that he's kept in pretty close touch with some of the Negro leaders who are causing trouble elsewhere in that respect.

SCOTCH AND SODA

Nothing has caused so much heart-sickness among the Folsom following as the story that went the rounds to the effect that last November he drank Scotch whisky with Congressman Adam Clayton Powell, New York's Negro Congressman. The Governor will have to meet that accusation at the courthouse steps of Alabama, and it is a good guess he will explain that Rep. Powell is one of those Negro leaders with whom it was important for him to talk —even in his office in the Executive Manison.

And there will be still other points to be hammered home. How come that people are getting so fussed about integration that they are blaming good Democrats on the Supreme Court for their troubles when the fact is the Republican President and his Republican Attorney General are responsible for prosecution of the integration suits?

The Governor, moreover, will appeal to the patriotic impulses of his sore-tried supporters, for they are just as willing to die for their country as they are to die for Dixie, and American traditions are unassailable even here, where one is assumed to be include segregation in the South.

He will hit out against "mobocracy" and take a firm stand for democratic law and order. And he will say these things standing up there on the platform in a white suit which makes him look even bigger than the giant he is. A man of the people, or perhaps a father symbol for the temporarily confused. And they will listen to this man who rode to victory in his last campaign on the emblazoned but folksy slogan, "Y'All Come!"—meaning to his inauguration as Governor.

HYPNOTIZED BIRD

It's almost hypnotic listening to him at home giving this picture of himself on the stump; sitting in his chair with head hunched down between his huge shoulders, speaking slowly as if forging in his mind the exactly right image of the platform scene that he counts on for redemption.

As he talks, Mrs. Folsom, mother of four, of his six children, girlishly plump, sparkling of eye, eager of manner, listens to pater familias with pleasure in her gaze and occasionally gentle dissent Her candidate for Democratic presidential nominee is not his. His is Harry S. Truman, period. If Mr. Truman doesn't run, then the Governor will cross that bridge when he comes to it.

The Governor was a widower when he met Mrs. Folsom in 1946 while on a speaking tour. In those days he always kissed every pretty girl he could, but he asked this one, the former Jamelle Moore to marry him. She did two years later, and it is plain that there is great warmth between them.

This may be "hogwash," but the truth is the Alabama race situation seemed a lot less inflammatory to this correspondent after the session with "Big Jim" Folsom. This much is certain, he is by design or not a moderating influence on the crisis in Alabama.

FOLSOM'S REPORT

Race Issue May Be Overdone During North Alabama Talks

Wed. 3-21-5? P. 1

Montgomery,

By BOB INGRAM
Advertiser Staff Writer

FAYETTE, Ala., March 20—Gov. James E. Folsom, in his initial series of reports to the people, may be spending more time in explaining his stand on racial segregation than is really necessary to satisify the people of this section of the state.

In his early addresses in Fayette and Walker County, and again today in Marion, Folsom waxed long and loud on the race issue. The crowd listened politely, but they were not particularly interested was very apparent.

Coming fresh from South Alabama where the problem of the races is so tense, it is difficult to accept the reality of the situation here. Problem of the races in this party of Alabama is apparently non-existant, and for the most part these people here show only passing interest in the race development in other sections of the state.

Very few people here know or care what the Nulification Resolution is all about. The suggestion that the race issue might be a major factor in Gov. Folsom's upcoming campaign strikes them as being utterly ridiculous. And the growth of the citizens movement in Alabama has passed almost unnoticed.

Timely comments on the WCC came from an overall-clad farmer who was questioned on the subject while he stood outside the court house here awaiting the governor's arrival "What is it," he asked when queried on the WCC. "If it is what it sounds like it is then it oughta go real good up here. We sure have a lot of white citizens."

And that, in brief, is the situation here. Marion county does have a lot of white citizens. Census figures show slightly more than 500 Negro people in the county with a total population of 26,000. Only three Negro families live in the city limits of Hamilton.

A prominent Marion attorney voiced a comment that here in our county race issue will not be a factor in Gov. Folsom's campaign. "It's a little early to tell how the thing will shape up, but Folsom has always been strong here and there is no indication he will be otherwise this spring," he said, "and I am convinced that the race issue will not be of any importance in the race."

witness, refused to swear to the customary witness oath, saying, "I don't swear. It's against my religious convictions." But he poll regarding the race issue "There is no race problem here and we don't need any of the White Citizens Council chapters and all we have is white folks," Fite declared.

In his address here today, Folsom was in much better form than he had been Monday. With the courtroom packed, and again the audience almost entirely made up of elderly people, the governor obviously enjoyed himself and he unleashed a sharp attack on Alabama daily newspapers.

P. 2-A

He also took this occasion to give his first public explanation of the publicized Scotch and Soda incident concerning himself and the Negro Congressman Adam Clayton Powell (D-NY).

Rep. Powell, in addressing a mass meeting of the Montgomery Negroes last fall, has made mention of the fact that he had visited with the governor at the mansion and had taken a drink with him.

"I have had Negro leaders in my office as governor, just as has a lot of folks have had, and I have had Negroes in my office at the mansion if the office at the capitol was closed," Folsom said. "Powell called me and asked that he be met by a highway patrol car, but I couldn't do that because white boys drive them. So I told him I would send out an official reception car to meet him. It's not my Cadillac, but another number one."

"Powell told me he would like to come by and talk to me and I agreed. Because I knew he was one of the leaders of the Negro people, and I wanted to talk to him and try to prevent Alabama from becoming a party to any intergration suit," Folsom continued. "And I might add that I don't drink Scotch liquor, in fact, I never have. Fact is, I had rather have a drink of that old Marion County moonshine that they tell me you make mighty good up here, than an bottle of Scotch."

The crowd hearing the governor and his Corn Grinders was estimated at about 275. The court room seats 240.

In an address tonight at the new Franklin County Courthouse in Russellville, Gov. Folsom for the first time on this tour unleashed a withering attack on Black Belt legislators who "are doing all the howling, hollering and whooping about the race issue."

"I tell you that's the crowd that denied you the right to vote for President in 1948," Folsom declared, "and anybody who advocates that will also advocate mobrule."

"Why, you know what that crowd did last month?" Folsom continued. "They passed a resolution asking the federal government to move all the Negroes out of the South. Why, if all the Negroes were moved every last one of them folks who have been raising so much sand, would starve to death. They wouldn't work. I know that, because I know every one of them."

Earlier, Folsom had injected this sectional policy into his address by noting that every one of his cabinet members, except one, is from North Alabama.

"Ain't but one from south of the first time tonight, and I'm glad of it," he declared.

Tonight's crowd of about 225 included about 30 Negroes was the smallest to turn out thus far. It was also the least enthusiastic. When Folsom interrupted by applause and on each occasion, the applauding had been the public schools, initiated by Folsom's cabinet man in the rear members.

Birmingham, and Folsom declared. Also for the first time one of the governor's remarks about segregation brought a response from the crowd that was Folsom interrupted by applause and on each occasion, the applauding had been shouted "Amen." The tour will conclude tomorrow with addresses in Moulton at 1 p.m. and Cullman at 7 p.m.

It was the first such outburst since the governor began his tour 2 p.m.

THIN CRUST OF PEACE

Dixie Looks For Answer To Heal Racial Strife

By BEM PRICE

BIRMINGHAM, Ala., March 3 (AP)—Here in the self-styled "heart of Dixie," the time of racial crisis is now.

In the past three months subsurface racial tensions repeatedly have broken through the thin crust of apparent peace.

Alabama, of course, is not alone in its battle against any shift in the South's racial patterns.

There have been riots at the University of Alabama at Tuscaloosa over the admission of a Negro woman.

In Montgomery, a Negro boycott of the public transportation system is now in its 14th week, though 99 of the movement's leaders were indicted under an old labor law.

The number of strongly pro-segregation White Citizen Councils has grown from about 40 to more than 60 in Alabama in the last eight weeks.

The Alabama Legislature has approved a resolution declaring the U. S. Supreme Court decision of May 17, 1954, to be "null, void and of no effect."

In that now historic decision the Supreme Court held that segregation in public schools because of race was unconstitutional.

The voices of moderation in Alabama have been few. Gov. James E. Folsom called the nullification resolution "hogwash." He also has appealed for an interracial committee to seek means of lessening racial tensions.

Another Alabama House resolution asked for an investigation to determine whether the National Assn. for the Advancement of Colored People is Communist controlled.

The NAACP has been the guiding hand behind the fight against segregation throughout the South.

The running fight to maintain racial barriers was not confined to Alabama during the past week.

In Mississippi legislators also called on Congress to submit a constitutional amendment to the 48 states, declaring that the states alone have the right to regulate public schools.

In addition the Mississippi House set up a $5,000 library fund to acquire books on the races of mankind. The floor debate specified they should be books indicating the white man's superiority over the Negro.

Before this measure was sent to the Senate, however, Rep. Walter Phillips from Hancock County, warned that such a measure would border on "thought control." He said Hitler advocated a master race "and had paid the consequences."

Virginia is another state which has protested the court decision in a legislative resolution. Georgia has declared it to be "null, void and of no effect."

In Louisiana the state brought action to dissolve the NAACP under an old anti-Ku Klux Klan law.

The suit, filed by Atty. Gen. Fred S. LeBlanc, asked the state court also to ban NAACP meetings.

The law under which the suit was filed requires every type of organization to file annual membership lists with the secretary of state. This, the state charged, the NAACP has failed to do for the past three years.

LeBlanc's action came after the NAACP twice had shaken Louisiana in a matter of days. Actions brought by the NAACP ended with a federal court ruling knocking out the state's 1954 laws designed to get around the U.S. Supreme Court's ban on school segregation.

The NAACP followed this decision with a suit last Wednesday asking for integration in New Orleans public schools.

The two Alabama cases which have attracted world wide attention, of course, are those of Autherine J. Lucy, a 26-year-old Negro secretary and ex-school teacher, and the Montgomery bus boycott.

For 29 months the Lucy woman sought the right to enroll at the University of Alabama through the federal courts. She won and became the first Negro ever admitted to the 125-year-old school.

It was a short-lived victory. Riots broke out on the school's campus. The Board of Trustees suspended the Negro woman. She sought a contempt of court motion against 13 trustees and university officials. Federal Dist. Judge H. Hobart Grooms rejected the contempt motion, but ordered the Lucy woman returned to school by Monday.

Within hours after that court action, the trustees met again in secret session and ordered the Negro coed "permanently expelled" on disciplinary grounds.

The next move is up to the NAACP and there was no immediate indication when it would come or what it would be.

In New York, NAACP attorney Thurgood Marshall said "it is pretty clear in my mind what we can do," but he said it would require some "checking" first.

The Lucy woman returned to New York with Marshall after the expulsion for "rest, peace and quiet." She said she was "completely disheartened," but added that she would return to Alabama next week to renew her fight to reenter the university.

The tensions developed over the Lucy case were indicated by the fact that three university officials and an Alabama Circuit Court judge testified in federal court she might be killed if she tried to return to the campus.

Further complicating the Lucy case was a damage suit by three construction workers and a truck driver for four million dollars.

The four civil damage suits, filed in a state Circuit Court Friday stemmed directly from charges made by the Lucy woman and her attorneys in the federal court action which were droppel on the day of the hearing, last Wednesday.

The Montgomery boycott began almost immediately after the Dec. 1 arrest of a Negro woman for refusing to take a seat in the section of a bus reserved for Negroes upon orders of a bus driver.

The transportation company's business fell off an estimated 60 per cent. Bus fares were hiked from 10 cents to 15 cents to meet the increasing deficit.

Finally, a grand jury in Montgomery, a town of 125,000 with a Negro population of 46,000 indicted 99 boycott leaders for violation of a 1921 law making it illegal for two or more people to conspire to hinder a business operation. Oiriginally, the law was adopted as the result of a labor union dispute. Hearings on these boycott cases will be held March 19.

Hudson Denies Saying NAACP 'Paying' Wife

BIRMINGHAM, Ala., March 3 (AP) — The husband of Pollie Hudson today denied saying she was a "guinea pig" of the National Assn. for the Advancement of Colored People, and received money from the NAACP.

Edward Hudson, a steelworker, issued a typewritten statement asserting he never made allegations attributed to him in a Circuit Court answer to his wife's petition for a divorce.

The 23-year-old Birmingham woman applied for admission to the University of Alabama but was rejected on the grounds of her "conduct and marital record."

"I deny that my wife is being paid by anyone to my knowledge," the statement said, "and this statement is wholly false and I hereby make public my denial of each and every allegation contained therein."

Morrell Montgomery, attorney for Hudson, said, "The statements in his answer to his wife's complaint are true according to the representations he made to me."

Montgomery said he may ask for a hearing in the case at which Hudson could be questioned under oath about the allegations.

Folsom Says Legislature Will Return

Governor Planning 2nd Special Session After School Study

By BOB INGRAM

Gov. James E. Folsom in a late afternoon press conference yesterday made it clear he intended to call another special session of the Alabama Legislature in the near future.

While not specifying the date of such a session, the governor indicated he would issue his summons shortly after a legislative interim committee completes its current investigation of the financial needs of schools.

"I'm going to call a special session," Folsom said flatly. "That has never been a subject of debate."

SPECULATION ENDED

This statement brought to an immediate end growing speculation such a session might not be called. This report had gained considerable strength after Finance Director Fuller Kimbrell had told the education committee earlier in the day that no new taxes would be needed to keep schools open this year.

When Folsom was asked to comment on the Kimbrell report, he said if no legislative session was needed for education then he would call one for "other matters."

When asked to elaborate, Folsom said he still favored the creation of several interim committees to study all branches of state government and make recommendations for improvements and streamlining their operations.

RESOLUTION KILLED

A resolution to create such recess committees was killed during the special session of the Legislature which ended last week.

Kimbrell, in his long anticipated revenue report to the committee, said it now appeared the existing school taxes would produce an estimated $102,258,000 during the current year.

And while this figure is some $9 million shy of education's $111 million appropriation, Kimbrell outlined a plan which he said would insure the full operation of the schools in the state.

Under his proposal, which would make another legislative session unnecessary, the Alabama Public School Corporation would borrow $3 million.

This loan, he said, would be used to supplement funds for the third quarter of the fiscal year and would be paid back before Oct. 1 as required by law.

8 PER CENT CUT

Under the Kimbrell plan, schools would be given an 8 per cent cut in funds during the fourth quarter.

"I can't take issue with these falls during the summer, which falls when few schools are in operation.

Even with the fourth quarter cut back, Kimbrell said, education approximately $14,600,000 or only $900,000 less than the same ideas got during the same period a year ago.

Ironically, the one estimate prefaced his report which was expected to be raised statement that he was con- was left untouched—the revenue expected from the new state withholding law. Revenue officials previously estimated this law could bring in only $1.5 million in additional revenue, and this same estimate was included in yesterday's report.

NO INCREASES

"I fully believe the schools can operate for nine months without any increase in taxes and without amending the appropriation bill," Kimbrell added.

Kimbrell also pointed out that with the $102 million in revenue the schools will still receive $17.6 million more than they received during the first nine months of last year.

Later the entire committee met with Gov. Folsom in an executive session where the school matters were discussed in detail.

At the conclusion, committee members said the governor had assured them he would call a special session if the committee so recommended.

During his press conference, Folsom also took time to answer criticism of the frequent special sessions of the Legislature.

"Although it is expensive to hold special elections and special sessions," Folsom noted, "it's the best liberty the American people ever bought."

Gov. Folsom Issues Plea For 'Calmness'

Gov. James E. Folsom yesterday called on white persons and Negroes in Alabama to "approach our problems in the spirit of calmness, understanding, debate and deliberations."

Although his statement was issued almost simultaneously with the report of the Montgomery grand jury which has been investigating the bus boycott here, the governor made no mention of the indictments returned against some 115 persons.

He noted, instead, the "worldwide attention which has been very much overplayed in regard to the recent University of Alabama situation."

That was a reference to the recent demonstrations at the University following the admittance of a Negro coed, Autherine Lucy.

The governor's statement said:

"According to press reports and communications recently received in the executive office, we have received worldwide attention which has been very much overplayed in regards to the recent University of Alabama situation.

"Naturally there is a fundamental difference between races and tribes since the beginning of time. There is a difference in the fundamental laws of nature regarding the animal kingdom.

"The great masses of Alabama Negroes do not fear their white brothers as much as they do some of their over - anxious leaders. Likewise the great masses of the white people do not fear the masses of the colored people as they fear some of the extremist white agitators.

"I say to the great masses of both races, let us approach our problems in the spirit of calmness, understanding, debate and deliberation.

"Especially do I call on each of us individually and collectively to approach our problems without fear of one race or the other race."

'BAMA LEGISLATURE FACES RACIAL ISSUE

School Money Bill Also Due At New Session

Commercial Appeal Thurs. 3-1-56

MONTGOMERY, Ala., Feb. 29.—(UP)—The Alabama Legislature begins its fifth special session Thursday faced with two tantamount problems—balancing a school appropriation bill and creating a bi-racial commirsion to study race issues in the state.

Gov. James E. Folsom and an interim committee that completed a two-week study of school financial needs this week are expected to recommend that the Legislature dispose of the school money bill before acting on other features of Governor Folsom's six-point program encompassed in the special call issued Tuesday.

Memphis Tenn.

The interim group gave Governor Folsom almost unanimous support to his proposed 25-member bi-racial commission recommended last week by the Governor and Alabama editors and publishers.

At least one legislator said he may oppose the commission plan.

Senator Albert Davis of Pickens County, an anti-administration lawmaker and pro-segregationist, said Wednesday, "I don't think the commission will help the race situation any, but if someone can show me where it will, I might support it."

Let The Boycott Succeed

P. 4-A

EDITOR, THE ADVERTISER — Mrs. Livingston of Tuscaloosa suggested car owners should ride the bus one day each week in order to help the buses. Please allow me to point out that this would be a mistake and only serve to prolong the Negro boycott, and give him an added feeling of importance. In hurting the buses he is working against his own best interests. The buses are more important to them than any one else. They are the real economic link between them and their jobs. You and I don't need them. I've been here for years and never been on one. In fact, they are a nuisance and a traffic hazard as far as I or any other motorist is concerned. So, the Negro by refusing to ride is undermining his own future job security and welfare. Let him find that out in his own slow time.

Entering Wedge

Editor, The Avertiser:

Is it to be understood that our U.S. Supreme Court expects us to forego all of our state and police regulations because they might abridge the privileges and immunities of some citizen? This court decision, if the current interpretation of the 14th Amendment strikes down all state and city regulations governing the sale of liquor, gambling, age of voting, intermarriage of races, divorce, regulations as to Sunday operation of business, as well as the regulation of schools. Are we ready to be stripped of our rights to say what and how we may enjoy the privileges of living?

This recent decision is only an entering wedge to break down every regulation of our police laws. Have the majority of our states, white and black, no inviolate privileges? The 14th Amendment was passed at bayonet point, and never before has been so construed. Let there be no violence, but let our legislature and Congress clarify the matter.

Committees on subversive activities should investigate and ascertain just how much of a hand has communism in this issue of segregation or integration through communistic front organigations—urging and advocating people to be for integration or segregation while at the same time urging other people to be against integration or segregation, so that in the end it will result in dissension, discord and eventual revolution. Parentage Aside, A Sound Idea

Advertiser P. 4-A Tues. 2-28-56

THE ADVERTISER has previously expressed its theory of the motives that underlay Gov. Folsom's meeting with the state's editors and publishers last week. But whatever the motive, there is still the question of the merit of the suggested bi-racial commission. This commission The Advertiser considers a sound undertaking.

Montgomery, Ala.

Editor James Mills of the Birmingham Post-Herald has aptly written:

A bi-racial commission such as Gov. Folsom has proposed could be a great help toward easing present race tensions.

Its success will depend on whether top leadership from both races will be willing to serve as commission members and whether they are given broad public support.

Obviously only men of sound judgment who have the respect and confidence of the people of their respective communities should be named.

Such men are sought by the governor and to find them he has asked the help of all Alabama publishers, editors and broadcasters. This newspaper not only welcomes suggestions from its readers but urgently requests that they be made promptly.

There is no problem of more importance confronting us so let's make sure that the best minds in the state are put to work on it.

To expect the commission to work miracles or over night to come up with all the answers would be a mistake.

To expect any progress at all if lines and issues as now drawn are held rigid would be foolish.

Greatest hope lies in the fact that basic goodwill between Southern Negroes and Southern whites has roots far too deep to have been destroyed by recent pressures which have been pushing us farther and farther apart.

If the issue of segregation can be shoved aside much good might come from the commission's efforts.

The alternative is increasing friction and dangerously deeper racial ill-will.

Certainly no thoughtful citizen of either race wants that.

Amid the existing turmoil, the very act of a commission of representative white and colored citizens discussing the grievous problem is desirable.

They may not agree on a compromise, but they can agree without compromise that the problem is one for orderly discussion, not riot and reprisal.

A bi-racial commission is, if nothing more, a symbol of reason. And reason is the thing in Alabama which is today in short supply.

FOLSOM CALLS NEWSPAPERMEN FOR HUDDLE ON RACE PROBLEM

Birm. Ala. Post-Herald 2-23-56

Gov. James E. Folsom has invited Alabama editors and publishers to meet with him at 10 a.m. Friday to discuss the current racial problems which have spread throught the state.

In his invitation, Folsom said: "strongly believe editors and publishers can play a most significant role in urging our people to act with vision and understanding in facing the racial problems that lie ahead. I believe that such a meeting to discuss these matters will be of great value in shaping a harmonious future."

Sen. Coleman calls for preservation of rights

News Thurs. 3-15-56

BY FRED TAYLOR, News staff writer

MONTGOMERY, Ala., March 15—Preservation of "the rights reserved by the constitution to our state and the people" was called for today by State Sen. James S. Coleman Jr. of Greene as he opened his campaign for associate justice of Alabama Supreme Court. He is running for place No. 2. P. 7

"Our courts are vitally important at all times in preserving peace and order," declared Sen. Coleman, Eutaw lawyer and veteran legislator, who was voted by the Capitol press corps as the "outstanding" member of the State Senate in the 1955 session.

Birm., Ala.

"Especially is this true today when we must depend upon our courts to preserve not only peace and order but our very way of life."

IN FORMALLY launching his campaign for the associate Supreme Court judgeship to which Justice James J. Mayfield Jr. is seeking renomination, Sen. Coleman said he had been "greatly encouraged by many friends throughout Alabama" to make the race.

"In seeking this high office, I am asking the voters to enable me to help see that the rights reserved by the Constitution to our state and to the people will be preserved," Sen. Coleman's statement added.

"And, incidentally, I want to fulfill a life-long ambition that began when I was a small boy in the companionship of my grandfather, the late Thomas Wilkes Coleman, who served on this high court from 1890 to 1898.

"A judge on the Supreme Court has a grave responsibility to the people in performing the duties of his office. If elected, I will do my best to serve the people of Alabama faithfully.

"The voters of Alabama may judge my fitness for this office by my record of several years in the State Senate and by my experience and practice for 22 years as a country lawyer. I respectively ask their approval."

Coleman, who was first elected to the State Senate in 1946, was elected in 1954 to serve a second term to represent Greene and Hale Counties in the Legislature. At the end of his first term, reporters covering the Legislature voted him "outstanding" freshman senator.

A World War II veteran, Sen. Coleman has engaged in general practice of law at Eutaw since being admitted to the Alabama bar in 1934. He is the son of James S. Coleman, who for 37 years was editor of The Greene County Democrat at Eutaw.

Sen. Coleman, who was graduated from the U. S. Naval Academy in 1927, subsequently attended University of Alabama law school. He saw active duty in the Naval Reserve during World War II from 1942 to 1945.

Newsman Says Folsom Moderating Influence On Crisis In Alabama

By ROBERT S. BIRD
Of The New York Herald Tribune

[The following will appear in the New York Herald and several other major U. S. dailies this morning. It is printed simultaneously in The Advertiser by courtesy of the Herald Tribune. Alabama newspapermen will be amused by some of the hooch in Reporter Bird's study, but it is nevertheless an exceptional piece of work.—Ed.]

MONTGOMERY, Ala., March 17 — The most relaxed man in the whole state of Alabama today is the man around whom the storm of the race conflict beats most furiously. Gov. James E. Folsom, who is remembered in the North as "Kissin' Jim" and is known to all hereabouts as "Big Jim," remains totally unruffled by the winds that shake the colonnaded Capitol of Alabama.

While the outside world looks in alarm on recent events in Alabama and his own citizens cry for action from him, "Big Jim" sits enigmatically on Olympus. Or more exactly, sits most of the time in his office in the Capitol, and much of the time on the grassy bank of his favorite fishing stream.

He was just as imperturbable the other night sitting in the Executive Mansion, discussing the Alabama situation with this correspondent over champagne and T-bone steaks. In fact, he was so relaxed that when time came to sit down to dinner he unnotched his belt several inches and attacked his meat in shirt-sleeves from the lordly Chief Executive's chair at the head of the state dining table.

FOLSOM

BIRD

Mrs. Folsom, an attractive and thoroughly charming woman, had chided the Governor for insisting that our small dinner party of four (including the Governor's executive secretary) be served in the state dining room. The table was big enough to seat a regiment of hussars and the chandelier, had it been fully lighted, could have illuminated Times Square.

She suggested that the family dining room would be cosier. But the Governor overruled her with indulgent wave of hand as if to suggest that the presence of this interviewer rendered the occasion at least a semi-state affair, even if not full dress. So we merely pitched our conversation to a higher register in order to maintain communication with the vivacious Mrs. Folsom down at the far end of the table. We dined informally in the midst of elegance.

GARGANTUA

Gov. Folsom's height is well known — six feet eight inches. But that might as well read eight feet six inches because when a person of ordinary height stands beside "Big Jim" a couple of extra feet difference in his height wouldn't seem to make much difference. He is a startlingly big man.

Advertiser

Give such a man the personality of an overgrown, slow-talking, hard-to-get-mad country boy with lots of hidden savvy and the first lineaments of his portrait appear. Enhance that with a political genius capable of engaging the fiercest loyalties and deepest enmities; of shrugging off abject defeats, personal contumely, back-firing razzle - dazzle political stunts, and rancor toward unrelenting enemies, some high lights begin to emerge. P. 4-A Touch up the picture with the hint of a brooding, introspective look in the gray eyes, and a habit of lapsing into silences which he never seems to notice —and which he finally breaks by picking up the thread of conversation where he left off. Then dress this loungy giant in well-tailored clothes, invest him with legendary personal misdeeds both bizarre and horrendous, make his political maneuvers often seem suicidal and wholly inexplicable, give him a cat's ability to land on his feet—and you have a recognizable sketch of "Big Jim" Folsom, the so-called enigma of Alabama.

'HOGWASH,' QUOTH HE

At this moment, he would appear to be the most unpopular person in the state of Alabama. It all happened since integration became an issue, and his unpopularity seems to extend even to those ordinarily loyal constituents in the rural areas who voted him into office in the fall of 1954.

With the people of the state demanding piteously that he do something to help stem the "black tide" which threatens to engulf them, he is accused by some extremists of inaction so flagrant as to warrant impeachment. He speaks with disrespect for the white Citizens Councils movement, which is organizing throughout the state to fight integration, and a result is that Folsom people are plotting his downfall. He gives a mild rebuke to Negro agitators and the cry goes up that he is really a "nigger lover" — the vilest label that can be pinned on a man here.

The desperate legislators, seeking to appease the folks back home, put through nullification and interposition legislation, along with other measures so wild as to cause even them to smile a little nervously, and the Governor says, "Hogwash," then goes fishing.

After six weeks of traveling around Alabama, encountering passion, fear, hatred and frustration in abundance, it was quite an experience to sit down and talk about it for four hours with the most relaxed man in Alabama.

IT AIN'T GONNA RAIN

Either he's all wrong and Alabama is in a mighty bad fix, or he's a lot right and Alabama is safe; safe for itself and safe for the Union, with certain painless modifications of viewpoints still to be attained, perhaps.

At any rate, the Governor's alleged inaction is now ended. This week he intends to go out among "the people" and tell them that there is no real crisis at all here in Alabama.

He's going to tell them that there is nothing to wrry about, to watch carefully against white folks trying to stir up trouble, to calm down and sit tight and let him handle matters in his own way. He'll give his personal report to the people in his own way in the courthouse towns of all the 67 counties, he says, and he won't even talk about his own little campaign to win office as a Democratic national committeeman. He's in that race against a couple of formidable candidates, including the author of Alabama's nullification law.

POPULARITY CONTEST

In short, the Governor is about to go to his people with aid and comfort in their frustration. He is one of them and they know it. And if their aroused passions are as elemental as the good earth itself, so is his unworriedness. At least, so he suggests. Wise in all the tricks of Southern stump politicking, "Big Jim" may yet quiet down this wave of race hatred. If he does, it will be another Folsom miracle.

The experts laugh at the idea. They say he's too late; this time he has fallen flat on his face for good. He shrugs with unconcern. He may not win the committeeman post because, as he says, the wave of race hatred will not have passed until nearer the Fall election. And this committeeman showdown is to be in May. But he will draw fire away from other Folsom candidates, and away from his own legislative program. Later, he is convinced, all misunderstanding will have passed. "I've been through it all before," he says, with weary recollection.

LET 'EM BELLOW

"Let them spleen their vent, or vent their spleen, or however you say it," he adds. "All I want is for the people to speak.

The Governor has just launched what he considers to be an ingenius bit of strategy. He has called for a constitutional convention to "legalize" the "hogwash" of nullification and interposition. As it happens, the Governor has long wanted a constitutional convention for altogether other reasons, largely to further his own state legislative program, which includes reapportionment of certain counties which are generally anti-Folsom. The Legislature in the past had no intention of giving him his constitutional convention because it feels that might open the door to all kinds of Folsom law-making mischief.

HUMBUG MEDICINE?

But now they are feeling the sting of a real needle, because the Governor has got a very simple stump-talk rationalization for the convention. Nobody understands interposition anyway, and the rural folks least of all. They are backing on the theory that any medicine is better than none. But here comes "Big Jim" saying that it is humbug medicine, and the real cure is a constitutional convention "to make every thing legal.' He pretends to be surprised that legislators are nettled.

"In such a convention they can even see-seed (sic) from the union," he explains. They can authorize me to call out the National Guard against the Federal troops. Like I say, there's been so much hell-raising I thought they would want to do it."

"Why," he says with a gleam in his eye, "they could require the Governor to take an oath promising not to support the Constitution of the United States. Do you know that all the state and county and local officials of Alabama are bound by oath to support the Federal government? Only a constitutional convention can release them from that oath. Let the people speak in convention assembled!"

'SAM HOUSTON DIDN'T'

Would the Governor accept release of his oath to the Federal government in such a convention?

"Sam Houston didn't he grins, "but all the other Confederate governors did."

"But would you?"

"Sam Houston didn't."

And the Governor's going to point out to his stump audiences another "important point." They seem to have overlooked the fact that the State of Alabama has not been made, up to now a party to any school integration suit. So why the rush to fret about the integration matter? And why hasn't it been made a party to such a suit. Well, the Governor's going to call attention to the fact that he's kept in pretty close touch with some of the Negro leaders who are causing trouble elsewhere in that respect.

SCOTCH AND SODA

Nothing has caused so much heart-sickness among the Folsom following as the story that went the rounds to the effect that last November he drank Scotch whisky with Congressman Adam Clayton Powell, New York's Negro Congressman. The Governor will have to meet that accusation at the courthouse steps of Alabama, and it is a good guess he will explain that Rep. Powell is one of those Negro leaders with whom it was important for him to talk—even in his office in the Executive Manison.

And there will be still other points to be hammered home. How come that people are getting so fussed about integration that they are blaming good Democrats on the Supreme Court for their troubles when the fact is the Republican President and his Republican Attorney General are responsible for prosecution of the integration suits?

The Governor, moreover, will appeal to the patriotic impulses of his sore-tried supporters, for they are just as willing to die for their country as they are to die for Dixie, and American traditions are unassailable even here, where one is assumed to be include segregation in the South.

He will hit out against "mobocracy" and take a firm stand for democratic law and order. And he will say these things standing up there on the platform in a white suit which makes him look even bigger than the giant he is. A man of the people, or perhaps a father symbol for the temporarily confused. And they will listen to this man who rode to victory in his last campaign on the emblazoned but folksy slogan, "Y'All Come!"—meaning to his inauguration as Governor.

HYPNOTIZED BIRD

It's almost hypnotic listening to him at home giving this picture of himself on the stump; sitting in his chair with head hunched down between his huge shoulders, speaking slowly as if forging in his mind the exactly right image of the platform scene that he counts on for redemption.

As he talks, Mrs. Folsom, mother of four of his six children, girlishly plump, sparkling of eye, eager of manner, listens to pater familias with pleasure in her gaze and occasionally gentle dissent. Her candidate for Democratic presidential nominee is not his. His is Harry S. Truman, period. If Mr. Truman doesn't run, then the Governor will cross that bridge when he comes to it.

The Governor was a widower when he met Mrs. Folsom in 1946 while on a speaking tour. In those days he always kissed every pretty girl he could, but he asked this one, the former Jamelle Moore to marry him. She did two years later, and it is plain that there is great warmth between them.

This may be "hogwash," but the truth is the Alabama race situation seemed a lot less inflammatory to this correspondent after the session with "Big Jim" Folsom. This much is certain, he is by design or not, a moderating influence on the crisis in Alabama.

Mr. Graves And The Atlanta Riot

Journal & Guide 3/16

IN our issue dated February 25 the JOURNAL AND GUIDE closed an editorial on the needless and ruthless agitation of the race question by some newspapers in the South, with a statement of which the following was part:

Sat. 3-17-56 Norfolk, Va.

"In 1906 John Temple Graves used his Evening News to create the terrible Atlanta riot. There was not one scintilla of truth in the editorials and news articles carried for days in Graves' newspaper. The result was one of the most horrible race riots in American history."

MR. JOHN TEMPLE GRAVES, II, who is columnist for the Birmingham Post-Herald, has informed us that his father was not editor of the Evening News at the time of the Atlanta riot. He states that his father had disagreed with the Evening News on its policy months before the riot and had joined the editorial staff of the Atlanta Georgian, which was a moderate newspaper.

The JOURNAL AND GUIDE's authority for the reference was the volume, Liberalism In The South. by VIRGINIUS DABNEY. The book was published in 1932 by the University of North Carolina Press. The reference to MR. GRAVES was also carried in The Mind of the South, by W. J. CASH, which was published at a later date.

The error which associated MR. GRAVES, SR. with the editorship of the Atlanta Evening News seems to have occurred somewhere in the research done for MR. DABNEY'S book. MR. GRAVES, II, informed us that when this error was brought to MR. DABNEY'S attention, he made a prompt apology and correction which was published in several Southern newspapers. MR. CASH had died.

The JOURNAL AND GUIDE was unaware of either the error or of MR. DABNEY'S amends for it.

The JOURNAL AND GUIDE adds its own regrets and apologies to MR. GRAVES, II.

We hope that this clears the atmosphere with reference to the Atlanta riot and absolves MR. GRAVES, senior, from any connection with the personalities and the newspaper which caused it.

Boycotts, work law capture attention

News Birm. Ala. 3-28-56

Secondary boycotts and the right-to-work law were two of the main topics at the Southern States Industrial Relations conference at the Tutwiler Hotel today.

Desmond A. Barry, Houston, Tex., president of the Galveston Truck Lines, was on hand for the session.

At present he is engaged in secondary boycott litigation in Oklahoma City over his refusal to sign a contract with the Teamsters Union without a NLRB election.

His company has sued 21 trucking companies in Oklahoma City who refused to handle goods brought into the city by Galveston Truck Lines. Their refusal is based on the "hot cargo" clause in their contract, whereby they agreed not to handle business from any company the Teamsters Union termed unfair.

HOYT P. STEELE, president Benjamin Electric Manufacturing Co., Des Plaines, Ill., has been a spokesman on labor issues before several congressional commitees on behalf of the Chamber of Commerce of the U. S. on federal labor law proposals.

This year he is chairman of the Chamber's special Committee on Secondary Boycotts and has made many talks to industrial groups on this subject.

Eighteen states, including 10 in the South, now have right-to-work laws, Jonathan C. Gibson, vice president and general counsel, Santa Fe Railway System, said.

He has long been interested in the right of a person to work whether he belongs to a union or not. He contends the right-to-work law is as much a protection to the union man as to the non-union man.

"This law protects an employer from discharging an employe for being a member of a union as well as the non-union man from being barred from employment because of a 'closed shop' contract," he said.

WILLIAM B. BARTON, general counsel for the U. S. C. of C, said labor unions are making a concerted attack on the right-to-work laws on the national as well as the local level, and declared that unless business men are as alert as the union and as active this law may be nullified by amendment of the Taft-Hartley law.

Headquarters of 51 unions are in Washington, and they are concentrating on obtaining an amendment to Taft-Hartley to make any state right-to-work laws unworkable, he said.

Shown in the accompanying photo are, left to right: C. B. Mahin, Chicago, labor relations counsel; T. Maynard Smith, Atlanta, labor relations counsel; William D. Sims, Montgomery, director industrial relations of the Alabama State Chamber of Commerce, and Benjamin R. Miller, Washington, industrial relations director, American Trucking Assn.

NAACP Has No Security In Numbers

EDITOR, THE ADVERTISER — Next year the people of the United States are going to elect a president by a majority vote. Which means that regardless of whether he is a Democrat or Republican he will be elected by democratic rule and will be duty bound, according to political ethics, to render unto a majority that which is theirs.

Mon. 12-24-56

We in the South by a large majority want segregation in our public schools and public places and it's about time that this issue was discussed from the speaker's stand. By both presidential candidates, especially the Democrat.

There are not enough NAACP members and advocates of non-segregation to defeat either candidate for the presidency and for this reason alone if for no other it is now the time to settle for once and all time this political football, regardless of any ruling handed down by that old gang of men appointed for life to do nothing if they choose to do nothing; meddle if they choose to meddle, and reverse themselves because of a constitutional error, known as our Supreme Court. They sit there like a bunch of gowned angels guessing.

I wonder if they know that all of our major laws are taken from the Bible and this same book says that it is a sin and a shame to mix the races, and while it doesn't specifically define the word mix I submit it means overall mix. Mix in our schools and other public places and for the gutter-minded type I submit to mix the blood.

In closing I'd like to warn that the loyalty pledge in our Southern states is designed to defeat the wants, desires and needs of the South.

The Democrats won't do anything for our voters because they don't have to, and the Republicans won't do anything or can't do anything because we won't let them. ARTHUR CLEMENT.

The Fight Against TB

Editor, The Advertiser:

I am taking the liberty of asking for space in which to thank your readers for their generous contributions to the fight against tuberculosis during the 1955 Christmas Seal Sale.

To all of you who bought and used Christmas Seals, may I say that the public spirit you have shown in supporting efforts to improve the health of this community gives me great hopes for the future. A civilization in which people give voluntarily for the benefit of all is strong and healthy.

To those who have not yet contributed, may I point out that TB can strike in any home, rich or poor, and wherever it strikes it brings tragic upheaval to family life. Despite the great progress that has been made in treating TB, too often it brings death. When you buy Christmas Seals you are paying for services to help keep tuberculosis away from your home and your family.

Happy New Year to all.

'An Unorthodox View Of The Civil War'

RECENTLY, I received from one of my friends in the District of Columbia, the News Letter Of The Civil War Round Table. In reading this News Letter, I came across a very interesting item entitled, "An Unorthodox View of the Civil War." It contains the substance of a talk Dr. Otto Eisenschiml made before the Round Table, and it will be, I am sure, of interest to my readers, whose views are probably quite different from Dr. Eisenschiml. The good doctor said that Nathan B. Forrest was the best general North or South, and that George H. Thomas and Fitz John Porter, whom he rated below Forrest, were the top Union soldiers. I quote the following from Dr. Eisenschiml's talk:

JONES

"With no clear-cut criteria, but using results which the generals achieved in relation to the forces at their command and considering the opposition with which they were confronted, Dr. Eisenschiml gave this as his own lineup:

"UNION ARMY: 4 stars, none; 3 stars, none; 2 stars, George H. Thomas and Fitz John Porter; 1 star, McClellan and Grant; and minus 1 star, Burnside and Halleck.

Montgomery

"CONFEDERATE ARMY: 4 stars, Nathan B. Forrest; 3 stars, Jackson; 2 stars, Longstreet and Joe Johnston; 1 star, Lee and Beauregard, and minus 1 star, Braxton Bragg.

"Forrest, his mind unspoiled and unsullied by education, and with a superior native intelligence, did more with the forces at his command than any other general, Confederate or Union, the speaker declared. His victory over vastly greater numbers at Brice's Cross Roads was a classic.

"As for Jackson, the ex-VMI professor with a knack for physics understood perfectly that the Confederacy could not win by matching its resources in combat with those of the North. And he waged war accordingly. Stonewall used a simple formula of physics—mass times velocity squared—to win the victories he did. When he either could not, or failed, to use this formula, as at White Oak Swamp and Cedar Mountain, he failed miserably. But Dr. Eisenschiml gave him a three star rating, topping Longstreet and Joe Johnston and two full rungs on the ladder above Lee and Old Bory.

"FEW Union generals ever went into battle on even terms with the enemy; they generally had great superiority. Thus, said the speaker, it is difficult to evaluate their abilities without knowing what they could have done if confronted with equal or greater forces. But, concerning George H. Thomas (the Rock of Chicamauga), he said, there is no debate. As for Fitz John Porter, Dr. Eisenschiml admitted that perhaps he was prejudiced because of his long study of the man. But, he asserted, Fitz Porter did go against a superior force at Gaines' Mill and defeated the Lee-Jackson combination. And he did the same thing at Malvern Hill. Two stars also for Porter.

"The speaker did not dwell on Longstreet and Joe Johnston, but ranked them above Lee and Beauregard. Lee's great fault, he declared, was that he did not know when to stop fighting. He was a fighter through and through and when he heard the Rebel Yell and the guns booming ("it is well that war is so terrible or we should grow too fond of it") he threw everything into the fray and held on. A notable example of this fault, Dr. Eisenschiml said, was Gettysburg—which should not have occurred in the first place. In any event, Lee should have withdrawn after winning the first day's battle. "When Lee was good he was wonderful. When he was bad he was awful." Another failing of the Rebel chieftain was a tendency to work without maps. Our guest excoriated Lee, the master engineer, for not having maps even of the suburbs of Richmond. Confederate forces got hopelessly lost around White Oak Swamp for lack of direction, and at the Wilderness in May, 1864, Lee lost a great opportunity of breaking Grant with Longstreet's attack simply because he had no maps to show the key road. But the "great man in gray" received high praise for other qualities which kept the Confederacy together and provided a popular figure around whom her forces could rally.

"Just as Jackson had the only clear idea in the South of how to wage war against the North, so McClellan was the only federal general who had a good plan for defeat of the Confederacy. But the Little Napoleon, on the basis of his battles with the Confederates, rated only one star on Dr. Eisenschiml's list.

"ULYSSES GRANT may have been a great general, but we have no way of knowing, said the speaker. Except at Belmont and on the first day at Shiloh did he ever have to face the enemy on anything approaching even terms. If a 200-pound boxer, well fed and with the finest equipment, lambasts into submission a hungry and meagerly equipped 100-pounder, how do you rate the 200-pounder? Grant was just that. He whipped Lee, using the equivalent of Lee's army in doing so, but does that prove him to be a master strategist and a great general? Dr. Eisenschiml did not think so. One star for the little man in the slouch hat.

Before getting into his rating of generals, Dr. Eisenschiml discussed some of the great flaws in the strategy and thinking of both the North and South. Some examples:

"1. The federal capital should have been moved at the beginning of the war to Philadelphia or some other northern point. Washington was surrounded by Confederate territory, and its defense immobilized for four years forces which could have helped end the war quickly. The Confederates made the same mistake by moving their capital from Montgomery to Richmond—in the front lines —and trying to defend that point.

"2. Alexander Stephens had the only worthwhile Confederate idea about how to finance the war—by storing cotton in England and doling it out as the market required. But Davis' idea that holding and hoarding cotton in the South would bring Europe into the war on the side of the Confederacy was allowed to prevail.

"3. Lincoln had no military ability, but had plenty of common sense. Davis had ample military knowledge, but not an iota of common sense. Their combined errors made the waging of war a miserable affair on both sides.

"4. Neither the North nor the South perceived the value of propaganda, and both lost invaluable opportunities in this respect. The South, for example, could have capitalized tremendously on the North's "inhumane" action of shutting off from the Confederacy supplies of medicine, such as quinine and morphine.

"Now that he had delivered himself of his 'unorthodox view' of the war, Dr. Eisenschiml said members of the CWRT could go back to the conventional heroes and legendary events of the sixties."

Engelhardt Will Try Again

A STUDY of weekly newspapers throughout the state indicates there will be very little local legislation to cultter up the special session of the Legislature which convenes Jan. 3.

All local bills, that is those applying only to a county or city, must be advertised in a newspaper in the county which they affect, and as of now very few such bills have been advertised.

The main reason for this is obvious — with three sessions already under their belts, most lawmakers have long since taken care of their local bills.

However, several bills of some significance are being advertised by lawmakers in this section of the state.

Three measures relating to the segregation problem will apparently be introduced early in the next session — two from Marengo County, one from Macon County.

Sen. Sam Engelhardt Jr., of Macon, has advertised a measure relating to teacher tenure — it would authorize the county board of education to fire a teacher without public hearing if such teacher was a member or active in any move aimed at abolishing racial segregation.

Actually, the measure is aimed directly at Negro teachers in Macon County who might be members of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People.

Engelhardt introduced this measure during the regular session, and it passed in both houses. But Gov. Folsom vetoed it at 11:57 p.m. Sept. 2, only three minutes before the Legislature was to adjourn, leaving Engelhardt insufficient time to have the bill passed over the veto.

Meanwhile, Sen. E. O. Eddins of Marengo, will also introduce an identical bill, and will also introduce a companion measure which would require all organizations in the county to register their membership. This would include every such group except churches.

The purpose of this latter bill is easy to discern — the NAACP would be required to register its members, and membership in this group would be sufficient evidence to use in firing teachers as provided in the other bill.

Sen. Neil Metcalf of Geneva, is also advertising a bill of some importance — it would authorize a reregistration of all voters in that county.

Geneva County has long been frought with alleged election irregularities — a number of indictments came from a Grand Jury investigation following the May 1954 primary, but there were no convictions. Metcalf hopes his bill will serve to correct this situation.

Other local bills now being advertised include one to authorize the employment of an additional deputy sheriff in Bullock County, another to create a court of common pleas in Russell County, and a third relating to the filling of vacancies on the city commission in Prattville.

IN NULLIFICATION RESOLUTION

Folsom Charges Alabama Legislature Violated Oath To U.S. Constitution

Gov. James E. Folsom charged yesterday in a press conference that members of the Alabama Legislature "individually and collectively" violated their oath to uphold the U.S. Constitution when they passed the Nullification Resolution.

The governor, back in his office after a three-day stumping tour of Northwest Alabama, resumed his insistence that the Legislature "let the people decide at the polls" whether they favor nullification.

"The only way we can nullify the Supreme Court decision is through a convention assembled by the people," Folsom said. "And that resolution they passed calling the decision null and void is actually null and void itself."

On another subject, Gov. Folsom said Sen. Estes Kefauver's upset victory over Adlai Stevenson in the Minnesota presidential primary Tuesday "means he's (Kefauver) strong in the midwest."

"I don't know what he's doing, but if I was him I'd keep on doing it," Folsom said regarding Kefauver's victory.

Asked if he thought the outcome of the Minnesota Primary had dimmed Stevenson's chances, Folsom said, "According to the papers he's not the front runner any more."

On the same subject, Folsom ddclared emphatically he would support the Democratic Party's nominee, whoever he might be, "with every ounce of strength I've got."

Gov. Folsom, returning to the segregation subject, also repeated his earlier statement that he would call another special session of the Legislature if no action was taken during the current session on his plan for a convention.

"I want to gently remind them that they've established a platform and they ought to carry it out," Folsom said. "I want them to let the people decide."

Integration Vexed Jurist Bullet Killed

MONTGOMERY, Ala., April 4 (UP)—James J. Mayfield, 45, an associate state Supreme Court justice of Alabama who was quoted as having a "devil of a time over segregation," was found shot to death today.

The judge's body, a .22 caliber pistol clasped in his hand, was discovered in his apartment by a maid. Authorities officially ruled it suicide.

But Gov. James E. Folsom, when informed of Mayfield's death, immediately sent Public Safety Director Bill Lyerly to the scene. Both Lyerly and Coroner M. M. Kirkpatrick agreed that the death was obviously suicide, but Folsom ordered a thorough investigation.

Officers said no suicide note was left and they could give no reason for the action.

But the maid, Lorine Lewis, 28, said the judge had been despondent lately and appeared worried over his race for re-election.

Miss Lewis said Mayfield told her he was "having a devil of a time over segregation, and that some man was trying to get his job."

The judge, the youngest member of the Supreme Court, was running for re-election in the May 1 Democratic primary against state Sen. James S. Coleman Jr.

Negroes Want Equality, Not School Integration

We have read the papers and have heard parents say, "I don't want my children to be educated with children of the opposite race." Both Negroes and whites have said it.

It is not that we, the children of the Negro race, want to go to school with the whites, but we do want equality. We are not able to take the same vocations as they because we do not have the proper facilities.

In most cases when white girls or boys finish high school, they can immediately get good jobs typing, bookkeeping, etc. These experiences help them immensely in college. But the Negro has to wait until he enters college before he can handle a typewriter or learn to keep books.

In colonial days the Negro did not receive an education, but as times passe he found it possible to put schools int operation and Negroes were satisfied wit what they had. But now we are in a stag where different vocations are very neces sary in getting a good job.

I believe if we had equality in our education and a lot of other things, we would be satisfied and not worried with the talk of integration. I also believe that with God's help we will find what we are seeking for, equality!

Black Belt Solons Thump Folsom For Remarks On Reshuffling Bypass

By BOB INGRAM

Gov. James E. Folsom's charge yesterday that some legislators are using the race question as a "smoke screen" to dodge the question of reapportionment prompted sharp retorts from Black Belt senators.

Folsom issued a statement in which he likened the opposition group to a "small, tired rear guard of oldline Whigs."

"I said at the beginning of this session that some of the last remaining Whigs in the United States who are in our Legislature, would once more bring up questions about our colored brethren — as they always do when reapportionment is mentioned—and try to tell the people how bad Big Jim is" Folsom said. "That has happened and it is just a smoke screen"

Sen. Albert Davis of Pickens County, in reply to the governor said he was "indeed sorry that some of the elected officials of Alabama have not shown the caliber of leadership as those in other states."

"We are glad the people and the Legislature don't look as lightly on the race issue as the governor does," Davis continued. "In my opinion it is the most important issue before the people and the Legislature in 50 years."

Sen. James Coleman of Greene noted that "the governor has ignored the segregation question long enough and we are in need of his leadership on that question."

Sen. E. O. Eddins of Marengo also spoke out in rebuttal to Folsom's statement, claiming the governor's accusations were "untrue and without any reason."

School Needs Probed

A joint hearing on the needs of education resumed yesterday before the House Ways and Means Committee and the Senate Finance and Taxation Committee, with members apparently looking with considerable favor on a plan offered by Rep. Karl Harrison of Shelby.

Harrison has introduced a bill in the House which would authorize the Public School Corporation to borrow enough money to make up the difference between acutual revenue collected this year and the $111 million appropriation.

No action was taken on the bill by the House committee, but later in the day an identical bill was introduced in the Senate by two administration leaders, Sens. E. L. Roberts of Etowah and Broughton Lamberth of Tallapoosa.

Yesterday's hearing for the most part was devoted to testimony from Dr. Austin R. Meadows, state school superintendent; Dr. Ralph Draughon, A. P. I. president and other educational leaders.

The measure had been sponsored by Rep. Otto Simon of Mobile, who has been highly critical of the manner School Superintendent Austin R. Meadows has allocated funds to the various county schools.

Voice Of The People

White Citizens Council Member Defends Course

Of course we have had and are going to have a great deal of pro and con statements and debate about the current issue of segregation, and the ruling handed down by nine men regarding their interpretation of our Constitution which our forefathers inscribed as a "pattern" for living a clean, moral and law-abiding life as a "free" citizen.

I have no bone to pick with the Negro. I have worked with them and had them to work for me. I have never mistreated or caused them any embarrassment because of their color, but that doesn't mean I want them to eat at my table, or even worse, to marry my daughter or any of the other things that would bring about a condition intolerable to me or, for that matter, them. They do not want, excepting those with some smattering of so-called education, these things any more than I. We white people have given them the opportunity to come out of bondage and have indeed aided and abetted them on their way. However, I can't help but think of the days when Noah, by God's own admonition, placed a curse on their sire, Ham, for his disobedience, and that to me is enough to keep separate our paths of life.

I refer you to a recent news story for this reason. Why do you refuse to print the statements per se of one Ace Carter who made such a fine talk and enlightened those present of so many facts that only seem to go wantonly forgotten? I notice you seem to print only the things which are of no direct criticism to you or your paper. You are supposed to be a paper free to support the issues of the people or not support them. You are a Southern managed newspaper. However, I doubt your heritage from your point of views. I am a member of the White Citizens Council in East Lake and promise to lend my support in a legal and democratic way to its tenets. I hope that some day I might have the opportunity of being among those who have played an infinitesimal part in the preservation and ongoing of white supremacy so necessary for the carrying out of the plan written many, many years ago by men so much more capable than you and I. Nullification

In Alabama In 1833 Involved Indian Race Relations; State Made It Stick

By Tom Johnson

ALABAMA House members had a clear precedent to guide them this week when, swinging the instrument of Nullification, they voted to nullify all segregation rulings of the U. S. Supreme Court.

The first time the state challenged the federal government nearly 124 years ago was also over a racial matter, but it concerned Indians, not Negroes. And the state won a resounding victory.

JOHNSON

Prior to 1832, Alabamians who were later to lead and inflame the Nullificationists were staunch supporters of the Andrew Jackson Administration and all of his policies, including the protectionist tariff struggle with South Carolina and Vice President John C. Calhoun.

Most of the state's leaders sided with Jackson and advised the people to "confide in the ordinary means" when a disagreement arose between state and federal governments.

Not long after this, however, Gov John Gayle, a warm personal friend of Jackson, and virtually all of the state were literally up in arms over the government's handling of Indians in Alabama.

Under a treaty with the government, the Creek Indians gave up all of their lands east of the Mississippi as a tribe but were allowed to settle as individuals. Until surveys were completed and the individual Indians selected the land they want, the federal government was to remove all white intruders, except that the few who had planted crops were allowed to remain until harvest time.

What had been Indian territory became nine counties of Alabama, and the state, with federal approval, asserted jurisdiction over the area.

Approximately 30,000 whites settled in the nine counties and the Indians bombarded Washington with protests. The government attempted to eject a few of the more notorious settlers and, in the process, one settler was killed.

Governor Protests

Gov. Gayle fired off a letter to Secretary of War Lewis Cass, protesting an "unconstitutional interference" in the state's affairs, but the government was not swayed.

When the commandant of Fort Mitchell refused to surrender the officers and men involved in the shooting of the settler, Gayle wrote another letter in which he said he was "desirous of avoiding all collision" with the government and expressing confidence that the settler's murderers would be delivered for trial.

Though Gov. Gayle urged calmness, mass meetings were held and men offered their services in case of armed conflict. Moore's History of Alabama notes that even a New York company volunteered to help out.

Suddenly, Alabama's Washington delegation became aware of the dangers of violence and gained assurance from the government that no more settlers would be removed. After many conferences, President Jackson appointed Francis Scott Key to go to Tuscaloosa, the state capital then, and negotiate a settlement.

Alabama Prevails

IN THE settlement, Gov. Gayle gained practically everything he had sought, including the right to indict the soldiers for murder.

In reporting to the legislature, Gayle declared the settlement preserved the constitutional rights of the people and asserted the supremacy of civil over military authority.

And that ended the controversy itself. However, there were reverberations long after. For one thing, it seemed to lessen the state's former ardor for the Union and, combined with other incidents, finally led to Secession.

Another enduring effect was to aggravate the political division between North Alabama, which denounced Governor Gayle, and South Alabama, which supported him.

Where Is Folsom In The Segregation Fight?

EDITOR, THE ADVERTISER — As an avid reader of The Advertiser and one who enjoys your editorial page comment, I have been waiting for someone to point out the reason or reasons for our worthy Governor's shy stand on the Supreme Court ruling abolishing school segregation. Governors in other southern states have spoken out in one way or another, usually taking a stand against having segregation forced upon the white and colored citizens of their state. Virginia's legislature, with the backing of Governor Stanley, has paved the way for a referendum upon the school issue, to provide for state funds to be used to pay tuition for pupils wishing to attend private schools should integration be accomplished in the state.

Yet our Gov. Folsom, no shy bird at all and one who has never seemed scared of the federal boys—for instance the asinine row over the use of National Guard planes for his football flights last fall—has been extremely reticent on the segregation conflict. If memory serves correctly, he has said that the Supreme Court edict must be obeyed, and that law is law. For one who has flaunted, twisted, and openly defied other laws—i.e., yes Ole Jim stole, but it was for the good of you folks—Big Jim's hesitancy in this segregation matter seems indeed strange. He has taken no lead to preserve southern traditions and his lack of conviction has served to discourage many who should like to keep separate but equal school facilities.

Big Jim's plush treatment of the visiting Negro Congressman Powell of New York while the Congressman was on a speaking tour stop in Montgomery caused many people to wonder as to the Governor's leanings in the racial issues sprouting in the Southland today.

For want of a more authoritative answer for the Governor's failure to speak out on the segregation issue, it is my belief that he is planning to run for the U.S. Senate in 1958 and wants to use the Negro vote in Alabama to help propel him to Washington. If he could be propelled to the Senate now and guarantee to stay there it might be a good thing for his home state. However, he will continue as governor and then use his apparent support of the Supreme Court integration ruling to make hay with the Negro voters of the state and there will be plenty of them by 1958 if present trends continue.

It is no secret that something can be done to delay or prevent school integration in Alabama, but something must be done soon. Several measures now before the state legislature provide means for circumventing the Supreme Court's ruling. With assistance and encouragement from Gov. Folsom — still a powerful figure in the state regardless of the loss of power that your paper tried to imply from the passage of Amendment 20 in the December referendum—a satisfactory measure can be enacted in time to have a ready solution to the lawsuits which may soon be forthcoming to force compliance with integration.

Virginia has shown that public opinion is strong now and that the majority of southern citizens favor continued school segregation. As a sign of things to come in this election year, the recent rulings by the ICC abolishing segregated waiting rooms for public carriers engaged in interstate commerce are but the forerunner of other far-reaching federal moves to eliminate segregation.

As an Auburn junior who has known many Negroes in the South, the North, and in the Army, I believe that one must judge them as individuals. But when their so-called progressive leaders of both races force them into our schools en masse then it is time to call a halt. Personally I don't mind going to school with Negroes. I have done so in the Army and don't feel contaminated and hope I didn't contaminate them. My reason for resisting integration is that many young Negro and white children will be the ones to bear the brunt of suddenly enforced integration. The effects on white and colored alike might well destroy any feeling of brotherhood that has built up through the years.

Mr. Thornton's Biblical Interpretations Questioned

EDITOR, THE ADVERTISER — Forgetting for the moment his gratuitous offense against good taste, let it be admitted that Mr. Fred Thornton in his Sunday Advertiser-Journal column delivered himself of some amazing and highly original "interpretations" of Bible characters. He will not be surprised to know that most students of the Bible will—to put it mildly—passionately disagree with him.

Consider, for example, Mr. Thornton's opinion of the prophet Jeremiah as "the most unadorned punk in the Bible" and "the original fifth columnist." Does Mr. Thornton realize that the democratic freedom of expression which enables him to thus disparage the work of Jeremiah is largely a heritage from that very prophet's teachings on the importance of the individual in God's sight? The democratic insistence on the "inalienable rights" of the individual has deep roots in his repudiation of the "corporate" relation in Jewish nationalistic religion, a revolutionary step summarized in the famous "New Covenant Passage" of Jeremiah 31:31-34. Here religion is first described as inward and personal.

In the evaluation of Jeremiah (at least) Mr. Thornton has missed the forest while looking too hard at one tree. It is true that Jeremiah did counsel surrender of Jerusalem to Nebuchadnezzar; but he did so because he had a higher patriotism than others. He (1) was convinced that God was using Babylon to punish Judah for her sins, which were many and grave; (2) he did not want to see his nation and its religious heritage swept away in the horrors of final conquest of the city--after an utterly hopeless resistance. To say that one cannot honorably counsel surrender is to impugn the motives of such noble spirits as Robert E. Lee and Jonathan Wainwright, men who refused to approve useless bloodshed.

But more about Jeremiah. What do the ranking Old Testament scholars say about this prophet of the years between 626 and 586 B.C.?

The great German scholar Rudolph Kittel writes: "Jeremiah was the greatest of the great prophets of Israel. He looked deepest into the heart of God and into his own heart. This insight made him a man, prophet, and poet of special excellence." (Great Men and Movements in Israel, tr. by Knoch and Wright, p. 334).

The British scholar George Adam Smith writes: "With him [Jeremiah] the human unit in religion which had hitherto been mainly the nation was on the way to become the individual. Personal piety in later Israel largely grew out of his struggles." (Jeremiah, p. 5) (Wellhausen is quoted by Smith on the same page as saying, "Without Jeremiah the Psalms could never have been composed.")

Julius Bewer, whose text on the Literature of the Old Testament is standard in America, writes (p. 166): "He (Jeremiah) grasped with deep insight the fundamental elements of religion and stated them with great clearness. In him all the best of Amos, Hosea, and Isaiah were brought to full fruition. He spiritualized religion by separating it from all outward institutions, even from the nation." He is "in many ways Israel's greatest prophet."

Observes another scholar, the emphasis placed by Jeremiah on individual moral responsibility is at the basis of any valid system of ethics. Jeremiah is, in fact, regarded as one of the colossal creative minds of religious history. To discover the fact, however, one must spend some time with dedicated scholars. Mr. Thornton will forgive me, I am sure, if I recall at this point the pertinent anecdote about the young woman tourist who rushed through a museum whose treasures included are works of the great masters. "Is this all you have?" she asked an elderly guide on the way out. "Madam," he said, "the paintings in this museum are not on trial; the visitors are."

The Solicitor's Duty

Editor, The Advertiser:

If an organized boycott is against the law, as Mr. Fred Ball states in his letter to The Advertiser, Jan. 9, then why should anyone have to present his letter to the Circuit Solicitor? Doesn't the Solicitor know his job? Why does he have to be reminded of his duty?

Maybe he is worried about the Negro vote. He had better start worrying about the white vote.

Folsom Sees Slow-Pace Integration

MOULTON, March 21 (AP) — Alabama's Gov. James E. Folsom said in a speech here today "Integration has got to come; but it will have to come district by district, not county by county, and many of us will not be here when it does."

The governor addressed about 300 persons in the Lawrence County Courthouse in the fourth of his "reports to the people."

Folsom reiterated his promise that he is "going to maintain segregation, but we've got to get the Negroes out of these 'shotgun' schoolrooms."

He also said that he would uphold the federal Constitution and the U. S. Supreme Court, which already has ordered integration in the nation's schools.

Folsom was given a mild and courteous reception. There was brief applause when he was introduced by Wheeler Smith, veteran Lawrence County political figure, and again at the end of his address.

Folsom told reporters who questioned him after his address that he had made arrangements last January to balance the state's budget, and that he had ordered a 10 per cent reduction in spending in all departments.

He said, however, that one of the things that "ran us over" was two special sessions of the Legislature this year.

In answer to a question, he said: "Yes, I plan to call another special session."

Folsom has said he wants another special session to call a constitutional convention to consider the state's racial problems.

The Trouble Is Political

EDITOR, THE ADVERTISER—I read the editor's statement in U.S. News & World Report. For the most part, I think people appreciate the problems of the South. It is just the left-wingers and politicians who are creating issues. So long as labor goons can throw their weight around and defy the law, it ill behooves the North to criticize the South. Action And Reaction

Editor, The Advertiser:

I have read with interest your interview in the U.S. News & World Report of Feb. 24. I think you will be glad to learn that you were mistaken in one statement, as you will see from the inclosed copies of Human Events. It, of course does not have as wide a circulation as the U.S. News and Harpers but the publisher is doing his best to acquaint the rest the country with the problems and difficulties faced by the South. Another excellent article, "Not to Be Solved On A Slide Rule," by James J. Kilpatrick was published in the May 14, 1955 issue. I regret that I haven't an extra copy to send you.

As for the problem of integration, I fear that we of the North—our forebears, rather—created it in the first place and that meddling on our part is ill-advised, especially as the South has been making efforts to solve it. It seems to me that racial relations were improving slowly—such things are better for slow growth—and steadily before the Supreme Court handed down its decision. Regrettably, the court appeared not to be aware that Newton's Third Law of Motion applies to psychological as well as physical phenomena.

Religious Radicalism

Editor, The Advertiser:

I notice in today's paper that one of the grocers arrested for keeping his store open on Sunday states that he will take the case clear to the Supreme Court. I was glad to see this. I am for separation of church and state, on which our country was founded.

Our Constitution guarantees religious liberty, yet this law is a discrimination against the many religions in the world which observe the Seventh Day, or Saturday as the Sabbath Day.

I am not going into the right or wrong of their choice, but regardless of this, it is their right to keep their stores open six days of the week, or including Sunday. Also it is one's right to keep their stores open seven days a week if they see fit.

Religion and church-going cannot be legislated. It is a matter of one's conscience. Besides, why close grocery stores and leave all other business open? This in itself shows how useless such a "blue law" is.

The Bible not only says do not work on the Sabbath, but it says do not seek your own pleasure. Then why not close picture shows, ball games, and any other form of pleasure? All this though, is unimportant compared with the infringement on religious liberty.

I don't understand how intelligent lawmakers, also Christians, can see this in any other light. Let's stop and consider this in a logical, intelligent way, and I think anyone with a fair amount of gray matter can see where such legislation would eventually lead. We might be back to burning people at the stake for not attending prayer-meeting, and, more radical still, at some particular church on some particular day.

Yankee Yak

Editor, The Advertiser:

The admittance of a Negro woman to our University, which resulted in the demonstrations at Tuscaloosa, has been termed by some as "mob violence." It is apparent the users of this term are either Negroes or have pro-Negro sentiments. Call these demonstrations by any name you may, I am extremely proud of those fine people who took this resolute action to stop this Negro when it had been clearly shown there was no other way. These people of Tuscaloosa were strong enough in their convictions to accomplish that which could not be done by mere words.

To Northerners, and others of Yankee inclinations, it would seem there was an undue amount of feeling over what Yankees would think an unimportant incident—this Negro's admittance. All Southerners know her entering our University would quietly serve as a "foot-in-the-door" for Negroes in their despicable effort for racial equality. They are determined to bring about racial equality inch by inch, bit by bit, on such a gradual scale that they hope their final aim is not evident to us until it is upon us. Unsegregated buses are another step in that direction. Here and now is the time to prevent all this before the Negro gets well started on his corrupt attempt at racial equality. That is exactly what the people of Tuscaloosa realized, and instead of idly standing by, they did something about it.

The comments of the Yankee yak do not matter one iota. If the North is content to have their white population swallowed up and combined with the Negro in intermarriage it doesn't matter to us. We are proud of our people here and will not have them become a hodge-podge mixture of every origin as they have in the North. Don't let any Yankee deny this fact because I've seen it in all their leading cities.

We offer a salute to the people of Tuscaloosa who rid themselves of this infamous Negro and did a commendable service for Alabama. Our hats are off to you! EUGENE KINNETT.

Distorted Picture Of The South

Montgomery, Ala.

EDITOR, THE ADVERTISER—I am a housewife (white), born and bred in the South. I am so fed up with the things the Northern newspapers and magazines have to say against the South. They have printed lies, insinuations and dirty wisecracks until my blood pressure rises every time I pick up a paper.

Cannot some Southerner write to them and get facts straight for them? Why does someone not tell them that we Southern whites are the only true friends the Negro has ever had in all this world?

The Northerners sold them to us for slaves. Slavery was not right. Anyone with any decency knows that. But when the North freed the slaves, no provision was made for them. Since the day they were freed and left to shift for themselves, we, the whites of the South, have been the Negro's only friend. We have given them jobs, financed their schools, boosted them and cheered them on their way to make something of themselves, shown pride in their success and now, thanks to us, they have a way of life equal to our own. They have comfortable, modern homes, fine cars, schools, theaters, television. I ask, who has done more for the Negro?

We have given them everything in life but social equality with our people. It is not the Negro who is oppressed and underprivileged—it is the white South. An attempt is being made to force integration upon us, a condition that would leave us no control over our social life or that of our children. It is unthinkable that our children should intermarry with another race. Nature did not mean it to be.

We have always spoken kindly to the Negro and the only time we ever spoke otherwise (including the bus drivers) was when the Negro spoke or acted in a hateful, spiteful way to us.

And please try to make these Northerners see that this pious, humble, "goody-goody" air the Negroes carry about with them these days is only to try to show us up and gain sympathy for themselves.

If we have seemed cruel to the Negro since this revolt on their part, it is because we knew we were being pushed into integration and we became panicky. I feel sure that indicting the leaders of the boycott was not done with any thought of forcing the Negroes to ride again but to show them we were not going to allow them to take over without a fight. Because ending bus segregation we knew, meant only the first step toward school integration and that we cannot tolerate.

We, as a whole, do not sanction violence. But we can forgive that mob at Tuscaloosa because we know they were not fighting a colored girl trying to enter college, zut a condition that we were being pushed into (ourselves and our loved ones) that to us is far worse than death itself.

Summing this all up, we have always done all we could for the Negroes and treated them right and are willing to go on doing so—without integration.

Distorted Picture Of The South

Mon. 3-5-56 P. 4-A

EDITOR, THE ADVERTISER—I am a housewife (white), born and bred in the South. I am so fed up with the things the Northern newspapers and magazines have to say against the South. They have printed lies, insinuations and dirty wisecracks until my blood pressure rises every time I pick up a paper.

Cannot some Southerner write to them and get facts straight for them? Why does someone not tell them that we Southern whites are the only true friends the Negro has ever had in all this world?

Montgomery, Ala.

The Northerners sold them to us for slaves. Slavery was not right. Anyone with any decency knows that. But when the North freed the slaves, no provision was made for them. Since the day they were freed and left to shift for themselves, we, the whites of the South, have been the Negro's only friend. We have given them jobs, financed their schools, boosted them and cheered them on their way to make something of themselves, shown pride in their success and now, thanks to us, they have a way of life equal to our own. They have comfortable, modern homes, fine cars, schools, theaters, television. I ask, who has done more for the Negro?

We have given them everything in life but social equality with our people. It is not the Negro who is oppressed and underprivileged—it is the white South. An attempt is being made to force integration upon us, a condition that would leave us no control over our social life or that of our children. It is unthinkable that our children should intermarry with another race. Nature did not mean it to be.

We have always spoken kindly to the Negro and the only time we ever spoke otherwise (including the bus drivers) was when the Negro spoke or acted in a hateful, spiteful way to us.

And please try to make these Northerners see that this pious, humble, "goody-goody" air the Negroes carry about with them these days is only to try to show us up and gain sympathy for themselves.

If we have seemed cruel to the Negro since this revolt on their part, it is because we knew we were being pushed into integration and we became panicky. I feel sure that indicting the leaders of the boycott was not done with any thought of forcing the Negroes to ride again but to show them we were not going to allow them to take over without a fight. Because ending bus segregation we knew, meant only the first step toward school integration and that we cannot tolerate.

We, as a whole, do not sanction violence. But we can forgive that mob at Tuscaloosa because we know they were not fighting a colored girl trying to enter college, zut a condition that we were being pushed into (ourselves and our loved ones) that to us is far worse than death itself.

Summing this all up, we have always done all we could for the Negroes and treated them right and are willing to go on doing so—without integration.

Let Southerners Alone To Work Out Problem

News P. 12

I am not one to believe in violence in any form, mob or otherwise, to resort to such is the destruction of culture and refinement. I do, however, believe in the Southern way of life and my Southern heritage which is a very important thing to anyone born and bred in the Deep South regardless of the color of the skin. What is wrong in fighting for something that you believe strongly in? Why do we fight communism? Is it not because we believe in the American way of life and we will not have it destroyed? To an American, this is an important thing.

Mon. 3-5-56

The most confusing thing to the majority of Southerners is trying to understand why people in the North want to interfere with our beliefs and destroy them. What do they expect to accomplish and what is their aim? Likewise of the politician?

Birmingham, Ala.

Certain of our politicians have had extensive publication of their travels in the Orient and abroad, studying conditions and customs of various peoples but many of them have never set foot in the Deep South, certainly not for any extended visits. What do they know of racial conditions here? Exactly what they have read in history books and studies they have made from various people who have migrated from the South. Why don't they come down and stay a while in places such as our courthouses and public buildings, just observing the general run of people and talking with a few of the oldtimers who can tell them more in a few hours about our way of life and the Negro than they will find in a whole library?

So much is said of the Negro being mistreated in the South. If this is tue, why do they stay in the South? I think it is because those who have made these claims have had the words put in their mouths. Many Southern Negroes have gone North to see for themselves about this land of plenty and freedom just to return to their Southern way of life. Any of them who want to try it can go any time. There isn't a Southerner who will stand in their way.

There is a solution to our problems down here, a very simple one. If the Northerner, the politician and the Communist will let us alone with our way of life we will handle such situations as we are now confronted with in the usual diplomatic manner which must be agreeable to all concerned, certainly to the Negro, otherwise we wouldn't have so many of them.

CONSTITUTIONAL REVAMP

Gov. Folsom Gives 'Formula' For Solving Racial Tension

Advertiser Wed. 3-14-56

Montgomery, Ala.

After proclaiming himself a defender of "democracy against mobocracy (mob rule)," Gov. James E. Folsom yesterday advocated a constitutional convention as the "only real" way to solve Alabama's racial problems.

Folsom sent a special message to the Legislature proposing a convention to rewrite the state's organic law to let the people voice their "wishes and desires concerning the preservation of our traditional way of life." P. 1

A constitutional convention, he said, is the "only real, effective and forceful means at our disposal to express the will of our people on these problems."

The governor accompanied his message with a resolution to submit the convention question to a statewide vote Aug. 28. If the voters approved the call, delegates would be elected at another election on Nov. 27 and the convention itself would start Dec. 11.

Arguing for speedy consideration of the resolution, Folsom pointed out that Negro coed Autherine Lucy, who has been expelled from the University of Alabama, has asked for a court order to readmit her next fall.

Her presence on the campus has already caused mob violence, and may provoke further rioting, the governor said, unless the Legislature takes "some action that is legal and constitutional to avoid any further incident."

But nowhere in his message or the governor attenpt to spell out what action he thinks the delegates to a constitutional convention should or could take.

Advertiser

In the past he has pegged his demands for a new constitution chiefly on legislative reapportionment.

P. 2-A

If the Legislature had heeded his previous requests for a convention, Folsom said many of today's racial problems "in my best judgment" would have been avoided or solved.

Folsom said the only steps taken thus far "to preserve our traditional way of life have been in the form of futile paper resolutions" and in the passage of "impractical laws which are mere temporary, stop-gap, political and crowd-pleasing measures."

He singled out for mention the nullification or interposition resolution by which Alabama and some other Southern states have sought to set aside the supreme court's school integration decrees.

Instead of resorting to measures like that, the governor said, "the most effective way to show the opposition of our people to these encroachments is to convene them in a constitutional convention . . . so that they may incorporate into the basic and fundamental law of our state their wishes and desires concerning the preservation of our traditional way of life."

Earlier in the day, Folsom had issued two prepared statements denouncing what he called "mobocracy" and calling for speedy settlement of Montgomery's Negro bus boycott.

He said the chief political issue in Alabama today is 0aujpnq,cracy and mkbocracy" and that he stands, as before, as a "party loyal democrat."

The "only organized op,a8ng$on is the mobocrat party."

Macon County, a spokesman for pro-White Citizens Councils which have criticized Folsom for his racial politics, had this to say

"The screening committees of the various legitimate citizens councils . . . would turn down the application of any loud-mouthed, vote-hungry candidate for political office at this time."

What Washington Himself Said

EDITOR, THE ADVERTISER—You, who would be the first to utter that ugly word "censorship," were it directed against yourself, have not been playing fair with your readers in deciding for them what in Drew Pearson's writings is "inconsequential" or "ridiculous." At any rate, I should thank you for omitting him on Sunday and then printing him, with your interpretation the next day. Otherwise, I might have overlooked his column about my good friend, Comer Lile, a native of Alabama, who attended Sidney Lanier High School in Montgomery as a freshman in 1922-23.

Drew Pearson and you are both guilty of jumping to conclusions about what Washington would have done, he sentimentalizing and you debunking. Let's see what Washington himself has to say.

Washington believed in emancipation, but by degrees, that it might not work a hardship on anyone. In a letter to Robert Morris, written in 1786, he says, ". . . there is not a man living who wishes more sincerely than I do, to see a plan adopted for the abolition of it; but there is only one proper and effectual mode by which it can be accomplished, and that is by Legislative authority; and this, as far as my suffrage will go, shall never be wanting. But when slaves who are happy and contented with their present masters, are tampered with and seduced to leave them; when masters are taken unawares by these practices; when a conduct of this sort begets discontent on one side and resentment on the other, and when it happens to fall on a man, whose purse will not measure with that of the society, and he looses his property for want of means to defend it; it is oppression in the latter case, and not humanity in any; because it introduces more evils than it can cure."

To John Francis Mercer, he wrote, ". . . I never mean (unless some particular circumstance should compel me to it) to possess another slave by purchase; it being among my first wishes to see some plan adopted, by which slavery in this country may be abolished by slow, sure, and imperceptible degrees."

In his will, he explains his delay in freeing his slaves, ". . . Upon the decease of my wife, it is my will and desire that all the slayers which I hold in my own right, shall receive their freedom. To emancipate them during her life, would, though earnestly wished by me, be attended with such insuperable difficulties, on account of their intermixture by marriages with the lower Negroes, as to excite the most painful sensations, if not disagreeable consequences from the latter, while both descriptions are in the occupance of the same Proprietor; it not being in my power, under the tenure by which the lower Negroes are held, to manumit them."

A discussion of Washington's rebellion against authority involves a consideration of the motivation behind his decision. We have it from Washington's own words that he prayed for God's guidance in making all important decisions. ". . . as the allwise disposer of events has hitherto watched over my steps, I trust that the important one I may soon be called upon to take, he will mark the course so plainly, as that I cannot mistake the way."

This is all that the Rev. Comer Lile asked of his parishioners, that they honestly seek God's guidance in voting. Mr. Beverly obviously preferred his own way, which is his God-given right.

One thing more. Let's see what Washington says about central government. In a letter to Benjamin Harrison, he says, ". . . The disinclination of the individual states to yield competent powers to Congress for the federal government, their unreasonable jealousy of that body and of one another, and the disposition which seems to pervade each, of being all-wise and all-powerful within itself, will, if there is not a change in the system be our downfall as a nation. This is as clear to me as the A, B, C, . . ." As "essential to the well being, I may even venture to say, to the existence of the United States as an Independent Power . . ." He considers, ". . . The prevalence of that pacific and friendly disposition, among the people of the United States, which will induce them to forget their local prejudices and policies, to make those mutual concessions which are requisite to the general prosperity, and in some instances, to sacrifice their individual advantages to the interest of the community."

". . . It is indispensable to the happiness of the individual states, that there should be lodged somewhere, a supreme power to regulate and govern the general concerns of the confederated republic, without which the Union cannot be of long duration. . . . there must be a faithful and pointed compliance on the part of every state, with the late proposals and demands of Congress, or the most fatal consequences will ensue." Circular to the States, June 8, 1783.

In his farewell address, Washington wrote' ". . . To the efficacy and permanence of your Union, a government for the whole is indispensable. No alliances however strict between the parts can be an adequate substitute. They must inevitably experience the infractions and interruptions which all alliances in all times have experienced."

Good Ole Alabam

Advertiser

ALABAMA is, of course, first on the roll call of states. It was the first Capital of the Confederacy.

But Alabama has other distinctions.

For Alabama is also the only state in the Union wherein the legislature does not know whether or not it is in session.

It does know whether it's going or coming—because it is doing both. But it doesn't know whether or not it is in session.

Montgomery, Ala.

CONSIDER the sequence of events.

In December the governor and the legislature threw a total of 30 constitutional amendments at the voters. The voters were supposed to master the meaning of this broadside in the swirl of Christmas shopping and festivity.

Had all 30 of these amendments been adopted, they would have constituted a sizeable annex to the Constitution of Alabama.

Sun 1-22-56

BUT THE VOTERS, with irritation and anger, rejected 29 of the amendments. Yet they picked and threaded their way down to Amendment 20 and adopted that one.

This the voters did because it was the one means at hand of telling Folsom where he stood.

They told him hardest in Montgomery County with the returns because it is here in the Capital that citizens know most about the Folsom Administration.

ANYHOW, the voters powerfully smote the 29 constitutional amendments. Very plainly Alabama was not in the mood to monkey with the Constitution.

But it was not plain to His Excellency.

Having seen the surging opposition to a little constitutional change, the J of Js thereupon summoned the legislature to rewrite the whole Constitution!

THE PRESSING PROBLEM—the only one the people have any interest in now, apart from segregation—is school money. For reasons that appear sounder day by day, they rejected the $30,000,000 Goodwyn tax exaction.

But they understand that school money will probably be nearly exhausted by March and something must be done.

THERE is a defiant streak in His Excellency that may be discerned throughout his Goat Hill career. Calling a constitutional convention session was done as a certain kind of man tries to throw empty beer bottles out the window of a Cessna airplane or ride down the highway in a Cadillac with his hoof poked out of the window.

The impoverishment of his leadership was seen when the legislature, instead of amending the Alabama Constitution, commenced the grave and historic process of nullifying the United States Constitution. Well might Folsom have said as Andrew Jackson said to his artillery in the Battle of New Orleans. "Elevate them sights a little lower, boys."

NEVER in this century has an American state undertaken Nullification. It may be a desirable means of telling the country how determined Alabama is to avert race mixing, but not even a South Carolina hotspur would question that Nullification is a thing to be undertaken only after what is called prayerful consideration.

Virginia has been soberly debating Nullification (Interposition) for months and has taken no action.

But within a week, this session of the Alabama legislature voted Nullification with a hey-nonny-nonny and a hotcha-cha. There was a semblance of debate in the House over the Nullification resolution, not even that in the Senate.

They did it before the AP could put out an explanation of Nullification.

The only thing close to a Nullification debate in the Senate was a discussion of whether the NAACP recording played to the senators earlier by Senator Englehart was a fraud.

It seems doubtful that as many as 10 Alabama legislators had any grasp of the import of Nullification. Probably they thought they were simply voting for another meaningless resolution.

THEN the Unnecessary Legislature—led by the administration leader, Hawkins! — commenced debating restraints on the misuse of $15,000,000 a year in state purchases and whether Folsom had permitted the spoilation of the Little Mountain Park timber reserves.

Whereupon the legislature, having voted to nullify the U.S. Constitution, voted to leave the Alabama Constitution just as it was.

The administration decided to adjourn the legislature so it could call another session.

Speaker of the House Rankin Fite ruled that the House had voted to adjourn and pranced out.

But the House obviously had not adjourned because there were 61 members left on the floor and of a mind to do business.

They elected a speaker and sought to draft a couple of newspapermen to act as clerks.

SO THERE SAT the legislature, some believing it had adjourned and others believing it was in session.

For example, Rep. Joe Dawkins, whom Montgomery sent to the House to serve Folsom, said: "I think we have adjourned sine die. Speaker Fite ruled that the adjournment resolution carried, and that's all there is to it."

Joe has mastered Folsom logic—if the House had really voted to adjourn, what were 61 members doing on the floor refusing to leave?

THEY will be back Monday.

Unhitch them mules, boys, it's raining.

Strikes A Blow For Segregation In Congress

By Tom Johnson

CONGRESSMAN GEORGE GRANT of the Montgomery congressional district has introduced in the U. S. House of Representatives one of the most ambitious bills yet devised by Southern congressmen to circumvent the U. S. Supreme Court's anti-segregation ruling.

JOHNSON

The Grant bill would, in effect, nullify the court decision and allow Alabama—and any state that wishes it—to preserve the dual school system; ie., separate but equal.

A similar bill was introduced in the Senate some time back by Sen. Robinson of West Virginia. It is still awaiting action.

Congressman Grant feels he has solid congressional and constitutional precedent, but he admits the bill probably will have a tough time in the Judiciary Committee, to which it was assigned from the floor.

The Supreme Court, in ruling against segregated schools, relied heavily on Section I of the 14th Amendment to the Constitution. ("No State shall make or enforce any law which shall abridge the privileges or immunities of citizens of the United States . . . deprive any person of life, liberty or property without due process of law, nor deny to any person. . . the equal protection of the laws.")

However, Grant holds it is the duty of Congress to carry out the Constitution's intentions and cites Section V of the same amendment:

"The Congress shall have power to enforce by appropriate legislation the provisions of this article."

The bill he introduced this week, Grant feels, falls in the realm of "appropriate legislation."

GRANT goes further with his constitutional argument.

"The Constitution," he says, "contains no specific grant to the federal government of power over public education. Therefore, under the 10th Amendment, that power is reserved in perpetuity to the state or to the people thereof."

Congress has directly sanctioned segregated school facilities before by allowing the separate-but-equal doctrine to operate in the City Schools of Washington, D. C. It can do it now, Grant argues, despite the Supreme Court's ruling, because the Constitution does not mention the court in the enforcement provision of the 14th Amendment.

Eight Southern congressmen, including one Republican, are members of the House Judiciary Committee where the Grant bill will get its first test, unless, as Grant hopes, he can get the measure sent to a subcommittee.

Thus, it must pass two hurdles before it can reach the House floor—once in the subcommittee and again in the full judiciary committee.

ALABAMA'S entire congressional delegation—some of whom have been cool to the state legislature's nullification legislation—are behind his bill, according to Grant.

In addition, several other Southern congressmen have told him they plan to introduce similar bills.

'Hogwash' Bill Sent To Folsom

Daily World Wed. 2-1-56

MONTGOMERY, Ala. — (INS) — A bill, declaring the U. S. Supreme Court's segregation decision "null and void" awaits the signature of Alabama Governor James E. Folsom who has termed the measure "Hogwash."

The bill was passed by both houses of the Alabama Legislature and sent to the Governor for final approval before it is put into law.

Under the State Constitution the governor must act on the measure within seven days atfer it is submitted to him.

Folsom has until Thursday to decide whether to veto or approve the bill.

Folsom did not say what action he would take, but last week referred to the measure as "Hogwash."

HOGWASH

Afro American

MONTGOMERY, Ala. — "What is nullification anyway? It's just a bunch of hogwash. I haven't even read the thing."

That's how Gov. James E. Folsom greeted the news that his Alabama Legislature had passed a joint "interposition" resolution and a question as to whether he would veto the measure before the Monday deadline.

Governor Folsom called the resolution the first in the South directed against the U.S. Supreme Court's desegregation decisions, "just another piece of paper that has no legal ground to it."

Afro American

HE SUGGESTED that "nullification" through a constitutional convention might "tote some water," but added that for the Legislature to declare Supreme Court rulings "null and void" is "like a dog baying at the moon and claiming it's treed."

The nullification or interposition resolution, passed by the Legislature last week declares the Supreme Court's ruling banning segregated public schools "null and void and of no effect in Alabama."

Greeley Was A Dixiecrat

Editor, The Advertiser:

From the editorial, "The New York Herald Tribune's Enlightenment," I see that the Herald Tribune has pulled out their old editor Horace Greeley to show how long the Tribune has been in "the fight."

Mr. Greeley was no friend of the South, but I wonder if The Tribune remembers an editorial which I found in "The Life of St. John's Parish," by Mattie Pegues Wood. A few days after Mr. Lincoln took office Mr. Greeley wrote:

"If the cotton states shall become satisfied that they can do better out of the Union than in it, we insist on letting them go in peace. The right to secede may be revolutionary but it exists. Whenever a considerable section of our Union shall deliberately resolve to go out, we shall resist all coercive measures designed to keep it in. We hope never to live in a republic whereof one section is pinned to another by bayonets."

Then on Dec. 17 Mr. Greeley wrote:

"If the Declaration of Independence justified the secession from the British Empire of 3,000,000 colonists in 1776, we do not see why it would not justify the secession of 5,000,000 Southerners from the Federal Union in 1861."

These two editorials would put Mr. Greeley and The Tribune in the states rights camp. Interesting, isn't it?

Kaiser Bill Also Invoked The Deity

Editor, The Advertiser:

I am one of your paper's deepest admirers and feel that only The Advertiser, Journal and Mobile's papers (sometimes) reflect the true temper of their age and geographical location in Alabama. I feel that Birmingham's scalawag rags do no justice to the faith and adherence of multiple thousands of paid subscribers with their insipid editorial policies and slanted news articles.

It seems to me that if the bus companiese continue providing service to the Negro sections for the length of time it takes the NAACP to carry their appeals to the Supreme Court, then we have 'em by the nape, e.g., should the court uphold the conviction of the ringleaders we can break up all this NAACP stuff. Should the Negro's court, on the other hand, strike down convictions and declares boycotting just and legal—oh, boy! Then we can have a field day. We can boycott these agitators right out of their pegtop clamdiggers. First we cut off their membership at the source by firing all known members and cutting off all credit to even those sympathizing with the association.

While we are about it, why not use the same grounds Congress used in declaring the communist party unlawful (conspiring to overthrow, etc.) to outlaw NAACP? I'm like Tic Forrester—the Negroes had better give up on this thing, cause they certainly can't win.

Preacher King said they would win because God is with them. Kaiser Bill said the same thing when he tried to rape the world and take what was not rightfully his from the people who had it. They even went so far as to make uniform belt buckles with the inscription, Gott Mit Uns. That still didn't put Jehovah on their side, and neither does saying it put Him on the side of a bunch of Negroes.

A pox upon 'em all.

An Expatriate's Views

Editor, The Advertiser:

I am white, was born in the South, lived in North for 38 years.

Here in the North Negroes and whites attend the same schools but they don't mix as much as one hears they do.

The Negro of the South has it better by having his own schools, own section to live in. They still don't live in white sections here. Each is a proud race. If let alone we will not be rioting and hating each other. M. E. JONES.

Individual Opinion And That Of Alabama

What I am about to say if put to a vote would be the voice Alabama. We have segregation here in Alabama because it is our social right. The Supreme Court, or no other court, has any right to take it away from us. The Negro has good schools here in the South and most of the intelligent Negroes want it to stay just like we have it. They will fare better to themselves.

News

I have no hate against the Negro. I want him to have his rights and if he gets his share of the tax money for their schools he has his rights. That is as far as the Supreme Court can go with this matter. The Civil War was fought over property rights. And our social rights here in the South are more dear to our hearts than property rights.

Sun 3-4-56

As I look at this disturbance over segregation I think the Negroes have lost more than they will gain. In lots of places they have lost the good will of the white people and have created ill-will.

Birmingham, Ala

Concerning the bus boycott in Montgomery, I think the Negro is cutting off his nose to spite his face. There are no laws to make him ride. That's his free privilege to walk if he wants to.

Alabama May Seek Racial Solution Around Table

Daily World Atlanta, Ga.

Sun. 3-4-56

The idea is for a Bi-racial commission that Gov. James E. Folsom hopes can help "resolve racial issues arising among our people."

The commission idea was put forth after the two biggest segregation stories of the year drew the attention of the world to the state: The Autherine Lucy riots at the University of Alabama and Negroes Boycott of buses at Montgomery.

The idea is not new, of course. One backer emphasized that the title Bi-racial was chosen because "Inter-Racial is a word that is no longer in such good repute in the South." Some Negro-White groups formed with the same aim in mind in Dixie have been suspected by pro segregationists.

Gov. Folsom, in asking a special session of the legislature to create the commission, declared. "There has been much racial tension in Alabama in recent months, and a vast majority of the people are looking for leadership in this field."

Leadership appeared to be an early stumbling-block for the commission, if it is created, to overcome. Roughly, the preliminary idea was for the commision to consist of seven persons appointed by the Governor plus one Negro and one white representative from each of the state's nine congressional dis tricts.

A committee of newsmen was asked to draw up the final plans, and one of them admitted that finding the "Right" Negroes in each district may prove difficult.

White Alabamans, as a rule, tend to blame the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People for the current tension, and there was speculation that inclusion of NAACP Leaders might scare off some needed white members of the commission. Similar suggestions in Georgia for instance, have met with rejection by state officials.

At the same time, deliberate exclusion of NAACP Leaders would deprive the commission of some of the most active leadership in the state. it is not always easy to put a finger on any known leadership structure among Negroes in some areas.

Daily World

Just how tense the racial situation has grown, to the minds of Alabamans, was summed up by a Tuscaloosa newsman in Birmingham this week for the hearings in the Lucy case.

"We keep getting reports," He said, "of people in the black belt of the state who say they will march on Tuscaloosa themselves if Autherine is re-admitted to class."

He went on to say, "we are sitting on a powder keg at Tuscaloosa, with everybody running around with lighted matches."

Backers of the Bi-racial commission idea think the group can releive some of that tension, but they put most faith in it as a Log-Range Plan.

THE VOICE OF THE PEOPLE

Open Letter To The Press On Its Task

News P. 22-A
Sun. 3-4-56

THE FREEDOM of the American press is one of the most powerful weapons for our democracy and one of our proudest boasts. Its growing influence over public opinion is a force for justice, which men bent on selfish ends have always tried to avoid.

Birmingham Ala.

In untroubled times the press reports the facts, opinions, and interesting news which make up the daily life of our vast and complex land. But in times of strife, when whole sections of the country are pitted against each other, when the raw emotions of men conflict over basic issues of hatred and love, justice and injustice, the American press must stand as a bulwark against onrushing forces of bitterness and recrimination. It needs the strength of leadership, the wisdom of the aged, the love of a mother, and the peace and quiet of a saint, or it joins with the mob and floods the land with yellow-sheet hatred.

In our South we again have troubled times. Bitter Southerners renew old hatreds, and righteous Northerners rediscover old causes. Confusion and violence are the signs that the American people—white, black, Northern, and Southern—have once again dug into the depths of their souls and unleashed the demons that lie there. Ten years ago these same Americans died in battle to make the world safe for democracy and that men might be free.

It is in these times that the American people need the leadership of a strong press that will exercise its prerogatives with words of peace and calm reserve. It can preserve the freedom of the press only by preserving the freedom of the people. For democracy has failed when hatred is the course of action, especially the actions of law courts. Law is the last resort of a democracy; force is only necessary when all other democratic means have failed. When law is the only resort, democracy is inoperative, and a tyranny has been born.

Men will not find peace by the sword, nor by law, nor by justice. For justice becomes tyranny when love is gone, and love is gone when the God of love is no longer in the hearts of men. Peace is the fruit of love — love of God and love of your neighbor. It is for this reason that I give the following prayer of St. Francis as a guide to you—the press of America—in this troubled time, to lead the people back to a harbor of peace:

"Lord, make me an instrument of Your peace; where there is hatred, let me sow love; where there is injury, pardon; where there is doubt, faith; where there is despair, hope; where there is darkness, light; and where there is sadness, joy.

"O Divine Master, grant that I may not so much seek to be consoled as to console; to be understood as to understand; to be loved as to love; for it is in giving that we receive, it is in pardoning that we are pardoned, and it is in dying that we are born to eternal life."

ALABAMA DOESN'T LIKE PASSIVE RESISTANCE

Block Dispatch P. 6

Mahatma Ghandi's passive resistance program will not fit into the Alabama atmosphere. No one can argue that the Negroes in Montgomery, Alabama, have been violent in their attitude towards the bus company, which refuses to permit decent seating arrangements on its transportation system. The Negroes have peacefully decided not to ride, and this election is in violation of Alabama law. There is no choice, as involved in the slogan, "Take it or leave it." The arrogant and dictatorial whites in that state admit of no alternative.

Oklahoma City Okla.

As the cancer of hypocrisy ousts decency in the capital of the old confederacy, we wonder why some of the outstanding publicists and the big newspapers do not speak out against this great wrong against ministers of the gospel, who are booked and finger-printed at the jail, which will be a permanent criminal record against them, on the frivolous charge they advised their members during this emergency not to ride the buses.

We thing in this particular instance there is exposed the link between northern capital and southern mores. The bus line is owned, we understand, by northern capital, but it immediately seeks the help of Dixie courts to force Negroes to ride, when for more than two months Negroes, in the most notable example of solidarity, have clearly indicate they will not ride.

Of course the NAACP will immediately step in and appeal all of these cases, and when the fines levied against Montgomery, Alabama citizens are paid they will be ordered paid by the Supreme Court of the United States. This is one instance when every Negro in the United States will be able to treasure the value of the NAACP. No one should overlook the fact that the same force and influence that bombed the home of Rev. Martin Luther King two weeks ago, is the same force and influence now making wholesale arrests of Negroes under color of law.

Governor James E. Folsom, who last week said that the mob would never be allowed to rule in his state, should be advised that the mob has actually decided to take charge of the courts, as well as the streets, dark places and alleys. Colonialism could be no more arbitrary and savage than this decision to arrest the Negro ministry and indict 115 blacks simply because these men of color peacefully decide they will not ride on a bus that unreasonably discriminates against them. The bombs could not scare or deter Rev. Nixon and his following, so Alabama segregationists decide they will slam ministers and all in jail.

Not content with that action, they also attempt, and put out of action, a young Negro counselor whom they now charge with unlawful practice. This action, of course, will also reach the Supreme Court. Over in an adjoining state, Mississippi, out of the million Negroes residing there, there was only one lawyer, Dr. Redmond, but since his death there is not one single black man in Mississippi to legally represent impartially the Negroes of Mississippi. Alabama means, before this case is over, to leave the Negroes helpless and totally without racial counsel. Conditions could not be worse in the Transvaal or Natal, where segregation seems to have grown florescent.

We may be wrong, but we believe the Wednesday action in Alabama is going to weld the blacks of that state into a solid phalanx in opposition to jim crow practices. What has happened in Montgomery should even change the mind of Percy Greene, editor of the Jackson Advocate, who has pleaded with Negroes to accept segregation. If this action does not open the eyes of this blind editor, nothing will. Here we have the shameful scene, where 115 Negroes have their life's record blemished and seared with criminality, simply because Negroes peacefully refuse to ride on a bus where they cannot sit down.

Let us see for a moment how monstrous and inhuman are the whites in Alabama. All the Negroes have asked for is that whites start seating from the front and Negroes from the rear, and that the place where they meet become the dividing line in a bus. This is not a demand for the abolition of segregation. It is simply a plan which takes from a many times illiterate white bus driver the high-handed right to tell a Negro he cannot sit down when there are plenty of empty seats in the bus. This is the first time in the history of Alabama that Negroes have done anything along the line of independent thinking, contrary to the judgment of the overlords of creation. You know, we have said many times in this column, reaction does not like Paul Robeson, not because he is a communist, but because he thinks independently.

The NAACP cannot afford to let Alabama get away with this "state rights" scheme. Let's carry the city ordinance of Montgomery to the Supreme Court and prove that the ordinance deprives citizens of their rights under the terms of the 14th amendment.

In this determined tussle between the city government of Montgomery and the Negro, the bus company finds itself a victim. The transportation company is losing thousands of dollars daily. Suddenly city government finds itself wedged between the question of human rights and property rights. To prime the transportation well, city government has decided, on the advice of its counsel, to damage and destroy the reputations of its best black citizens; to slam them in jail and persecute them like dogs. But so long as the federal constitution endures, with the 14th amendment, Negroes will remain free in Montgomery, Alabama. By now the South should recognize that it has no other weapon but force and violence. Citizens Councils insidiously and covertly still seek to use this weapon.

India Cleric Asks About Alabama

Herald Staff Writer

The head of the largest Negro religious faith in America says he has received a letter from a church leader in India asking if what he hears about Alabama is true.

The letter was addressed to Dr. Joseph H. Hackson of Chicago, president of the National Baptist Convention and spiritual leader of some five million American Negroes. Dr. Jackson is in Miami on a brief winter vacation.

His office staff in Chicago, he said, phoned him here asking what to do about a letter from the president of the Baptist Convention of South India.

"He enclosed news clippings from papers in India that told about the coed at the University of Alabama, and about the bus strike in Montgomery, Ala.," Jackson said.

"He said the church members were asking him if the stories are true, and he did not know what to tell them.

"So he wrote asking me to tell him if these things are actually happening in the United States of America.

"No, I haven't replied yet. It is painful. I will have to tell him it is true when I write him.

"You see, it was just last summer that I met him. It was at the Baptist World Alliance we held in London. And I told him about all the great things of our nation.

"I even invited him to be our guest at our National Baptist Convention next year."

Three subjects likely—

News

Next special session may be convened Wednesday

Sun. 2-26-56 P. 12-B

BY HUGH SPARROW, News staff writer

MONTGOMERY, Ala., Feb. 26—The next special legislative session, which will be the fifth called by Gov. Folsom in slightly more than a year, may convene Wednesday.

Birmingham, Ala.

The joint interim committee representing the House and Senate tax and finance committee will meet at 2 p.m. Monday for the routine of signing the report.

It will be sent to Gov. Folsom immediately thereafter. And, in the opinion of most legislators, the governor will order the Legislature back into special session Wednesday noon.

Several committee members close to Gov. Folsom believe he will include three subjects in his call.

They will be (1) emergency school legislation, (2) legislation setting up a by-racial group to study racial tension and related problems, and (3) legislation placing legislators on an annual salary.

The governor reportedly would like to submit an amendment placing legislators on an annual salary at the same time when Alabama voters ballot on the so-called legislative reapportionment amendment.

THE LATTER PROPOSAL nearly doubles House and Senate membership. For that reason it may run into serious opposition from those who believe legislators are already excessively paid and a greatly expanded Legislature would mean an additional heavy cost on the taxpayers.

But if at the same time the people voted on another constitutional amendment putting a top limit on legislative salaries, the governor reportedly believes, it might lessen opposition to the reapportionment measure.

Some Folsom traits

ONE OF GOV. FOLSOM'S typical traits is his frequent inclination toward sudden change.

Another similar one, best known perhaps by those who have experienced it at first hand, is his forgetfulness—his forgetting just how hard a fellow may have worked for him in an election campaign, that is.

The Barbour County judge and former legislator was one of Gov. Folsom's top campaign leaders. He devoted many a day toward helping Gov. Folsom win the Democratic nomination in 1954.

JUDGE WALLACE, himself very able in sensing political trends and weighing issues, did much toward the success of Gov. Folsom's race. He advised Gov. Folsom on frequent issues. He is also credited with having written the governor's keynote campaign speech. That is, the speech which formed the basis of all his campaign declarations.

It wasn't long after Gov. Folsom took office before word began to leak out. Reliable sources reported that Gov. Folsom was rebuffing Judge Wallace. That is, he wasn't seeing much of him and he wasn't paying much attention to his recommendations.

Now Judge Wallace is no man to be refuffed. He is able and resourceful. It didn't take him but a few rebuffs before Judge Wallace's appearances on Capitol Hill became few and far between. And even his more recent appearance was not for the purpose of conferring with Gov. Folsom. Instead, Judge Wallace is deeply interested in providing adequate revenues to combat tuberculosis and his visits were to help pass TB legislation.

Champions South

IN 1953 JUDGE WALLACE was chairman of the Alabama delegation at the annual convention of Young Democrats in St. Paul, Minn.

Last November Judge Wallace was requested by Young Democrat leaders in Alabama to attend the Oklahoma City conveition.

Gov. Folsom and several of his administration leaders went to Oklahoma Sity where they staged an all out drive to elect State Sen. Neil Metcalf of Geneva, president of the Young Democrats.

A few weeks earlier Judge Wallace had appeared on a nationwide radio broadcast from Colorado Springs in a debate with a Denver newspaper man. Judge Wallace, of course, championed the Southern view point, namely, retention of segregation.

When he arrived at Oklahoma City Judge Wallace found Folsom upset. The governor was afraid Judge Wallace would deliver a speech in favor of segregation and thereby lose New York's vote for Metcalf.

had been saying that "Old Wal-

The governor, it appeared, lace made a Dixiecrat speech" at Colorado Springs and was afraid he would do it again.

JUDGE WALLACE did not insist on being seated since it appeared it would mean he would have to approve a resolution against segregation. Neither did Barbour Rep. McDowell Lee.

Word concerning the Oklahoma City maneuvering came to light here this week. Judge Wallace, however, refrained from commenting on it. But sources close to him indicated that the breach between Wallace and the governor had widened considerably as a result of the Oklahoma convention anticlimax.

Jobs going begging

COULD IT BE that political jobs are going begging?

At the close of business Friday afternoon in the office of Secretary of State, it appeared that several holders of top level jobs in Alabama and Washington may have no opposition.

ALABAMA'S SEN. LISTER HILL is the only one qualified thus far for U. S. senator.

There has ben a little talk in the last few days, however, that former Rep. Joe Starnes of Guntersville may try his hand at opposing Sen. Hill.

A few others have been mentioned as possible opponents but of the entire lot, Starnes apparently would be the strongest opponent.

Thus far Justices Davis A. Stakely and James J. Mayfield are unopposed for reelection as Justice No. 1 and 2, respectively.

Judge Rowan S. Bone, a Folsom appointee, also has no opposition, for Judge No. 3, Court of Appeals.

With the exception of the First and Second Congressional Districts, all other Alabama congressmen have qualified for reelection but are unopposed.

In the First District James Thomas Hamrick and Rep. Frank Boykin have qualified.

Rep. George Grant, Troy, and State Rep. Wilbur Nolen, Montgomery, have qualified as candidates for Second District congressman.

C. C. (JACK) OWEN, of Montgomery, the incumbent, and W. F. (Billy) Tucker, Birmingham, have qualified for Public Service Commission president.

Mrs. Lennard Thomas, Montgomery, is unopopsed thus far as candidate for Democratic National Committeewoman.

Roy McCord, Gadsden, and Birmingham's Bob Gwin are candidates for Democratic National Committeeman.

Let White Southerners Pray March 28, Too

Thurs. 3-1-56

EDITOR, THE ADVERTISER—It is to the eternal credit of Montgomery Negroes that they have resorted to prayer in their "sufferings." But one questions their sincerity in posing such deep "love" for those who "hate" them so intensely.

What irony! All that the Negro of the South is or has, he owes to the white race, who by taxation provides more than 90% of his advantages, educational, civic, and other public privileges.

"Too weak to hold water" are the belated propositions made by their "patron saint" who sits in the governor's seat in Montgomery. His recent "face-about" in what seems to be a face-saving maneuver, appears to be the "voice of Jacob, but the hand of Esau." Most surely "them lyingnewspapers" and the present "hogwash" legislature will not fall for his late schemes, but will just let him, according to the great Winston Churchill, "stew in his own juice."

Beware of his tirades against outside influences causing all our troubles in Alabama! What was the import of his entertaining at a Scotch drinking social in the governor's mansion, the arch enemy of the South and everything Southern, the Rev. Rep. out of Harlem, N.Y., Adam Powell, and riding him around over the "Cradle of the Confederacy," in a tax-provided No. 1 Cadillac?

Now this high and mighty Reverend, finding it impossible to conquer and humiliate a pure-blooded Anglo-Saxon South, orders a day of prayer, March 28, for deliverance of the Montgomery Negroes from the wickedness of their white friends.

Let them pray; they should pray! But praying "till the crack of doom" will not bring integration.

A final suggestion to our Folsom: Proclaim March 28 a day of prayer for the white people of the South. Plead with the Lord to deliver the poor, deluded, Southern Negro from the evil designs of the gold diggers and political opportunists, above the Mason & Dixon Line.

Lincoln's Liberation

Editor, The Advertiser:

The following is from the greatest statesman of the United States, Abraham Lincoln:

"I will say, then, that I am not, nor ever have been, in favor of bringing about in any way the social and the political equality of the white and black races; that I am not, nor ever have been, in favor of making voters or jurors of Negroes nor qualifying them to hold office, nor to intermarry with white people; and I will say in addition to this that there is a physical difference between the white and black races which I believe will forever forbid the two races living together on terms of social and political equality; and inasmuch as they cannot so live, while they do remain together there must be the position of superior and inferior, and I, as much as any other man, am in favor of having the superior position assigned to the white man."

Gospel Of Hate

Editor, The Advertiser:

The Negro ministers of Montgomery ought to meditate and ask themselves if they are preaching the truth. Namely, that the white people are their enemies and hate them. If they honestly believed that they wouldn't want to force their society on us. They don't believe that themselves, therefore they are not preaching the truth.

They know white folks are making the laws and taxing themselves to give them good schools and all the other facilities that we have. They get more relief money, 10 to one, than white. They are given good jobs where they are capable.

It is a true saying the more you help some folks, the harder they are to please and the more demanding they are.

Polite Racial Ostracism In Buffalo, N.Y.

Tues. 3-6-56

EDITOR, THE ADVERTISER—I have just read in the Buffalo Evening News a letter written by Vesta L. Robertson of Montgomery, and, as her observations are a rather sweeping indictment of the North as a whole, I am anxious to have it known that there are a sizable number of fair-minded people right her in the North who agree with her.

Having lived in the North 44 and in North Carolina 6 of my 50 years, born and raised here in New York, from my own personal experience I can say unequivocally the South is morally and spiritually head and shoulders above the North where we are born into a mongreloid miasma of "integrated" mediocrity and a debased sense of spiritual values.

But apart from this, the typical yankee is an obdurate numbskull, narrow-minded, self-righteous to the point of nausea. I do not consider New York a fit place to rear a family, for I cannot see to have any children of mine grow up in the spiritual vacuum which is so characteristic of Northern life.

As for the Negro, he is treated better in the South under segregation than he is in the North under our wholly hypocritical and cut-throat system of polite racial ostracism. Do white and colored live together here in a blishful state of "racial equality?" No, they do not! Buffalo has two large Negro colonies where they have their own churches and undoubtedly would prefer to have their own schools if the laws permitted. The social status of the Negro in Buffalo and in the whole North practically defies description. It must be purely by instinct that he is able to sense where he is "taboo" and where his presence might be tolerated. Consequently, for a little "paper freedom" in New York, the Negro has traded his personal identity and self-respect.

As an advocate of states' rights, I not only wholly disapprove of the Supreme Court decision meddling in the private affairs of the states, but also believe the state of Alabama or any other state is fully justified in taking any measures necessary to thwart any future encroachments of federal influence by means of legalistic contortions and private misinterpretations of the Constitution to help the spread of organized labor and serve the ends of seditious bands like the NAACP.

In closing, I hope it will be refreshing to some of your readers to know there are plenty of "yankees," myself included, who would be proud to live in Alabama or at least contribute something to friendship among the states.

A Biracial Commission

The Decatur Daily

Last week when Gov. Folsom called newspaper editors and publishers to Montgomery to discuss the formation of a biracial commission we were surprised at the number of editors and publishers present. Frankly, Folsom and the press haven't hit it off too pleasantly and we are sure that only a very few of the newspaper executives had the faintest idea that the formation of a commission was what the governor had in mind.

Montgomery, Ala.

Not many of the newspaper folks expressed themselves on the subject of racial tension, although one or two were somewhat intemperate in what they had to say.

Thurs. 3-1-56

But such a commission, which might well have been formed several years ago rather than waiting until the heat was on, could have some bright prospects. It is obvious that so long as our Negro citizens have no better leadership than that offered by the NAACP, there is going to be trouble between the races. Such a commission could well offer better leadership and the majority of our Negro citizens would gladly accept such leadership and rather than be forced into following the NAACP line such as has already happened in Montgomery.

Rubbing salt in wounds, old wounds or new wounds, isn't going to do the citizens of either race in Alabama one bit of good. We believe that sound leadership might prevent just such happenings.

A Big Job To Do

The Huntsville Times

The bi-racial commission, which Gov. Folsom has asked to be set up, has the opportunity to do some mighty constructive work, at a time when this is sorely needed in Alabama.

The commission, to be composed of an equal number of whites and Negroes, drawn from outstanding men and women from all sections and areas of Alabama, will have a sore, critical job cut out for it. No one who contemplates the situation in Tuscaloosa and Montgomery will question the gravity of the problem that this commission will have to deal with.

Gov. Folsom, who has long been disposed to regard it as a political matter, has come to realize recently how serious it is, and to note how passions, prejudices and pressures threaten to drive a deep wedge between the two races, who have lived so harmoniously together for decades.

He Could Do No Less

Folsom Wins Court Round In Reapportionment Tiff

Advertiser P.1 Tues. 1-31-56
Montgomery, Ala.

Reapportionment hopes brightened yesterday when the State Supreme Court ruled that a constitutional amendment doesn't need a two-thirds vote in a special session of the Legislature.

At the request of Gov. James E. Folsom, the court handed down an advisory opinion holding that the two-thirds rule governing legislation not included in a special session call dosen't apply to proposed changes in the Constitution.

Folsom called the present extraordinary session for a constitutional convention to rewrite the organic law. But since the Legislature has rejected that, he has endorsed a reapportionment amendment passed by the Senate last week.

Until the governor raised the question, many legislators and parliamentarians interpreted the Constitution to mean any measure outside the call for a special session required a two-thirds vote in each house to get through.

Section 76 of the Constitution says "There shall be no legislation upon subjects other than those designated in the proclamation of the governor calling such session except by a vote of two-thirds of each house."

The justices of the Supreme Court ruled in their advisory opinion that Section 76 deals only with "legislation, namely the enactment of laws." In other words, the court said a constitutional amendment isn't "legislation."

Consequently, the justices held that passage of constitutional amendments comes under Section 284 of the Constitution, which fixes a three-fifths vote in the Legislature as the majority needed to submit an amendment to the people

The court's opinion could be highly significant in the current reapportionment battle. On a close vote, it could mean the difference between success and defeat.

The two-thirds rule has been interpreted by the same court to mean two-thirds of a quorum voting in the Legislature. With all members present as they have been in recent days, it would take 24 votes in the Senate and 71 in the House to pass legislation outside the special session call.

But a constitutional amendment can be submitted with three-fifths of the membership—21 votes in the Senate and 64 in the lower chamber.

Meanwhile, race-conscious Black Belters in the House who are traditionally opposed to both reapportionment and integration may find themselves confronted with this problem today:

Would a continued filibuster against reapportionment materially affect their chances of passing a "Freedom of Choice" school bill aimed at preserving classroom segregation?

The third week of the present special session roared to a close last Friday with small county members of the House stalling for time to prevent a vote on legislation to reapportion the House and Senate membership.

Although the delaying action did block a showdown on that issue, it also prevented a possible vote on the school segregation measure already approved by the Senate and on the House calendar.

Reconvening after a weekend recess, the Black Belt bloc led by Rep. W. L. (Doc) Martin of Greene County can insist on the reading of the House journal again, killing still more time.

But the more time they lose, the longer it will take to get to the "Freedom of Choice" Constitutional amendment which would let parents decide whether to send their children to segregated or integrated schools.

The admittedly pro-segregation measure also would authorize the Legislature to abolish the public school system if the members felt that drastic step necessary.

North Alabama legislators, most anxious for reapportionment and less concerned than the Black Belt with racial problems, could adopt the same time-killing tactics against the segregation measure that opponents used against reapportionment.

And the special session could adjourn sine die with the school bill still pending.

The Senate passed a reapportionment measure last Thursday which would give each county a fulltime senator and at least as many house members as it now has.

Advertiser

The House would be reapportioned on the basis of one seat for each 25,000 population or fraction thereof, but seven counties whose strength would be cut from two to one representative would get a bonus place to keep them at their present level. P.2-A

A similar measure is on the House calendar without the bonus provision. Another bill already killed but revived and put back on the calendar would reshuffle the legislature on a different formula.

While the lower chamber is wrangling over reapportionment, the Senate is concenred chiefly with school finances. A bill is on the calendar, for a possible vote today to let the schools borrow money to get them through this year and next.

Because revenue from a proposed new income tax was included in the educational appropriation bill passed by the Legislature last summer, the defeat of the tax amendment on Dec. 6 left the schools threatened with a cut in appropriations.

The borrowing measure is aimed at enabling the schools to get the full appropriations without additional taxes.

Like Dog Baying at Moon, Folsom Tags Interposition

MONTGOMERY, Ala., Jan. 25 (AP)—Trying to nullify the Supreme Court's school integration decree by legislative resolution, said Gov. James E. Folsom today, is "like a hound dog baying at the moon."

But he told reporters he would applaud the pro-segregation stand if taken "at a constitutional convention." So he announced plans to have an already defeated convention resolution reintroduced in the Legislature tomorrow.

Constitution

"If they're sincere about it," the governor said in reference to sponsors of the nullification act approved by the Legislature last week, "they can debate it out in a constitutional convention."

P.2

Folsom said the resolution which seeks to declare the Supreme Court anti-segregation decree "null, void and of no effect" in Alabama "doesn't mean anything . . . just a bunch of hogwash . . . a two-bit resolution."

But he wouldn't say whether he plans to sign it, veto it or let it go through without his approval. He has until next Monday to act.

The governor didn't make it clear at his news conference just how a nullification resolution would fit into a constitutional convention debate. Neither did he explain why he considers it ineffective when the states can amend the federal Constitution by legislative act if enough of them join in.

Folsom told reporters he had "made it plain during my campaign (for election in 1954) that Alabama "wasn't going to force the colored children to go to school with our white children and vice versa."

But since then the Supreme Court has outlawed segregated classrooms, he continued, "and I'm for nullification if a convention adopts it. But you can't do it by resolution. That's simply a piece of paper."

Folsom called the present special session of the Legislature Jan. 3 to consider a convention to rewrite Alabama's organic law. Both the House and Senate killed the convention plan last week.

Governor Gets Time To Think On Issue Of Race Separation

Advertiser P.1 Tues. 1-31-56
Montgomery, Ala.

Gov. James E. Folsom was granted additional time yesterday to decide whether to sign or veto a legislative resolution declaring "null and void" the U.S. Supreme Court's desegregation decisions.

The resolution was delivered to the governor's office last Monday after whipping through both houses of the Legislature with little or no opposition.

The constitution provides that a governor must act on such resolutions and bills within seven days, however the same section further provides that if the governor is not able to return the measure on the seventh day he is given two additional days from the time the Legislature meets again in which to act.

Frank Long, the governor's legal advisor, pointed out that since the Legislature was not in session yesterday, the new deadline is two days after the lawmakers convene That will be Thursday inasmuch as both houses convene today.

At a press conference last week Folsom referred to the resolution as "hogwash" but declined to say whether he planned to veto it.

Not A Battle But A Ball

EDITOR, THE ADVERTISER: It seems strange to me. With all the hatred, the riots, and the general misdeeds, the Southern individual is not nearly so interested in preserving his "right" of White Supremacy as he is, I think, "having himself a ball."

What is more fun than a riot to a college student? A panty raid at midnight; a cheering squad at a football game. The riot by University students (and regardless of what college officials say, I am sure there were many students involved) was, to themselves, a good pep rally. The yell was reported to have been "Hey! Hel! Ho! Ho! Authurine's gotta go." Then after the woman was escorted out of town and excluded from her classes, it changed to "Hey! Hel! Ho! Ho! Where in hell did that nigger go?" The game was over. There was nothing left to cheer about.

Perhaps all of us, both Negro and white, are too involved in the "having fun" of the situation. It is a serious business; a threat, not to our "Southern way of life," but to the very existence of this, our country, as a country.

The riots, boycotts, and other acts involving violence must stop. The rumors must stop. Both sides must give in a little; maybe enough such that their pride might be hurt.

An answer should be found to this question immediately. We must not play with matches lest fire breaks out. Let there be peace.

A Plea For Open Discussion

Editor, The Advertiser:

Very few people in Alabama are happy over what has happened here in Tuscaloosa in the past few days. The white citizens of Alabama, no matter how many may be opposed to having a Negro student at the University, cannot be happy over an outbreak of violence which has shamed the state and sullied the fair name of the University. The Negro citizens of Alabama cannot be happy over open insults to a member of their race, and the peril that arose for their persons and property when an out-of-control mob developed. The only people who are happy are those who profit from violence. Such people do not, I believe, form a majority or even a considerable minority in Alabama.

The University riots show that pressure is the last, not the first, way to solve problems. Open talk, face-to-face discussion, is the honored American way of settling things, a method that is in the best Southern tradition. There is almost no opportunity for such talk in Alabama. Where can white and Negro leaders meet to discuss their differences openly? Where can they talk out, man-to-man, the problems that are equally serious to both groups? The Negro has been virtually forced into the courts because there is no other place where he can talk to the white man. Is the white man to be forced into a mob because he cannot talk to the Negro anywhere else?

Citizens who do not like violence can join in requesting the governor to set up immediately a bi-racial commission of recognized leaders, to discuss across the table possible solutions to those problems which imperil peace and order in our state. Fair-minded citizens can also form or join small groups in each local community, where members of both races can meet in free and open discussion.

This is no cure-all, but it is the way of decent people, not hoodlums. Let us return to the best, not the worst, traditions of the South.

City Commission Lauded For Stand On Racial Issue

Thurs. 2-16-56

The Montgomery City Commission has won the support of many residents of Lipscomb, Ala., for its stand against racial integration.

Commissioner Frank Parks yesterday announced receipt of a petition signed by 256 residents of the Jefferson County community adjoining Bessemer. It was received by registered mail from L. D. Allred, a member of the Lipscomb City Council and said:

"We, the undersigned citizens . . . wish to extend to you congratulations for the stand you have taken in the fight for segregation. Keep up the good work."

The signers numbered 10 per cent of Lipscomb's population of 2,550.

Parks and the other members of Montgomery's commission, Mayor W. A. Gayle and Commissioner Clyde Sellers, adopted a get-tough policy last month toward the Negro boycott of Montgomery City Lines, and announced at the same time that all three commissioners had joined the pro-segregation Central Alabama Citizens Council.

resort to such tactics to settle their differences? I deplore such action as un-American. It seems apparent that law and order has broken down in New York state and the Justice Department should investigate the situation immediately.

The Justice Department might also do well to look into the violation of the Civil Rights of Puerto Ricans in New York City. Something should also be done about the fact that the number of Negro teachers employed by New York state is practically nil. As NAACP Is Viewed In Alabama

Editor, The Advertiser:

Being a commercial traveling salesman with the entire state of Alabama as a territory, I have in recent weeks had occasion to make my usual contacts in more than half of the 67 counties. These contacts are with people of rather wide influence in each county.

The consensus of opinion, as I see it after many discussions with other travelers in hotels, seems to be that the NAACP is widely recognized as a sinister organization whose leaders are being used as mouthpieces of a foreign ideology, whose top leaders can lay no claim whatsoever to being friends of the colored race, but are using these weak leaders of the colored race—many of whom are ministers and attorneys—to stir up racial animosity to occupy the minds of American people while this foreign dictatorship element is formulating plans that will prove victorious in capturing complete control of our country.

With this apparent realization on the part of our people who are organizing through peaceful and legal means, it is now evident that our white people will use every possible means to protect our way of life as well as to continue to protect all worthwhile and deserving members of the colored race among us from those of foreign determination to dictate our destiny and eventual end.

It is also to be found that Alabama's white people are convinced of the fact that Autherine Lucy is being used as a pawn and that unless she and her advisers are becoming immensely wealthy from the bounty of tainted money being used on them that they will eventually awaken to the asininity of their efforts.

A Quagmire To Bag Segregation Attackers

Advertiser Sat. 2-4-56

IN THE years of segregation litigation ahead, Negroes may be expected to try to get their complaints heard by federal courts rather than to carry their cases through state courts. The reason for this preference is obvious. But something new has been added that may be very useful in preserving segregation.

Montgomery, Ala.

The Supreme Court's final decree in the school segregation cases last year vested federal district courts with the responsibility of hearing segregation cases and determining the manner and the time for compliance with the high court's interpretation of the 14th Amendment.

This delegation of powers—it was not really that, but was actually a restatement of the normal channels of appeal in the federal judiciary—left many with the idea that the U.S. district judge would thus become a kind of gauleiter, a super-superintendent of education in his district. Any grievance based on race would be addressed directly to him, according to this interpretation.

However, the U.S. Fourth Circuit Court of Appeals has now ruled otherwise in the case of a McDowell County, N.C., suit. If the decision is upheld by the Supreme Court, it would seem to have direct bearing on the fate of Alabama's school placement law enacted last summer. In the McDowell County case, the Circuit Court said that Negroes must exhaust state administrative remedies in seeking desegregation of the public schools there before the federal courts could intervene.

THE Circuit Court said the district judge "should give consideration not merely to the decision of the Supreme Court but also to subsequent legislation of the State of North Carolina providing administrative remedy for persons with respect to their enrollment in the public schools of the state."

The court then pointed to the "subsequent legislation" it had in mind—a 1955 act of the North Carolina legislature. The act grants city and county boards of education broad authority for enrolling students and assigning them to their respective schools according to rules & regulations adopted by the local boards. The act also provides an appeal for people who feel they have not been assigned to schools they are entitled to attend. They may appeal to the superior court of the county (comparable to Alabama's circuit courts), thence to the state supreme court.

"IT IS well settled," the U.S. Circuit Court said in the McDowell County case, "that the courts of the United States will not grant injunctive relief until administrative remedies have been exhausted." The court continued:

This rule is especially applicable to a case such as this, where injunction is asked against state or county officers with respect to the control of schools maintained and supported by the state. The federal courts manifestly cannot operate the schools. All that they have the power to do in the premises is to enjoin violation of constitutional rights in the operation by state authorities. Where the state law provides adequate administrative procedure for the protection of such rights, the federal courts should not interfere with the operation of the schools until such administrative procedure has been exhausted and the intervention of the federal courts is shown to be necessary . . .

Interference by injunction with the schools of a state is as grave a matter as interfering with its fiscal operation and should not be resorted to [here the court quotes Mr. Justice Stone in an old case] "where the asserted federal right may be preserved without it."

THE importance of this decision to Alabama is that the North Carolina act referred to is similar to Alabama's school placement law, which in addition to giving local boards broad powers of assigning pupils on the basis of physical, mental, social and psychological factors, also provides administrative remedy. Parents, white as well as Negro, may appeal the actions of local boards of education to the circuit court and thence to the state supreme court. If the McDowell County decision stands, it would seem that Negro complainants in Alabama must fight their causes through our state courts first. In addition, it seems less likely that they will be successful in making a "class action" of their complaints: in other words each case would have to be individually carried through the mill.

To the guardhouse lawyer, the McDowell County decision seems to offer the most promising delay tactic yet seen.

Magazine Is So Advised In Response To Question Put To Editor; Race Relations Have Degenerated In A 'Saddening Way'

P. 4-A

Montgomery, Ala.

U. S. News & World Report Magazine

[Following is an interview of Grover Hall, editor of The Advertiser, by U.S. News & World Report magazine on Alabama race matters. It appears in the current issue along with interviews with 14 other Southern editors.]

MONTGOMERY, ALA.

Q—In your opinion, Mr. Hall, are relations between the races in the South better than they were, or not so good as they were, before the Supreme Court decision?

A—Confirming my answer to Alabama, there is not the slightest question but what they have degenerated in a saddening way. I see otherwise reasonable people who are now quite aroused about this thing.

You find, for example, that here in Montgomery, where we have had the boycott of the bus system by Negroes, that they have gotten what the "eggheads" call "polarized"—you've got the whites drawn up in one group and the colored in the other group.

Q—And it's a little difficult to get them together?

A—It's very difficult. This bus boycott has gone far beyond the original grievance as to the seating on the buses, and it is now just a general question of assault on the present structure.

Q—Is any action being taken toward ending the boycott?

A—It looks as if they might be about to do so now. The circuit judge here has instructed the grand jury to look into the matter. On the Alabama law books is an antiboycott law which, of course, was passed some time back to restrain labor boycotts.

What they hope to do, obviously, is to indict some of the colored leaders of this bus boycott, which is a rather extreme thing to do. One can imagine what would happen to such a conviction if it reached the United States Supreme Court.

Q—Is there any indication that the boycott is spreading?

A—Not in Montgomery itself. But in Macon County, which adjoins Montgomery, and in which Tuskegee Institute is located, they have what is called the Tuskegee Civic Association. In their organ, which I have a copy of, they ask that Macon County colored people impose a boycott on all the white merchants in Macon who are opposing them on their right to register and vote.

Q—Then you have what amounts to economic warfare?

A—Yes. And, significantly, so far it's the colored people who are making the moves and putting these boycotts into effect. As far as I know, there's no case of a white boycott.

Q—In general, was any progress being made toward equal opportunity of the two races prior to the court decision?

A—Here in Montgomery, for generations, we have had the very best of relations among all groups. For example, as late as last summer we had colored ballplayers out there mixed with whites in our municipal stadium.

You've got this kind of situation: There is not a segregated department store in town, nor, so far as I know, a segregated elevator left in Montgomery. In other words, vertically we are desegrated, but riding horizontally, for some reason, it's quite different. Don't ask me why—I can't answer it. The thing is irrational, but that doesn't mean it's not powerful.

Q—Has the progress toward good relations been slowed down since the decision on segregated schools, then?

A—It has. You've got the backs of the whites pretty well set now. They are frightened.

And my prediction is now—I will put it this way: Two years ago I wrote in an essay that no longer could an Alabama politician be elected by simply [bawling "nigger"]. Well, I don't think that is any longer true, and I think in our next governor's race you are going to have a contest here in which every man is going to make it very clear that he is for white folks.

I think you are going to see a stiffening resistance to registration of Negro voters, and all along the line, down to the city and county levels, there is going to be a tensing up.

Q—Are there any signs of a changing political attitude?

A—Yes. We have an unsought statement from Governor Folsom excoriating what he calls "outside agitators" for the incident at Tuscaloosa. Now, the significance of this is that Folsom has been the only major Southern demagogue in our history, with the short-time exception of Tom Watson in Georgia, who has ever been able to harness the so-called red necks and the colored voters. It's been an extraordinary performance in American politics that up to now he's been able to keep both those elements very happily in the same vest pocket.

But this has swung so in Alabama that even Folsom has felt called on to switch around, and now he's giving this gratuitous denunciation of the "outside agitator," and so on. And I assure you that's a very significant thing in our state, because it was only a few weeks ago that, when Congressman Adam Clayton Powell of Harlem came here to make a speech at State Teachers College, he was met at the airport by the No. 1 license-plate Cadillac of the Governor of Alabama; he was whisked to the executive mansion, and there had a Scotch and soda with the Governor—very much to the distress of white Alabama.

That became a very celebrated thing down here, because that night Congressman Powell made a speech at State Teachers College and a large part of it was devoted to a description of his very happy discussion of race problems with the Governor in the executive mansion.

Q—Do you think there would be violence if efforts were made to enforce a decision to desegregate schools?

A—Yes, I do. I think these things are utterly unpredicable, though. It's just like putting dynamite in a stump to blow it up. You don't know which way the stuff is going to blow out there.

For 10 years, colored students have been going to Southern universities without an incident. And then this thing pops up without rhyme or reason. I would say that because of this boycott, and the other things in the air, it was just primed for it. These Citizens' Council boys now come to you and say, "If you're not with us then you're a 'Negro lover.'" They put it on a basis that raw and simple.

Q—Why is the feeling so intense in the South on this general issue of desegregation?

A—In part, it's the feeling of being set upon and, they would say, having it rammed down their throats. The hypocrisy of the North is another very grievous thing to us. That absolutely incenses the Southerner—he knows that they have segregation in New York City in the school system. He knows about the Puerto Ricans; he knows about the Harlem ghetto; he knows about housing riots in Chicago.

And then for these agitators to come racing down here just drives them wild—plus which, basically, they just don't believe that the colored man at this stage is fit for association.

Q—Do you see any time in the early future when separate schools will come to an end in Alabama?

A—We have said repeatedly in editorials that segregation is eventually doomed—that's the way we have ordinarily put it—but that a general race mixing in the schools is unforeseeable.

The attitude now is, "We won't do it." The more extreme people try to argue that segregation will endure until Gabriel blows his horn, and they don't want you to discuss eventual desegregation, even a generation from now. They think that weakens the cause. The way people feel in Alabama now, they just don't mean to desegregate schools at all.

Q—Is the growth of the Citizens' Councils an important development?

A—Well, I can answer that very specifically. I am a sort of expert on those people, because they are the ones who are after me.

Last October one of our lawyers here called for an organization meeting of a Citizens' Council. I went down to look at this thing myself.

The city auditorium was less than half filled, and I came back and wrote an editorial next day that—well, my caption on it was, "The First One Was Harmless."

I pointed out there that, in addition to small crowds, they had no leading people, no face cards in the deck; no lawyers, doctors, politicians, etc., were to be seen. But along comes this boycott, and it inflames the atmosphere, and the next thing you know you have a throng out there of 15,000 people in the State Coliseum. There is an example of what is happening as things get tense. Yet there was nothing to criticize in the recent meeting. The leaders absolutely eschewed violence. They are out in the open. I could find absolutely nothing to criticize.

Senator Eastland came up with what seems to me to be a very cogent suggestion, and that is to take public funds and form a Southern regional propaganda apparatus to bombard the North with the truth of what's going on down here. Harper's Magazine and U.S. News & World Report are the only publications that have let the curtain down. The others are absolutely doctrinaire in the matter.

Proposal From A Negro Minister

EDITOR, THE ADVERTISER — What the world needs most now is prayer. The Lord says men ought to always pray and not faint.

I have been praying earnestly to the Lord since Christmas morning.

I woke up Christmas morning early, feeling the presence of God all around me, but over our city a grim shadow of discontentment settled on the streets because no sound of a city bus was heard anywhere. I promised God that I would go on a 9-day fast and prayer and used for a sign of that fast two crosses, one a black cross which I am wearing around my neck, the other a white cross which I am wearing on my left sleeve.

Montgomery

Some may ask why am I wearing black and white crosses. The answer should be obvious: I have two brothers, a Negro and a white brother. It seems that I am not getting very far with my praying, but I am not going to quit.

The one thing I hate more than anything else is what our good mayor and commissioner said and did in adopting a get-tough policy and virtually cut out all means of reconciliation. One other is almost as bad and that is the talk of bringing a grand jury into the matter.

All the Negroes in Montgomery are walking their feet off, swallowing the gall of harsh criticism, and dodging police apprehensions. If the city of Montgomery is to keep the faith of its colored ciitizens, it must show patience and kindness while dealing with their problems. I think I know my people very well, and I am sure that the Negroes in Montgomery did not start out trying to disobey any of the laws of the city, but rather they feel that they have not been given justice in some of the court decisions. Now if the courts go ahead and add to the fire that is already burning, then there will be no peace in sight.

I am asking for one more conference between the city and the Negro leaders and this time I want to be invited to attend. I want us to meet this time inviting our elder brother to be present and I will assure everybody that there will be agreements reached. The reason I want to be there because I want to lead the prayer services and want everybody to come praying for peace.

We the citizens of the United States of America must at this point of our lives use much caution and discretion as to what we say and do. The law is not always the best thing for us to resort to when something goes wrong for the devil is the best lawyer in all the world. The law is his strongest weapon.

I feel that there would be more good done at Tuscaloosa if the law would turn those young Negro youths to the church instead of to the courts. They should be made to go to the church and get on their knees and pray until God has forgiven them and then go to that fine young white man and beg him for forgiveness. I believe that white boy would do that. If I knew his address I would write him to this effect.

May I appeal to my race not ever to resort to such foolish tactics at any time. We cannot beat and kick our way into good civilization. It must be done by improving ourselves and strive to make ourselves acceptable in the sight of others. If the city and Negro leaders decide to do what I am asking, I would be glad if it could be arranged on a Moday for I am only in the city on Mondays.

Day Of Fun, Not Penitence

Editor, The Advertiser:

In reply to the question raised by L. E. Barton as to why Shrove Tuesday is a legal holiday:

The answer seems to be because it is also Mardi Gras Day. In the official list of Alabama state holidays it is listed as Mardi Gras Day. No doubt, because of the fact that New Orleans and Mobile were settled by Roman Catholics the Mardi Gras season developed as a season of festivity prior to the observance of Lent, and the last day and climax of the Mardi Gras season was the day before Lent which happens to be known in the church calendar as Shrove Tuesday.

Whatever religious significance the day had, it is not generally now observed as the day of penitence and confession but a day of revelry and fun-making. In its religious significance the day should be a day of penitence and confession of sins. Not necessarily to a priest but to Almighty God. This would be a fitting preparation for the Lenten season.

The doctrine of penance as distinguished from penitence or accompanying penitence is peculiar to only a part of the Christian church, whereas, all Christians believe in penitence and the forgiveness of sins. However, as now observed the day has little, if any, religious significance. Mardi Gras has become a big occasion in Mobile which is presumably why it is perpetuated as a state holiday.

Alabama Editors Are Saying

Invoking Interposition

The Clayton Record

Advertiser P. 4-A

THE Alabama Legislature's decision to invoke interposition as a means of coping with the school integration problem ,threatens to touch off the liveliest lem, threatens to touch off the niveliest preme Court ruling in 1954.

Though the Alabama solons have been accused of acting rather hastily in so weigthy a matter, we feel that they have very definitely mirrored the desires of the vast majority of Alabama voters.

Basis for the action seems to stem from the rather interesting observation that Alabama has never surrendered to the federal government her power to maintain separate schools for the two races. The resolution contends that until the states do surrender that power in "plain and unequivocal" language, then the decisions and orders of the United States Supreme Court as relates to school integration are "null, void, and of no effect."

Grover C. Hall, editor of The Montgomery Advertiser, dealt at considerable length on the historical significance of interposition (or nullification) in a recent Advertiser editorial. The editorial was extremely interesting and informative because the doctrine of interposition—which is actually one of the states' few remaining avenues of authority in dealing with the federal government—is a little known and somewhat fragmentary element in American history. Due to interceding circumstances, the lethality [sic] of the doctrine has never been fully proven in history. It does record, however, instances where the doctrine has been successfully invoked by a state or states when federal authority became too strangulatory.

A recent Dothan Eagle editorial observes that "it would be a mistake for anyone, anywhere, to regard this unusual action by the Alabama legislature in a light vein or with scorn—not that it is liable to get Alabama anywhere or be a successful challenge of the Supreme Court. What is significant is that this state's legislature has been quiet on the subject of segregation in the schools. It has refrained from bombast and even on the passage of this most unusual resolution there were no inflammatory speeches, waving of the bloody shirt or threats of violence . . ."

For our part, we hail the passage of the resolution of interposition if for no other reason than as evidence that the state of Alabama has passed the "lip-service" stage in the picture of school integration. We hail it as an indication that Alabama may lead the way in a course of action in harmony with the wishes of the people.

Reshuffle, Renege, Reelect

EDITOR, THE ADVERTISER — For 40 years or more I have heard my neighbors asking two questions: "Why don't they reshuffle by legislative enactment?" "Why does reapportionment always fail?" P. 4-A

Anyone who has set in the legislature has those answers but no one ever gives them, so here goes.

If they proceed by legislative enactment they cannot beef up the membership. That's that. Reapportionment fails because of too little steam and too much much Section 284. Section 284 sets out that when the method of reapportioning the Alabama legislature is done it cannot be done by constitutional amendment. So when the legislature sits down to reshuffle it wakes up between two road blocks, human nature is up above them and Section 284 is down below and there is nothing left but to pull over.

When reshuffling is sounded on Goat Hill, Alabama drops into three pieces like Caesar's summation. First part is looking to gain seats, second part won't be molested, and third part loses seats. "The windy suspirations" must be made by the palace guard in the first part. The second part is only mildly amused; and the third part "lets their feet drag the ground."

The mechanics of lawmaking is such that as long as you are represented the geography of the representation does not matter to you and you and you; it does matter to the castle's beef-eaters. Everyone is represented in both houses today. The boys that got frisky with the tea in Boston were not represented and is not a case in point.

Reapportionment rests upon three magnificent obsessions:

¶ That the home growns are better.

¶ That it can be soul satisfying.

¶ That its cost can be ignored.

That first thing is the Blarney Stone that most of us kiss, yet it can be shown to rest upon just as thin air as Hamlet's blue canopy. When our Lord was on this earth the home growns were below par and there is not one whit of proof that that chap who saw the light where you saw it is any better a representative than one who comes into your bailiwick, "sitting, clothed, and in his right mind."

We can be broke-out with representation yet it is never quite soul satisfying. Take my county for instance, and it is probably like yours. We have our rivalry between towns and our factions. Some are of Cephas, some are of Apollas, and some are of Paul, and I'd like to think some are of Christ, but I am more positive about the first three. We send three men to the legislature, they represent the whole county; there are 428,000 acres in the county but they all live on the same 40.

Way over in fly time some member of the House will stand and start drooling about enlarging those chambers. If the Senate is to go from 35 to 67 and the House is to come up in the same tenor and them 200 helpers is to receive some of the leaven that "leaveneth the whole lump" some room must be found. These chambers are on the middle floor and in the center of the building, which is made with hands, eternal in the culture of Alabama. The last line of dedication was, "This that man hath joined together let not God put asunder." To take down that dome and level the building off to the ceiling of the first floor would require a lot of scotch and soda. Heretofore this has snatched the pillow from under the old boy's head and reapportionment breathes its last for four years.

His Excellency is foresworn to reshuffle, and that makes an interesting speculation as to what is coming. But if you don't want to speculate you can call up that old line:

For whatever happens my friend
Taxgatherers don't lose
And taxpayerse don't win.

And you won't be speculating then, bud.

200 Alabama Whites and Negroes Discuss Ways to End 'Conflicts'

Sun. 2-12-56

New York, N.Y.

By WAYNE PHILLIPS

Special to The New York Times.

MONTGOMERY, Ala., Feb. 11 —More than 200 whites and Negroes sat down together here today to discuss ways of "resolving community conflicts."

It was not a large meeting, and outwardly it was not a dramatic one. Unlike the state-wide rally last night of the White Citizens Council there were no flags, band or fiery speeches.

But it was an example of what was quietly going on behind the scenes in the South, behind the façade of inflamed passions, desperate battles to preserve tradition and the clashes of prides and prejudices.

It was an example of the effort to work out a peaceful transition for the South through the last, and in many ways more difficult stage on the road from a slave to a free society. And it was proof that such a transition was possible.

The meeting was the annual coference of the Alabama Council on Human Relations — the only inter-racial group organized in Alabama. It is one of twelve such councils in southern states, all affiliated with the Southern Regional Council, which has its headquarters in Atlanta, Ga.

It was held in a second-floor auditorium in a fifty-year-old building on the campus of the Alabama State College, the state's Negro counterpart of the University of Alabama Tuscaloosa. The auditorium is named for the town of Tullibody, Scotland, the birthplace of the college's white founder, William Burns Paterson.

The white people who attended —about seventy of them—had courage. It is against the law for whites and Negroes to intermingle in a public place in Montgomery. And they were defying that law, as well as the custom that it represented, in the context of last night's anti-integration rally, the riots in Tuscaloosa, the Negro boycott of Tuscaloosa and of the city buses here, and recent bombings of the homes of Montgomery Negro leaders.

State House Leader Present

It took social courage, for what they were doing undoubtedly would arouse those who attended last night's rally. At that rally was a United States Senator, James O. Eastland of Mississippi, State legislators of Alabama, the Attorney General of Georgia, and Montgomery city officials.

P. 78

Among the whites at today's meeting were:

Representative George Hawkins, floor leader in the State House of Representatives and a member of the council's board of directors; James Battles, executive secretary of the State Congress of Industrial Organizations; Carl Griffin, State president of the American Federation of Labor; Charles Dobbins, former publisher of The Montgomery Examiner, and Dr. Walter D. Agnew, retired president of the Huntington College in Montgomery.

Also, Rev. Albert S. Foley, professor of psychology at the Jesuit Spring Hill College in Mobile, Ala., the state's only integrated school; Dr. Robert E. Tidwell, retired dean of the College of Education at the University of Alabama and a former state superintendent of education; Rabbi Charles Mantinband of the Congregation B'nai Israel in Hattiesburg, Miss., and Dr. Andrew Turnipseed, Mobile district superintendent of the Methodist Church.

The other whites in the audience were a mingling of students and persons active in religious, labor or similar organizations. Most of them were leaders. They were not—as were those who jammed the State Coliseum last night—members of the rank and file.

At the conference today a symposium was held on means of resolving race conflicts in the community.

Mrs. Fred Couey, a Montgomery clinical psychologist, spoke on the uses of research to pinpoint the source and strength of such conflicts.

The Role of the Leader

Dr. L. H. Foster, president of Tuskegee Institute, spoke of the role of the individual leader in a crisis—and said "we will all agree we are facing a crisis."

Dr. Foster's institute is in the heavy Negro home county of State Senator Sam Englehardt Jr., president of the Central Alabama Citizens Council that sponsored liast night's rally.

Rabbi Mantinband spoke on the religious resources useful in resolving such conflicts. He is a former chairman of the Mississippi Council on Human Relations, and noted that representatives of his state had played a major role at last night's rally.

The symposium was followed by a question and answer period. At lunch time whites and Negroes sat together in the college cafeteria, grouped by their home districts. During the afternoon a report on the conclusions of the symposium and discussion periods was prepared.

What is Richmond, Virginia?

The 2nd Capital of the Confederacy.

What is Montgomery, Alabama?

The 1st, Best and Next Capital of the Confederacy.

Montgomery Ala.

We do not seek to disvalue Richmond, but all it can claim is being the "Womb of the Republic", whereas Alabama is the "Womb of the Confederate Republic."

Wed. 2-8-56

What we're getting around to is charging Virginia with what the judge calls receiving and possessing stolen property.

The Advertiser lays its predicate by reminding Alabamians that the South's leading editor, Virginius Dabney of The Richmond Times-Dispatch, is the gentleman who has systematically insisted for 20 years that Richmond had the first street cars, whereas everybody knows that Montgomery had the first street cars. He has been unabashed and impenitent in the face of The Advertiser's energetic corrections. So much to create an attitude of skepticism towards things Richmond.

Now to the point. Where is the Confederate Constitution? You'd think it was secure under a glass lid at the Capitol in Montgomery, because in Montgomery was it written.

But this document, which engages the admiration and scrutiny of historians and political scientists more all the time, is sequestered in the Confederate Museum at Richmond.

How did this fall too? The Confederate Constitution was written in Montgomery. Then the CSA capital was moved to Richmond. When the yankees feloniously and premeditatedly took Richmond, they captured the Constitution and for a long time it was the stolen goods of Washington.

In a later day, when the bloody shirt had been largely bleached, Virginia managed to cajole Washington and to receive and possess the renowned document (just how and when we are checking on).

The Confederate Constitution was written in Montgomery and it is our view that Richmond should surrender the Constitution to Montgomery, the senior capital.

Many things support our contention of the justice of restoration.

In the first place, nobody down this way seems to like the U.S. Constitution anymore. That is true in some measure of Virginia, but the repugnance is not so great.

There might be some apprehension that the CSA Constitution would be readopted by the Alabama legislature, but The Advertiser rejects that apprehension because Alabama, like Virginia, has nullified much of what it dislikes about the U.S. Constitution.

Back in 1939 the State of Iowa returned the Alabama battle flags captured in the Civil War. Surely Virginia is not to be outdone in magnanimity by Iowa.

Finally, there is the question of the physical safety of the Constitution. At the rate relations with Washington are deteriorating, how can we be sure that Richmond and the Constitution won't be taken a second time?

The time is appropriate, for shortly the South will be observing the Confederate Centennial. (Incidentally, Alabama's preeminence as a Confederate Capital was recognized when the All-South Centennial Congress organized at Charleston, S.C., recently and chartered itself under the laws of the State of Alabama—not Virginia.) The Constitution should be on display at its birthplace on that occasion.

Alabama will forgive Editor Dabney his incorrigible street car hoaxing if he will interpose his influence in Virginia to accomplish the return of our Stone of Scone.

SEGREGATION STAND GETS PRIMARY ROLE

Alabaman Says Candidates Will Be Queried

Memphis Tenn.

VIEWS TO BE SOUGHT

Sun. 2-5-56

By The Associated Press

MONTGOMERY, Ala., Feb. 4. —The increasing anxiety over racial segregation in Alabama will be reflected in the Democratic primaries this spring.

A spokesman for the pro-white Citizens Councils organized in at least 18 counties and already claiming a membership of more than 20,000, disclosed Saturday that candidates for office will be challenged to "stand up and be counted."

38a

Want To Know Stand

"We want to know how they stand," said the spokesman who wouldn't be quoted by name "at this time." And, he added, "we'll smoke them out if we have to."

Fifty-two delegates to the Democratic National Convention will be elected in the May 1 primary and the runoff May 29, along with a Democratic national committeeman and committeewoman.

At the same time, the voters will nominate candidates for presidential elector, all nine seats in Congress, one seat on the Public Service Commission, two places on the state Supreme Court, one on the Court of Appeals, and several lesser district offices.

The spokesman for the white Citizens Councils — dedicated to the "maintenance of peace, order and domestic tranquility" and to the preservation of segregation "by peaceful and legal means"—said the "stand up and be counted" challenge will extend to all candidates for every office.

Meanwhile, plans were disclosed for the organization of a statewide Alabama Citizens Council to function in every county and with a membership goal of 200,000 or more.

Like Former Klan

An organization of that size could be molded into a powerful political weapon reminiscent of the old Ku Klux Klan but disavowing the violent nightriding activities of those earlier days.

Senator James O. Eastland (D., Miss.), one of the nation's most outspoken advocates of white supremacy, will speak at a rally Thursday sponsored by the seven-county Central Alabama Citizens Council. Leaders hope to have plans for the statewide organization perfected by that time.

Already, said state Senator Sam Engelhardt of Macon County, there are some 25 chapters and others are being organized.

The central Alabama Council, made up of white residents of Montgomery and six adjoining counties, is the largest in Alabama and perhaps in the South, said Mr. Engelhardt. It claims 6,000 members.

Several members of the Legislature have joined councils in their communities along with other public officials. All three members of Montgomery's city commission have announced their membership since a Negro bus boycott began two months ago.

Montgomery's Bombing

The Talladega Daily Home

RACIAL agitation and resentment of that agitation reached a regrettable climax at Montgomery last night when a bomb of some sort was hurled at the home of a Negro minister who has been a leader in the bus boycott of recent weeks.

Advertiser 2-4-

We deplore the situation. We condemn in precisely equal measure the hoodlums who hurled the bomb and the minister who helped to bring on unbearable tension by deliberately working to create a crisis over racial segregation in public transportation.

The City of Montgomery has posted a reward of $500 for information leading to the arrest and conviction of the bombers. That is an action which all right-thinking people will commend.

Under Montgomery city law segregation of the races is required in public conveyances.

Montgomery Ala.

The boycott began when a Negro woman was found guilty of violating that law and given a moderate fine.

From week to week the tension has mounted. The boycott leaders, this particular minister loud among them, have turned down proposal after proposal designed to meet whatever complaints Negro passengers might have had.

Birm. 2-7-56

Their refusal to go half way in the situation made it perfectly plain that their goal was not an agreement reached in Montgomery's traditional understanding and good will between the races, but the breeding of animosity and controversy in order to attack segregation.

The incident but points up the necessity for calmness on the part of both white and Negro as Alabama charts her course for the difficult days ahead.

History Of The Boycott Law

Advertiser 2-4-

IT IS now apparent that the present Montgomery County grand jury will consider indictment of the bus boycott leaders. If indictments are returned, presumably the defendants will be tried under the state law governing "Boycotting & Blacklisting" (Title 14, Chapter 20, Sections 54-82, Code of 1940).

Montgomery, Ala.

This law, part of which has been held unconstitutional by the U.S. Supreme Court (the section forbidding picketing), was passed in October, 1921, to meet a labor crisis in Birmingham. Coal mine disturbances—including boycotts, dynamitings and murders—had moved Gov. Kilby to take firm measures. Troops had been on duty in Jefferson County, but, the governor said in his address to the special session of the legislature which convened Oct. 4, state criminal law was inadequate to cope with the situation.

Wed. 2-15-56

GOV. KILBY'S proposal to strengthen the boycott law, as embodied in the criminal code of 1907, was not the chief reason for his calling the special session. In fact, the boycott amendment was No. 13 in a list of 18 measures he wanted passed. Of the boycott proposal, Kilby told the legislature:

> The recent coal strikes in this state developed the fact that our civil and criminal laws were inadequate to promptly and properly deal with the conditions which existed just prior to and after the strike was declared. It was then discovered that by reason of the inadequacy of the statutes of this state relating to strikes, boycotts and blacklisting, etc., that the civil authorities were unable to prevent or even check many wrongful acts which inevitably led to the calling of the strike and to the perpetration of many heinous crimes which attended and followed the strike.

BECAUSE local authorities were powerless to act with no laws to back them up, it was necessary to call out the militia, Kilby told the legislature. He continued:

> While martial law was not absolutely declared, nor the civil law actually suspended, the condition of affairs was so critical, so serious, that at times it appeared almost imperative that martial law should be declared in the coal mining districts of the state . . . If the statutes of the state had been adequate, and the civil authorities had been able to . . . deal with the . . . labor trouble, much if not all of the great loss of life, property and enormous expenses of the state would have been avoided.

Gov. Kilby spelled out his labor philosophy, which sounds primitive in these Taft-Hartley times. Basically, it was a recognition of the worker's "inalienable right" to work or not to work; the employer's inalienable right to hire and fire as he sees fit.

KILBY said the trouble in the coal mines was the work of "foreign agitators" attempting to promote socialism "which often results in anarchy." Then he got to the point:

> A conspiracy to starve or freeze . . . or even an agreement to do acts, the natural and probable result of which is to cause great suffering or inconvenience to the public, is little less than treason against the government . . .

THE get-tough-with-labor amendment, substantially the same law under which bus boycott leaders may be indicted, was passed. But, recalls Kilby's house floor leader at the time, Dothan Atty. Oscar L. Thompkins, not without a fight. "I was almost lynched in the process," Thompkins said in a telephone interview yesterday.

A few legislators denounced Kilby's proposal as "part of a nationwide program to destroy organized labor." Charged Rep. Harrison of Jefferson: "The Governor used every means in his power to crush the miners' strike in Jefferson County, then when he was called on to arbitrate, decided every point in favor of the coal operators."

Rep. Partridge of Franklin spoke against the bill, declaring that its effect would be to "bring the laboring man to the chopping block and lay his head on it."

REP. BENNERS of Jefferson spoke for the bill. He said the bill was aimed at labor agitators, and offered this terse, if drastic, advice to labor unions: "Hang your orators."

Yesterday, former floor leader Thomkins said that he hadn't reread the law he helped pass in many years. In fact, he thought it had been declared unconstitutional. (Only parts have been.) However, he confirmed that it was intended for use against labor. Situations like the Montgomery bus boycott were not foreseen.

THE law, originally aimed at miners and now brought to bear against non-riders of city buses, says in part:

Two or more persons who, without a just cause or legal excuse for so doing, enter into any combination, conspiracy, agreement, arrangement, or understanding for the purpose of hindering, delaying, or preventing any other persons, firms, corporations . . . from carrying on any lawful business shall be guilty of a misdemeanor.

Violation is declared a misdemeanor, with maximum punishment fixed at 6 months in jail or $1,000 fine, or both.

The 'Agitators'

Advertiser P. 4-A

Gov. Folsom hurled his best blow since the start of his second term when he hit at "professional and outside agitators" for their part in the University of Alabama campus riots. The governor named the NAACP, along with professional outsiders, and some inside professional helpers. "If they would leave our problems in Alabama alone," the governor said, "we'd be better able to cope with them."—Opelika Daily News.

Sat. 2-18-56

The South's resistance to the latter-day abolitionists will be more successfully carried off if we get the main body of our adversaries properly sighted.

This is not the fact today. We are being diverted by certain windbags who normally attract little notice. P. 4-A

If we're going to resist, it is important to recognize the identity of the "agitators". Montgomery, Ala.

The NAACP makes a pretty likely personal devil for us—fanatical, hostile and foreign-based. But the NAACP is only a satellite "agitator". The ineptness and mediocrity of its leadership is seen by the imprudence of their choice of the two women students as the pioneers at the University. Had the NAACP had any wits about it, it would have carefully screened and selected a discreet, superior Negro youth to enter the medical school.

Who are the consequential "agitators" of the race problem? A realistic inventory, as opposed to the personal devil delusion, reads something like this—

¶ The Democratic Party and its platforms, past and to come this summer.

¶ The Republican Party likewise.

¶ The executive branch of government, as represented by the President now sitting and all Presidents to come, no matter from which party he is taken.

¶ The judicial branch of government. It is all right to vent spleen on the Alabamian, Justice Black, but there is no point in overlooking that if he had voted no the decision would have been 8 to 1.

¶ The legislative branch of government. As Congressman Andrews pointed out anew recently, a majority of the members of the House and Senate are opposed to segregation. They may be insincere, but they vote against segregation.

¶ A majority of the citizens of the United States, who have little contact with the problem.

¶ The churches.

¶ A majority of the people in the world, two-thirds of whom are colored one hue or the other.

It is these elements that provide the "agitators" that count. Without their agitations, the ill-disciplined leadership of the NAACP wouldn't amount to a hill of beans.

Wipe the NAACP away without trace and the South would still be assailed by agitators. For example, what is Thurgood Marshall, the best of the NAACP, compared with agitators such as Eisenhower, Truman, Harriman, Kefauver, Stevenson, Nixon, Humphrey? Just another lawyer.

You've got to recognize your adversary before you can make skillful resistance.

Clarifying A Clarification

EDITOR, THE ADVERTISER — Thursday's Advertiser carried a news item given to one of your reporters by myself that had been added to, subtracted from to the extent that it was hard to recognize.

Montgomery, Ala.

The object of the report was to clear up an erroneous statement reported to have been given by an outside source, but included in S. S. Humphries' report of Jan. 17 when he resigned from the Macon County board of registrars, stating that 46 had registered on Jan. 16 when only 14 had registered. This was cleared up well enough, but it did not clear up the statement that Humphries had walked out while we were in session. This too was reported to have been given by another source than Humphries.

P. 4-A

The story did not state that 50% of the 46 registered on Nov. 21 and December 19 were applications held by Humphries taken before I became a member of the board. Said applications had not been accepted or rejected. This was requested in my report.

The news item also stated that I had been under extreme pressure and had received phone calls at all times of night. No such report was given. The only phone call I received was from a news reporter.

The part of the report referring to the action of former boards since 1946 was not discussed or even thought of.

Hick State

Editor, The Advertiser:

How corny can you get. I noticed the state contemplates putting the words "Y'All Come" on the 1957 automobile tags.

This is ridiculous, and the more one thinks about it the more laughable and absurd it becomes.

Our state has become the laughing stock of the nation now, and this will just confirm what the rest of the states are thinking, "that we are a first class bunch of hicks," and I can see no reason for drawing the attention of every one out of the state to the fact that Alabama has dropped to a new low.

Most everyone that I have heard say anything about it agree that they will be embarrassed to be seen driving an automobile with a tag that has this slogan on it. There is nothing attractive about it, and certainly does not cause people to want to come to our state. In fact, it is rather repulsive and vulgar usage of the English language. Please don't foster such verbage on the good people of Alabama.

Dreadful Indignity

Editor, The Advertiser:

Is it true? In Sunday's Advertiser-Journal I read that "Y'All Come" was going to be put on our car tags. Ain't we going to be allowed to keep any dignity?

When I think of the handsome cars and lovely people of Alabama going into the different states and having people everywhere deriding Alabamians it seems dreadful.

Even without "Y'All Come" on the tag I was driving on East River drive in New York City and had to stop for a traffic signal. A group of boys yelled at us—seeing the Alabama tag—"Y'All Come." My little grandchildren wanted to know what they meant. Granny didn't have the heart to tell them.

Is it too late to get them changed? Couldn't we do something about them?

'Y'All Come' Pops Up Again

The Gadsden Times

Feb. 3, 1956

IN 1954, before "Big Jim" became Gov. James E. Folsom of Alabama, he used a homey little slogan to good advantage—"Y'All Come." Before it was over a lot of people got rather tired of hearing and reading about "Y'All Come." More folk apparently didn't mind because plenty of them came. P. 4-A

But now it seems the phrase has become of such historical worth that it will be imprinted on 1957 license plates.

With "Y'All Come" at the bottom and "Heart of Dixie" at the top, Gov. Folsom's own heart should beat with glee with his political message designed for statewide and nationwide distribution for 12 months out of the year.

Of course, there'll be plenty of people like ourselves who will flatly refuse to serve as messagers for Mr. Folsom's cause. Whether it is political advertising in neon lights or a simple wording at the bottom of automobile tags, most persons will object to serving as objects of mobile outdoor advertising for Gov. Folsom or anyone else.

We find this business extremely objectionable, and open to the severest criticism. Mr. Folsom, we are confident, feels very warmly toward those "three little words," but his affrontery in assuming that all Alabamians share such sentimental taste is unparalleled in our memory.

There is a state law (Title 51, Section 708, of the Alabama Code) which refers to "defacing" automobile licenses. Fortunately the law was written solely to discourage criminal intent, for it says that an auto tag cannot, without fine, be mutilated or altered "for the purpose of deception," and there's the out.

Anyone wanting to use a dab of black paint (a simple job since the colors, black on orange, are likely to be reversed next year) or a pair of tin-clippers wil be completely within their legal rights to do a little blotting or trimming.

As a matter of fact, using a little paint or a cutting utensil, for many of us, will be following the letter of the law—ridding ourselves of dictated deception.

The Last Straw

The Dothan Eagle

THE last straw has not yet been piled upon the camel's back in this ecstatically happy State of Folsomania.

But it's coming.

Bob Ingram, who does the Capitol chores for The Montgomery Advertiser, reports that when Alabama automobile owners line up to buy their 1957 license tags next fall they will be in for a great, big surprise.

The "Heart of Dixie" slogan will still be there, at the top. Something new will be "Y'All Come" at the bottom.

It's already in the works. The unblushing report was confirmed by Revenue Commissioner Larue Horn and again at Kilby Prison where the tags are made.

Thus, every automobile owner in Alabama will be displaying the governor's personal slogan, front and rear, and paying for the privilege. And every driver who keeps his eyes ahead will be part of one, vast captive audience.

So, you don't like it? You voted against him, or since changed your mind? You'll just scratch out "Y'All Come" or cover it with something else? Oh, no you won't. There's a law against that. It's the statute known as defacing or marring license plates.

If the governor orders the slogan as long as he's in office, you'll carry it—front and rear—through 1959. That's because he's in position to do exactly that until he goes out of office in January, 1959. His successor can do the inscribing for the 1960 tags, but no sooner.

Then, maybe, you can get a new message, like "He Went That-Away," but not before.

"Y'All Come!"—and the line forms on the right Oct. 1, 1956.

The Question Of A Wisconsin Schoolgirl

EDITOR, THE ADVERTISER—Our Social Problems class of Saxon Union Free High School has recently read an article from the Jan. 22 Minneapolis Sunday Tribune about the bus situation concerning the Negroes. P. 4-A

Our class now has the viewpoints of the north and would appreciate it if you sent us one of your issues carrying the Southern viewpoints.

"Dear Jane: Perhaps this note tailored for a classroom in Wisconsin will be better than previously written editorials, which have repeatedly made the point that there isn't going to be any general race mixing in Alabama for a long time to come.

"The U.S. Supreme Court says we are going to mix the races. We say we aren't.

"Is this defiance of the court? Yes.

"Is this possible? American history answers yes. Alabama gets part of her inspiration from Wisconsin. Your teacher is doubtless an intellectually honest person and educated. So get her to tell your class about the time Wisconsin defied the court in the 1850s. Wisconsin believed in abolition of slavery as sincerely as Alabama believes in segregation. The Supreme Court of Chief Justice Taney ordered Wisconsin to obey the Fugitive Slave Act. The Wisconsin court would not even accept the Supreme Court's writ. It was passionate defiance. Ask your teacher to tell you all about it.—Ed."

Clarifying A Clarification

EDITOR, THE ADVERTISER — Thursday's Advertiser carried a news item, given to one of your reporters by myself that had been added to, subtracted from to the extent that it was hard to recognize.

Montgomery

The object of the report was to clear up an erroneous statement reported to have been given by an outside source, but included in S. S. Humphries' report of Jan. 17 when he resigned from the Macon County board of registrars, stating that 46 had registered on Jan. 16 when only 14 had registered. This was cleared up well enough, but it did not clear up the statement that Humphries had walked out while we were in session. This too was reported to have been given by another source than Humphries.

The story did not state that 50% of the 46 registered on Nov. 21 and December 19 were applications held by Humphries taken before I became a member of the board. Said applications had not been accepted or rejected. This was requested in my report.

The news item also stated that I had been under extreme pressure and had received phone calls at all times of night. No such report was given. The only phone call I received was from a news reporter.

The part of the report referring to the action of former boards since 1946 was not discussed or even thought of.

Hick State

Editor, The Advertiser:

How corny can you get. I noticed the state contemplates putting the words "Y'All Come" on the 1957 automobile tags.

This is ridiculous, and the more one thinks about it the more laughable and absurd it becomes.

Our state has become the laughing stock of the nation now, and this will just confirm what the rest of the states are thinking, "that we are a first class bunch of hicks," and I can see no reason for drawing the attention of every one out of the state to the fact that Alabama has dropped to a new low.

Most everyone that I have heard say anything about it agree that they will be embarrassed to be seen driving an automobile with a tag that has this slogan on it. There is nothing attractive about it, and certainly does not cause people to want to come to our state. In fact, it is rather repulsive and vulgar usage of the English language. Please don't foster such verbage on the good people of Alabama.

Dreadful Indignity

Editor, The Advertiser:

Is it true? In Sunday's Advertiser-Journal I read that "Y'All Come" was going to be put on our car tags. Ain't we going to be allowed to keep any dignity?

When I think of the handsome cars and lovely people of Alabama going into the different states and having people everywhere deriding Alabamians it seems dreadful.

Even without "Y'All Come" on the tag I was driving on East River drive in New York City and had to stop for a traffic signal. A group of boys yelled at us—seeing the Alabama tag—"Y'All Come." My little grandchildren wanted to know what they meant. Granny didn't have the heart to tell them.

Is it too late to get them changed? Couldn't we do something about them?

Mob Rule In Lowndes Too

LaFayette, Ala.

Editor, The Advertiser:

Mob rule cannot be condoned. It cannot be condoned in Tuscaloosa any more than it can be condoned in the rural counties of Alabama. We must face the facts. Mob rule was in force at the University last week. Mob rule was also in force in Lowndes County last week.

The Child Welfare Worker of the Department of Public Welfare in Lowndes County was on a routine mission of mercy in an isolated section of the county last week. This lady is a graduate of Agnes Scott College in Decatur, Ga., and a graduate student of the Universities of Mississippi and Alabama. She is a state and federal employe. For eight years she has carried out her assignments giving help to the white and colored unfortunates of Lowndes County.

Alone and unprotected on a rural road, she passed a colored school just dismissing for the day. Two teen-aged Negro boys refused to move from the road as she was passing. When she slowed to a stop, a rock was thrown at her car by a Negro girl and another Negro girl spit on the ground at her feet. She was surrounded by a group of "hostiles." This occasion, as much as the celebrated autherine Lucy case, calls for serious thinking by citizens of all races. These Negro children would not have acted in such a maner if their parents had not been subjected to outside propaganda. The progress for better racial relations which is the work of more than three generations is being nullified by foreign agitators who do not give a fig for the workable status-quo.

This incident in Lowndes County, remote as it may seem, has all the elements of tragedy in its content that the Tuscaloosa incident has. This "happening" however, will most assuredly not reach the public press as its celebrated counterpart did. Why? Because the NAACP will not recognize it for its undertones of Negro violence, and it will never be printed in the Detroit, Chicago, or New York newspapers.

Iread Joe Azbell's columns Sunday and Monday. Part of it was amusing and the rest was good horse sense. If let alone, everything would settle down and be as it used to be.

Newspapers and television are giving too much publicity to the disturbing situation. The leaders are eating it up, seeing themselves on television and being on the front page of the newspapers. If all the publicity would stop, they would see that no one cares one way or the other.

Both white and colored people have worked together and been good to each other. Let's see how quick all this disturbance can be stopped. Give less publicity to the agitators, then they will see just how much our people, white and colored, care about them. Peace of mind among our people is all that matters now.

Police investigate pushing incident by whites, Negroes

Birmingham, Ala. News 2-16-56

City police today were called to investigate a "pushing" incident between groups of white and Negro children in Inglenook.

Asst. Chief J. C. Lance said the incident took place at 41st-av and 40th-pl. Involved were students from nearby Inglenook Grammar School and Negro students who catch a bus at that intersection which takes them to Parker High School.

No one was hurt and no arrests were made. Chief Lance said today's incident was a mild one and the apparent outgrowth of a rock-throwing incident several days ago.

WHITE CITIZENS in the area had complained to the Police Department that white students were chased upon their porches by rock-throwing Negroes.

Four girl students from Parker High were detained for questioning by police at the scene this morning. But Parker Principal R. C. Johnson said the girls denied having anything to do with the pushing.

Chief Lance said Principal Johnson and Inglenook Principal Roy Shelton had scheduled a conference to discuss ways to prevent future trouble.

City Commission Lauded For Stand On Racial Issue

Advertiser Montgomery, Ala. Thurs. 2-16-56

The Montgomery City Commission has won the support of many residents of Lipscomb, Ala., for its stand against racial integration. P. 5-A

Commissioner Frank Parks yesterday announced receipt of a petition signed by 256 residents of the Jefferson County community adjoining Bessemer. It was received by registered mail from L. D. Allred, a member of the Lipscomb City Council and said:

"We, the undersigned citizens . . . wish to extend to you congratulations for the stand you have taken in the fight for segregation. Keep up the good work."

The signers numbered 10 per cent of Lipscomb's population of 2,550.

Parks and the other members of Montgomery's commission, Mayor W. A. Gayle and Commissioner Clyde Sellers, adopted a get-tough policy last month toward the Negro boycott of Montgomery City Lines, and announced at the same time that all three commissioners had joined the pro-segregation Central Alabama Citizens Council.

Editor, You Remind Me Of Neutralist Nehru

P. 4-A

EDITOR, THE ADVERTISER—So many misstatements have occurred on your editorial page with reference to integration of negroes in public schools and as to the Citizens Councils that I feel it is proper that some one make answer.

Some weeks ago you mentioned that integration had been notably successful in the City of Washington. If you intended to say that there had been no attending violence you are absolutely correct. However, here are some of the results:

Montgomery

Formerly there were about 64% white pupils and 36% negroes, that percentage is now approximately reversed as the integration has forced many white families to move out of Washington into states where their children can attend segregated schools. And reports from the school officials show that the integration has caused the scholastic standards of the Washington schools to be lowered.

Ala.

General Eisenhower opposed integration in the Army when he was its head. President Eisenhower, the leader of the Republican Party, who follows in the footsteps of his predecessor in seeking Negro votes for his party, does not send his grandchildren to the integrated schools of Washington. They go to a private Episcopal school in Virginia, where there is no integration, although the President is a Presbyterian.

Vice President Nixon and the Cabinet give full cry to integration but their children attend a school to which only one Negro child has been admitted.

In an editorial today occurs the following statement: "Commissioner Sellers is a card carrying member of the White Citizens Council, an organization dedicated to boycott and economic sanctions against Negroes." The statement as to the Citizens Council is absolutely false. Had you taken the trouble to investigate you would have found that you were making a false statement.

The Citizens Councils are dedicated, as was The Advertiser in times past, to the preservation of our Southern customs and laws by legal means only.

I know whereof I speak as I have helped in the formation of several county councils in Alabama.

There are many legal methods we can, and which I sincerely trust we shall, adopt to preserve the laws and customs for which our ancestors so courageously fought, even when Alabama was occupied by Federal soldiers.

It is indeed regrettable that you have never had the courage to take a stand either for integration or against it. One can't be neutral. However, you remind me of neutralist Nehru, all of your criticism is of those who have organized to fight integration, just as Nehru—who says he is neutral but only criticizes the West.

Mutually Exclusive Roles

Editor, The Advertiser:

After reading Tom Johnson's column in The Advertiser, in which the ambitious young minister of Lutheran faith is described as taking such an active part in the 90-year-old Civil War question of segregation of the races:

It is apparent that this young and well meaning minister is conscientious and feels he is doing the right thing. We need lots of young men like that and I have no objections to their feeling free to use their time as best they see fit.

For one so young to move into a strange section or into a new state and to immediately project himself into a heated controversy as age-old as the separation of races at the same time hiding behind the skirts of the ministry in order to defy the very law that grants him immunity, shows a disregard for both Christian principle and for established law which has as its purpose to guard the peace that comes from nowhere except through Christ the Prince of Peace.

Can one imagine the Master using such tactics to serve the Lord?

Schizophrenic Editorial Page

EDITOR, THT TDVERTISER — It is amazing and hard to understand how wan editorial as facetious as "Two Questions Arise", and the splendid one entitled "A Commanding Event In The Resistance" could appear on the same editorial page (Jan. 11).

The thundering revolt of Virginia against the race mixing order of the Supreme Court was told in a powerful and ably written editorial of that day.

The other editorial, in which you attempt to cloud the issue involving sound advice as to ending the bus boycott given in a letter by Mr Fred Ball (Jan. 8), was well answered by Mr. Ball himself Thursday.

Sun. 1-15-56

The two editorials were so different in character that one must conclude they were written by different persons; or else the writer has a split personality.

However, some good may have been served; for in your editorial baiting of Mr. Ball, you inserted a copy (just for the fun of it, no doubt) of a request blank for membership in the Citizens Council. I read the article written by Tom Johnson of The Advertiser staff describing the activities of Rev. Robert S. Graetz. While he was sent here to be the pastor of a Negro church on Cleveland Ave., it appears that he spends more time stirring up dissatisfaction among the Negroes than he spends in the pulpit.

Point Of No Return

Editor, The Advertiser:

I have had the privilege of hearing the NAACP tape recording which Sen. Engelhart was successful in having played in the Alabama Senate earlier this week and would like to indulge your kindness, to recommend the playing of this tape before every white organization in Montgomery, and to further recommend to every member of these respective organizations that you hear this tape in its entirety.

When you people hear this tape which is a recording of an address delivered by a New York NAACP rabble-rouser before a Negro meeting in neighboring Mississippi you will then awaken to the seriousness of this situation.

When you hear this taped message in which this race-baiting NAACP leader tells his Negro audience of the diabolical scheme for negroes not to be satisfied with integration of schools and churches until they have also integrated the home and bedroom then you will face the cold facts that we are fastly drifting to that point of no return.

One listen to this tape recording and you housewives will be happy to do your own cooking and house cleaning for awhile until this campaign is defeated. For you who don't know how to cook you'll certainly enjoy learning and you won't mind cutting your hand a few times opening canned foods.

As for me, I'm prouder of my membership card in the Citizens Council than in any other organization. At these meetings the limelight is not hogged by politicians who are too spineless to speak out on this segregation issue.

Where Is Folsom In The Segregation Fight?

EDITOR, THE ADVERTISER — As an avid reader of The Advertiser and one who enjoys your editorial page comment, I have been waiting for someone to point out the reason or reasons for our worthy Governor's shy stand on the Supreme Court ruling abolishing school segregation. Governors in other southern states have spoken out in one way or another, usually taking a stand against having segregation forced upon the white and colored citizens of their state. Virginia's legislature, with the backing of Governor Stanley, has paved the way for a referendum upon the school issue, to provide for state funds to be used to pay tuition for pupils wishing to attend private schools should integration be accomplished in the state.

Yet our Gov. Folsom, no shy bird at all and one who has never seemed scared of the federal boys—for instance the asinine row over the use of National Guard planes for his football flights last fall—has been extremely reticent on the segregation conflict. If memory serves correctly, he has said that the Supreme Court edict must be obeyed, and that law is law. For one who has flaunted, twisted, and openly defied other laws—i.e., yes Ole Jim stole, but it was for the good of you folks—Big Jim's hesitancy in this segregation matter seems indeed strange. He has taken no lead to preserve southern traditions and his lack of conviction has served to discourage many who should like to keep separate but equal school facilities.

Big Jim's plush treatment of the visiting Negro Congressman Powell of New York while the Congressman was on a speaking tour stop in Montgomery caused many people to wonder as to the Governor's leanings in the racial issues sprouting in the Southland today.

For want of a more authoritative answer for the Governor's failure to speak out on the segregation issue, it is my belief that he is planning to run for the U.S. Senate in 1958 and wants to use the Negro vote in Alabama to help propel him to Washington. If he could be propelled to the Senate now and guarantee to stay there it might be a good thing for his home state. However, he will continue as governor and then use his apparent support of the Supreme Court integration ruling to make hay with the Negro voters of the state and there will be plenty of them by 1958 if present trends continue.

It is no secret that something can be done to delay or prevent school integration in Alabama, but something must be done soon. Several measures now before the state legislature provide means for circumventing the Supreme Court's ruling. With assistance and encouragement from Gov. Folsom — still a powerful figure in the state regardless of the loss of power that your paper tried to imply from the passage of Amendment 20 in the December referendum—a satisfactory measure can be enacted in time to have a ready solution to the lawsuits which may soon be forthcoming to force compliance with integration.

Virginia has shown that public opinion is strong now and that the majority of southern citizens favor continued school segregation. As a sign of things to come in this election year, the recent rulings by the ICC abolishing segregated waiting rooms for public carriers engaged in interstate commerce are but the forerunner of other far-reaching federal moves to eliminate segregation.

As an Auburn junior who has known many Negroes in the South, the North, and in the Army, I believe that one must judge them as individuals. But when their so-called progressive leaders of both races force them into our schools en masse then it is time to call a halt. Personally I don't mind going to school with Negroes. I have done so in the Army and don't feel contaminated and hope I didn't contaminate them. My reason for resisting integration is that many young Negro and white children will be the ones to bear the brunt of suddenly enforced integration. The effects on white and colored alike might well destroy any feeling of brotherhood that has built up through the years.

Spoils System In Disguise

Editor, The Advertiser:

It would be the part of wisdom for the people of Alabama generally, and the people of Montgomery specifically, and the various counties throughout the state, to become aware of the deceit and despotism that is brazenly being practiced upon them by certain "autocrats" of the various departments of the State and of Montgomery. From the top hats on down to the heads of departments, there are those who hide behind the cloak of the claimed system known by the honored name of merit, and instead, actually make the merit system jobs juicy "political plums."

The law requires those who anticipate serving their state, city or respective counties as employees, to measure up to certain standards and specifications, and submit themselves to written examinations and various performance tests, in order to prove their respective qualifications, experience and aptitude for the available positions. This is as it should be.

Adv. 1-22-36

Now, let us say, our applicants have fulfilled their part. They have filed applications and have taken the examination and passed the required tests, and thus are "qualified" for the position. Their names are then placed on eligible lists—supposedly, at least, in the order of the grade or percentage made by the examinee.

The successful applicants then have the right to expect that the certifications and appointments will be properly made in right rotation, according to the rank and rating on the list, which will assure that the worker appointed will be the best qualified one.

The state claims that its rule is: three names are to be certified from the very top of the list by the personnel department and the respective applicants are to be notified in writing to present themselves to the department head for interview and decision. The selection is supposed to be made from those first three names, if the applicants are amenable to accept the position. If they are not, then the next three names in order are certified. etc.

The city claims their rule is five names are to be certified from the very top of the list by the personnel department, and then the same procedure is supposedly followed.

The "Merit System" does not mean that the applicants, pawns for the politicians, who, on the surface slyly make some visible pretense of going through the proper procedure, when they have already selected the "chosen one," regardless of what place, if any, that particular favored individual's name appears on the list. They do not always follow the same procedure to deceive; they subtly vary their methods to gain their point and suit their convenience at the time.

Sometimes the prearranged plans are made by the heads of the state or city departments. Then again, it may not suit the whims of the personnel department to certify the individuals in the proper order. They, in their capacity as personnel department heads or assistants, are little czars in their domain. But sometimes they are mere puppets of their superiors.

It would be a good idea to require that a printed list of the eligible names on the merit system lists and the percentages made by the examinees be placed in all the outer offices of the personnel department of the state, city and county offices, and that a record of the date of each certification and appointment be recorded on these lists, beside the individual's name, as and when they are made.

Let's clear up everything while we are at it. The question and answer sheet of the individual who has taken the examination should be made available to the individual's perusal to see for himself if he so desires, the result of his efforts.

Another very important item has just recently come to the attention of the writer. After the top hats and their cohorts have delved into the eligible list from top to bottom and do not find the name of the person they wish to have as an incumbent of the available position, regardless of how qualified the various names on the current list, they simply decide on giving another examination. If the results of the new examination do not net them the one they desire, well—what of it.

Let's have finished with this unhealthy situation once and for all. Let's spoil their little rotten spoils game and make it a real clean game of merit.

Ala. Approves Plan To Void Mixing Order

Constitution Fri. 1-20-36 Atlanta Ga.

MONTGOMERY, Ala., Jan. 19 (AP). The Alabama Senate today shouted its approval of a House-passed "nullification" resolution declaring the U.S. Supreme Court anti-segregation rulings "of no effect" in Alabama.

It passed by a convincing voice vote shortly after Gov. James E. Folsom used Robert E. Lee's birthday as an occasion to blast legislative foes who he said raised the race issue to block reapportionment.

The nullification resolution which swept through the House Tuesday with but four dissenting votes is similar to resolutions proposed in Georgia, Mississippi and Virginia.

It is part of a process known as interposition whereby the states demand that Congress submit a proposed amendment to the U.S. Constitution clarifying the rights of states in certain matters.

The resolution says that the U.S. Constitution was formed by the "sanction of the several states" and contends that, "There can be no tribunal above their authority to decide whether the compact made by them be violated."

Folsom Says He Hasn't Read Nullification Resolution; Asks, 'What's It All About?'; Will Not Run For Delegate

Advertiser 1-4-A

Montgomery, Ala.

By Bob Ingram

A 90-MINUTE delay in the starting time of Gov. Folsom's press conference yesterday was in the end a cheap price of admission. He had summoned the conference.

Six reporters and four Folsom executives sat in silence through a goodly portion of the session while the chief executive incoherently elaborated his views on the Nullification resolution passed by the legislature last week.

Ingram

When he finally completed his Nullification declaration, the baffled Ray Lackey of the United Press asked:

"Governor, would you mind going over that again, I think I'm a little confused."

Lackey was not alone in his confusion.

Mon. 1-26-36

The press conference had been called the previous day for 9:30 a.m., but Executive Press Secretary Ralph Hammond later Tuesday afternoon said the time had been changed to 9 a.m.

At that appointed hour the press corps was present. Finally, at 10:30, Hammond summoned the reporters to the Folsom office and the conference began.

"Boys, I'm sorry about the delay, but I slept till 9:45 this morning," Folsom said. "That's the first time I've done that in a long time."

Present in the office were Finance Director Fuller Kimbrell, Executive Secretary O. H. Finney, Publicity Director Geoffrey Birt and Hammond.

'I Haven't Even Read It'

THE first question asked was one seeking to determine Folsom's feeling on the Nullification resolution.

This reporter, in asking the question, referred to it as a "significant resolution."

"Who said it was 'significant'?" Folsom demanded. "I haven't even read it, what's it all about."

'Like A Hound Dog Baying'

FOLLOWING a brief explanation of the resolution's intent by several reporters, Folsom opened fire.

"That resolution doesn't mean a thing: the one thing to do about it is to have a constitutional convention and let the delegates consider such things as Nullification," he said. "If they are sincere about it, they could debate Nullification at the convention."

"I'm for Nullification if it comes out of a convention, in fact I'm gonna ask my friends to reintroduce the constitutional convention resolution tomorrow," Folsom continued.

An identical resolution introduced on the opening day of this special session was given a crushing defeat last week by both the House and Senate.

"All this clap-trap about the resolution is just like a hound dog baying at the moon and claiming it's got the moon treed," Folsom added. "That resolution is nothing but a piece of paper and is just like a resolution mourning the death of Joe Doakes, a former member of the legislature. It don't mean a thing."

'Will You Sign It?'

"Are you going to sign the resolution," a reporter asked.

"Whenever I get ready to send it up, I will make my position clear," Folsom replied emphatically. "Back in 1954, even before the Supreme Court made its decision, I said on the stump that I wasn't gonna make the colored children go to school with the white children, and vice versa."

"If those people upstairs (the legislature) are sincere about all of this they will let the people vote on a convention," he continued. "That is the only place where we can do anything about Nullification. A resolution won't do it. I'm for a convention."

"The folks doing all the talking up there don't want anything but a political issue," he concluded.

Boutwell Bill O.K.

THE governor's announcement that he intended to reintroduce his constitutional convention resolution prompted another question.

"Governor, do you think the convention resolution has any more chance of passage now than last week when it was turned down," a reporter queried.

"No, but if those folks are really sincere up there it will be successful," he said. "But all that talk now is just a bunch of hogwash."

Folsom was then asked his opinion of the "freedom of choice" school bill now under consideration in the legislature. As it proposes an amendment to the Constitution, the governor has no authority to veto it.

"It sounds alright to me, and has more weight to it than the resolution," he replied. "I'm strictly for Nullification tested out in a convention. If approved in that manner it would tote some water then—that's t-o-t--e, it's an old Negro expression."

Hawkinsdawkins

PRESS Secretary Hammond interrupted at this point to note that the word "tote" was originated by Shakespeare, not by the Negroes. Folsom accepted the correction but did not appear to be convinced.

On a different subject, Folsom was asked if Rep. George Hawkins of Etowah was still his House floor leader. The question stemmed from an obvious shift of authority in the House in recent days, with Hawkins sitting in the shade while Montgomery's Joe Dawkins moved to the front.

Folsom's reply to this question was brief and to the point

"You are goddamn right he's still my floor leader, and he's the best damn floor leader in the state," the governor stated.

'A Lot Of People Mad'

ANOTHER question followed, and got an equally decisive reply—"Governor, do you plan to run as a delegate to the National Democratic Convention?"

"Hell, I wouldn't run for dog catcher today. I'd get the hell beat out of me," Folsom responded, a grin creasing his face for the first time during the conference.

How could he explain his tremendous drop in popularity since May, 1947?

"Anybody that tries to do and accomplish as much as I do is bound to make a lot of people mad," Folsom explained.

With that the press conference ended. It had been unlike any other session in that the newsmen had shown a marked reluctance to question the governor. Instead, the conference was subject to awkward, strained silences, each reporter waiting hopefully for another to do or say something, whether it be right or wrong.

And at the conclusion the newsmen's first action was not to write an account of Folsom's conference, but instead to relay to their superiors—be they editors or wire service bureau chiefs—descriptions of the unusual circumstances surrounding the conference.

Ala. Gov. Hits Resolution On Interposition

Daily World P. 1

Atlanta, Ga.

MONTGOMERY — (SNS) — Alabama Governor James E. Folsom Wednesday described the state legislature's resolution for "interposition" as "... a two-bit resolution."

He further said it was like "a hound dog baying at the moon" to attempt to evade or nullify the Supreme Court decision outlawing public school segregation.

However, in respect for what he termed the 'sincerity' of the measures proponents, he announced plans to have the once-defeated convention resolution reintroduced in the legislature.

He said: "If they,re sincere about it, they can debate it out in a constitutional convention."

The governor admitted that he had said during his 1954 campaign that the state "wasn't going to force the colored children to go to school with our white children, and vice versa."

Thurs. 1-26-56

However, since the Supreme Court ruled, he has been on record as saying that the Court is the law of the land and cannot be evaded. In reference to the constitutional convention on nullification, he said that if it were adopted he would be for it.

"But," he continued, "you can't do it by resolution. Thats simply a piece of paper."

The resolution passed the Legislature last week declaring the court decision "null, void and of no effect" in this state. It was based on the reasoning that the Supreme Court had no authority to outlaw racial segregation in the classroom and therefore Alabama isn't bound by it.

FOLSOM TOLD a news conference today the legislative action "is like a hound dog baying at the moon . . . it doesn't mean a thing."

If the Legislature wants to take a stand like that—"and I'm for nullification"—the governor said it should be done in a constitutional convention.

HE REFERRED to the convention program for which he called the present special session — a convention to rewrite Alabama's organic law.

The place to speak out on nullification of the Supreme Court decree is in such a convention, he argued, and not on a "simple

THE VOICE OF THE PEOPLE

Nine Men And The Nation

The desegregation decision of the Supreme Court has done a lot of harm and it is certain to do greater harm in the future, and finally bring about national decay and degeneration unless the requisite number of states, through their Legislatures, nullify that decision.

This nation belongs to the people and not to the nine men who compose the Supreme Court. The sovereign states have had so many of their inalienable rights taken away by those in authority that we are gradually drifting into such a form of centralized government that the people and the states shall have no voice in the affairs of government. If the Supreme Court can dictate as to how the states shall run their schools they can also dictate the kind of school books to be taught in the schools. There is more danger to the freedom of a people by the gradual usurpation of power by those in authority than there is by invasion of a foreign foe.

When the Supreme Court disregards the Constitution it is high time for the states to exert their rights under the Constitution and nullify any decision of that court that destroys their sovereignty. Our government belongs to the people and not to those in authority whether elected by the people or nominated by the chief executive and confirmed by the Senate.

In its entirety the Constitution says this: This government belongs to the people, and those in authority are servants of the people. Modern and recent construction of the Constitution is in reverse. The construction now is: Those in authority are the masters and the people are their servants.

Preamble to the Constitution says, among other things, "Insure domestic tranquillity, promote the general welfare, etc." Domestic tranquillity! There are riots and bloodshed in many states; is that domestic tranquillity? There is turbulence, violence, and hostility in cities, towns, at passenger depots, on trains, buses, in schools, and all this turmoil and blood is caused directly by the desegregation decision. Is this what the Supreme Court calls "promote the general welfare?"

The Supreme Court is composed of just men, not always the most brilliant and brainiest of men, nor the greatest of men, nor of the most righteous of men, nor the most farseeing of men. The pendulum swings back and forth, and so it is in many things.

Keep Race Issue From Aiding Communist Cause

The two well known sides to the race issue, segregation and integration, have become so paramount in the public mind that the real significance of race problems may well be lost. And in the light of a rapid rise in the intensity of racial turmoil it may behoove us all, regardless of our stand on the issue, to consider a third side—reservation.

Various pressure groups, such as the NAACP and "White Citizens Council," are stirring the public to a disturbing emotional pitch. The press and radio only add to the tenseness of the situation. Such magazines as Look and Post have played up the race problem.

What these people apparently do not realize is that they are contributing to the goals of subversives. We who respond are equally guilty.

It is obvious, to me at least, that Communists are exploiting the emotions and prejudices of our people, both white and black. The Communists are old hands at capitalizing on internal strife. Toward this end, they stop at nothing to create that strife. To Communists, segregation is not an issue; it is a tool with which they can mobilize against American solidarity and harmony.

And so, when we thinking people partake in the haggle and animosity involved in segregation issues, we become unwitting allies with the Soviet cause.

Northern agitators deserve to be indicted for their pressure activities. But we Southerners are not free from blame either. Many of us are more determined to stop integration than the pseudo-idealists are to enforce it. As a result, we are encouraging the dissolution of mutual harmony and understanding.

The pro-integrationists should realize that cannot be legislated.

Further, the integrationists must realize that their ends cannot be realized by a "cram it down their throats" attitude.

Next, we Southerners should admit to ourselves that there are many inequities we have imposed on the Negro. In all honesty with our conscience—and before the eyes of world opinion — we should strive resolutely to enhance the Negro's education, civil liberties, and standard of living. And I think we will, provided everybody will get off our backs.

The stand that both sides should take is: "Don't fight it; it's bigger than both of us." Time, patience, and moderate, yet progressive, action can resolve our problems.

In the meanwhile, let's not allow the race issue to add to this nation's blunders against Soviet strategy. Let us not fulfill the Communist prophecy that we will "participate in our own destruction."

FOLSOM VIEWS AIRED

Nullification Plan Branded 'Hogwash'

Trying to nullify the Supreme Court's school integration decree by legislative resolution, said Gov. James E. Folsom yesterday, is "like a hound dog baying at the moon."

But he told reporters he would applaud the pro-segregation stand if taken "at a constitutional convention." So he announced plans to have an already defeated convention resolution reintroduced in the legislature today.

"If they're sincere about it," the governor said in reference to sponsors of the nullification act approved by the Legislature last week, "they can debate it out in a constitutional convention."

Folsom said the resolution which seeks to declare the Supreme Court anti-segregation decree "null, void and of no effect" in Alabama "doesn't mean anything . . . just a bunch of hogwash . . . a two-bit resolution."

But he wouldn't say whether he plans to sign it, veto it or let it go through without his approval. He has until next Monday to act.

The governor didn't make it clear at his news conference just how a nullification resolution would fit into a constitutional convention debate. Neither did he explain why he considers it ineffective when the states can amend the federal constitution by legislative act if enough of them join in.

Folsom told reporters he had "made it plain during my campaign (for election in 1954) that Alabama "wasn't going to force the colored children to go to school with our good white children and vice versa."

But since then the Supreme Court has outlawed segregated classrooms, he continued, "and I'm for nullification if a convention adopts it. But you can't do it resolution. That's simply a piece of paper."

Folsom called the present special session of the Legislature Jan. 3 to consider convention to rewrite Alabama's organic law. Both the House and Senate killed the convention plan last week.

The nullification resolution awaiting the governor's action seeks to set the Supreme Court decision aside in Alabama on the theory that nothing in the federal constitution prohibits segregation and the court had no authority to outlaw it.

Until the federal constitution is amended probably to make segregation unlawful, the resolution contends, the states aren't bound by the court decree.

Sponsors of the resolution say 13 states can nullify the decision because it would take 36 of the 48 to adopt a constitutional amendment.

They argue that the federal government has only the powers delegated to it by the states which banded together to form the union, and that when a federal agency goes beyond that authority, the states can interpose their sovereign rights.

The governors of Georgia, Mississippi, South Carolina and Virginia agreed at a conference in Richmond, Va., Tuesday to support interposition resolutions in their states protesting the court decree.

Legislative activity in Alabama came to a complete halt temporarily yesterday except for a touring Senate committee investigating timber cutting at Little Mounain State Park.

The House Judiciary Committee, only group with a meeting scheduled at the Capitol, had to abandon it for lack of a quorum.

Short History Of Nullification

Advertiser P-A

Which Is Now Debated At The Capitol, Under The Name Of 'Interposition'; It Has Been Attempted North And South; Succeeded In Alabama In 1833, But Of Course There's 1861

Montgomery Ala.

MONTGOMERY, Ala., Jan. 18 (AP) —The Alabama House of Representatives yesterday approved a resolution [86 to 4] calling the Supreme Court's segregation rulings "null, void and of no effect" in Alabama.

What is this? Wpe 1-19-56

It is the spectacular resurrection of the olden doctrine of Nullification, or Interposition. 38a

The circumstance is ironic: Folsom, governor, vaingloriously summoned the legislature into extraordinary session to rewrite the Alabama Constitution. Instead, the legislature is in the act of rewriting the United States Constitution.

The South is aflare today with proposals to resort to the sword of Nullification, notably in Virginia, Georgia, Mississippi and Alabama. The purpose is to defy the Supreme Court's race mixing order.

The sponsors of this latterday Nullification do not promise that the attempt will be successful, but not without basis do they call it a powerful weapon of protest to inform the nation that the South is unreconciled to immediate race mixing.

And what is unassailable is that the history of the United States is strewn with cases in which states have successfully defied the federal government on the basis of state sovereignty.

Alabama in the 1830s furnished one such example, as you will see overleaf.

Nullification vs. Interposition

THE DIFFERENCE between Nullification and Interposition is naught. The current selection is, however, Interposition, probably because Nullification has a harder name on account of the association with John C. Calhoun and the Civil War.

Nullification embraces the doctrine that states are sovereigns that simply abdicated a limited number of defined powers to the federal government; that the Constitution was the instrument of limitation. The people of the states gave this power to the federal government and they retain the power to prevent the Union government from improper meddling in their internal affairs (such as race mixing).

The theory is that when the Union government acts beyond its powers as granted by the sovereign states and defined by the Constitution, a state can nullify the excess.

In short, the state "interposes" its sovereign authority between its people and the federal abuse (thus "nullifying" the abuse).

Fathers Of Nullification

THE ORIGIN of Nullification (The Advertiser prefers the candor of Nullification to the discreet euphemism Interposition) is illustrious.

The original sponsors were not Dixiecrats wearing magnolias in their lapels. They were Thomas Jefferson and James Madison, the "Father of the Constitution," no less.

Jefferson and Madison were bent upon nullifying acts of Congress because, in their view, the acts were unconstitutional. These were the Alien & Sedition Acts.

These acts permitted President John Adams to export his foreign-born political enemies and imprison his native-born political enemies, such as editors and congressmen.

It was simply "against the law" to criticize the Adams Administration.

Virginia and Kentucky rebelled at these curbs on free speech. Thomas Jefferson, then vice president of the United States, wrote a resolution for the Kentucky legislature calling for Nullification of the Alien & Sedition Acts. Madison did the same for Virginia.

This first attempt at Nullification was not pursued to its logical conclusion because the Alien & Sedition Acts (written in the hysteria of the French Revolution fright) had an expiration date and were not reenacted.

Yankee Nullification

NOW WILL WE strike a strangely familiar note. The Nullification procedure of Virginia and Kentucky in 1798 brought stern and formal censure from the unconcerned legislatures of Delaware, Rhode Island, Massachusetts, New York, Connecticut, New Hampshire and Vermont. They were as self-righteous and toplofty as today's Hubert Humphrey holy rollers.

But just 16 years later in 1814, when was the time that the ox of these states were gored, some of these states and others held the celebrated Hartford Convention—for the purposes of Nullification.

These states were sore about the alleged over-reaching of federal power in the War of 1812. The Hartford Convention alleged "dangerous infractions of the Constitution affecting the sovereignty of the state" and held, as had Jefferson and Madison, that it was the "duty of a state to interpose its authority."

Then they galloped home that their respective legislatures might take formal action to achieve Nullification. The legislatures of Massachusetts and Connecticut did so. Before the others could complete action the War of 1812 ended, once again dissolving the grievance before an orderly legal test of Nullification could be achieved.

'Tariff Of Abominations'

PRIOR to that, in 1809, Pennsylvania had arrayed its troops to resist a federal court order (the yankees need not yield to the South as stout Nullificationists!).

But Nullification reached its most famous point in the collision between John C. Calhoun and another South Carolinian, Andrew Jackson. At one point South Carolina's soldiery was booted and spurred to engaged federal troops. President Jackson was prepared to march 100,000 troops on the Palmetto. Also, he sent Calhoun word that he would hang him "as high as Haman."

The conflict was over the "Tariff of Abominations." The high tariffs, designed for the fattening of New England manufacturers, were very injurious to the agricultural South.

South Carolina enacted Nullification legislation, as one house of the Alabama legislature did Tuesday.

Margaret Coit's prize-winning John C. Calhoun relates:

> . . . And it was not in the Kentucky and Virginia resolutions, but in these last years of his life, that Jefferson challenged [Chief Justice John] Marshall, declaring that if the federal and state "departments" of government were to clash, "A convention of the states must be called to ascribe the doubtful power to that department which they may think best."
> Here Calhoun rested his case. Ultimate authority, he contended, was not in the national government . . . but in the power that called that government into being—the states.
> The original American system of majority rule, he contended, had meant the concurrent, not the absolute, majority. Even at the Constitutional Convention [of 1787] not a mere majority of the states, but a majority of the people in each state assured final modification. Nevertheless, he conceded, the practical operation of our government "has been on the principle of the absolute majority." A majority of 7,000,000 could violate the rights of a minority of 6,000,000. "We see," Calhoun declared, "the approach of the fatal hour."

War Was Coming Amain

THIS was in 1833, and the Civil War was coming amain. But a compromise with Calhoun contrived by Henry Clay reduced the tariff and, once again, the Nullification resort was abandoned before an ultimate legal test.

Madison Changed Course

IT SHOULD be stated here parenthetically in order not to seem willfully tendentious that James Madison, co-author of Nullification doctrine 30 years before, saw the South Carolina Interposition in a different light from the Virginia Resolution of 1798. He condemned South Carolina's act and even helped President Jackson compose his stern and warlike censure.

The First Alabama Nullification

IT WAS at the same time that the State of Alabama defied the federal government and was prepared to make war to preserve its sovereignty.

The Indians had been quelled and corraled and there were treaties with the federal authorities governing their resettlement in the West. Conflict arose between Gov. John Gayle and Washington over the Indians.

Gov. Gayle held that Washington's policy was "an unconstitutional interference with our local and internal affairs."

Alabama militia was raised to resist on the battlefield. U. S. marshals were cuffed and instructed to go get lost. The collision of state and federal authority became a national issue and, as you will find in Moore's History Of Alabama, "from far away New York City certain young hotspurs offered to raise a company of volunteers to assist the state."

Jackson was one more tough baby, but he was impressed with the depth of passion in Alabama, as he was in the case of South Carolina, and was conciliatory. He sent Francis Scott Key as an emissary to the Tuscaloosa capital to negotiate.

In this the tactful Key succeeded, but the state commenced to sour on the Union and think of secession.

Yankees At Bat Again

AFTER THAT, it was the yankees' time at bat again. They defied Congress and the Supreme Court in refusing to obey the Fugitive Slave Act. Massachusetts and, most notably, Wisconsin undertook Nullification. The Encyclopedia Britannica says:

> In the last decade before the Civil war, 14 of the Northern states in the so-called "personal liberty laws" nullified the federal statutes relating to slaves and slavery by making it a crime for their citizens to obey these laws.
> Since the Reconstruction the Southern states have in practice effected a Nullification of the 14th and 15th Amendments to the Constitution providing for Negro suffrage.

Where Are 13?

SUCH is a superficial sketch of Nullification history since Jefferson. In some cases it has been more a form of informal physical defiance, differing from the strictly legal process initiated in others.

It takes a vote of three-fourths of the 48 states to ratify an amendment. The present Nullification notion is that if 13 Southern states resolve that the Supreme Court has exceeded its powers to regulate the internal affairs of states in the case of race mixing, then there can be no three-fourths majority in favor of the court decision—and thus the decision is a nullity.

But where, Gov. Stanley of Virginia and others have asked, are you to get the necessary 13 states for Nullification?

The '61 Precedent

THERE is one other gap in our Nullification list. As Margaret Coit has said, "Secession was the ultimate recourse of the Nullification Doctrine."

Which is to say that we didn't list the matter of the 1861 Nullification.

The power to secede is certainly one attribute of sovereignty that the states have surrendered irrevocably.

When Alabama Withdrew From The Union

LAST WEDNESDAY, Jan. 11, was the 95th anniversary of the secession of the State of Alabama from the Union of the States.

The people of Alabama had anticipated the election of Abraham Lincoln, and knew that the affairs of the national government would soon be in the hands of the political foes of the South.

JONES

"The North had spoken," says historian James Ford Rhodes. "In every man's mind rose unbidden the question, What would be the answer of the South?" That answer was not long coming. The Southern States acted promptly. On Dec. 6, 1860, Governor Andrew Barry Moore, obedient to the joint resolution of the legislature, called the election for delegates to the convention of the State. The election was held Christmas Eve, Monday, Dec. 24, 1860, and the delegates met in Montgomery, Monday, Jan. 7, 1861, in the Hall of the House of Representatives in the State Capitol. There was a brief prayer by Reverend Basil Manly. The roll of delegates from the 52 counties of the State was called. Every delegate answered present, not one was absent. Many of Alabama's ablest sons, intelligent, fearless and believers in the rights of the State, were there; Alpheus Baker, Barbour County; George C. Whatley, Calhoun; John Green, Conecuh; John Tyler Morgan, Dallas; Edmund Spann Dargan and Judge John Bragg, Mobile; William Lowndes Yancey and Thomas Hill Watts, Montgomery; William McLin Brooks, Perry; William Russell Smith, Tuscaloosa, and Franklin King Beck, Wilcox.

THE CONVENTION at once began its labors. Judge Brooks, an out-and-out Secessionist, and a distinguished lawyer, was elected president of the convention, receiving 53 votes, as against 46 votes for Robert Jemison Jr., of Tuscaloosa, a strong Co-operationist. This vote was a test of the relative strength of parties—there being, including Mr. Brooks, 54 delegates who favored immediate secession of Alabama, and 46 who were in favor of consulting and cooperating with the other slave-holding states.

The public debates in the convention were interesting; but after a vote, the convention resolved to sit "as a general rule, with closed doors."

One of the historic days of this truly historic convention was the fourth day—Jan. 10. A telegram had just been read to the convention which announced the secession of Mississippi, and then Mr. Yancey, chairman of the powerful Committee of Thirteen, arose. Exceptionally handsome and well proportioned, he radiated vigor, courage and manliness. He then reported for the Committee of Thirteen, the most momentous document ever considered by the people of Alabama or by their representatives. It was the Ordinance of Secession. It reads in part as follows:

"An Ordinance to Dissolve the Union between the State of Alabama and other states united under the compact styled 'The Constitution of the United States of America.'

"Whereas, the election of Abraham Lincoln and Hannibal Hamlin to the offices of President and Vice President of the United States of America, by a sectional party, avowedly hostile to the domestic institutions and to the peace and security of the people of the State of Alabama, preceded by many and dangerous infractions of the Constitution of the United States by many of the States and people in the Northern section, is a political wrong of so insulting and menacing a character as to justify the people of the State of Alabama in the adoption of prompt and decided measures for their future peace and security; therefore,

"Be it Declared and Ordained by the People of the State of Alabama, in convention assembled, that the State of Alabama now withdraws and is hereby withdrawn from the union known as the United States of America, and henceforth ceases to be one of said United States and is, and of right ought to be, a sovereign and independent State.

"Section 2. Be it further declared and ordained by the people of the State of Alabama in Convention Assembled, that all the powers over the territory of said State, and of the people thereof, heretofore delegated to the government of the United States of America, be and are hereby withdrawn from said government, and are hereby resumed and vested in the people of Alabama."

JERE CLEMENS, a leader of the Co-operationists, introduced a resolution that the Ordinance of Secession be submitted at the polls to a direct vote of the people of the State. The real purpose of this resolution was simply to delay secession as long as possible. Clemens knew that secessio a movement of the people, not of the politicians, and that secession was inevitable.

The Co-operationists may have had some hope of delaying Alabama's withdrawal from the Union, but they could not have entertained the slightest hope of preventing Alabama's Secession. The logic of events had long made that certain. Some have thought that the Secessionists would "have made their case stronger had they submitted the Ordinance of Secession to a popular vote." But in declining to do this, they had the best of precedents—the United States Constitution had never been submitted to the people for ratification. Delay would make Alabama's position dangerous, because she had gone too far to recede with dignity, and further delay would but keep up strife and dissension among the people and would not keep Alabama from seceding. The resolution to submit the ordinance to a vote of the people was lost by a vote of 54 to 46.

Friday, Jan. 11, 1861, came. It was to be one of the high days in the history of the State. The long debates were over. The talk of statesmen ended. The time for action was at hand. All steps turned to the State House. As the convention prepared to vote, 23 members addressed it before the vote was had.

Mix Races In Public— But Not Schools, Churches

To the Editor:

As more and more barriers between the white and colored races in the United States are being removed by the courts, I have come to the conclusion that the best thing for all concerned is for the white people to acquiesce in the mixing of all people in public places, such as railroads, waiting depots, public transportation buses, parks, playgrounds and places of employment, and so on. We know that white and colored work on their jobs without trouble.

But so far as schools and churches are concerned, that mixing will not work. The great majority of Negroes prefer their own separate schools and churches, the schools being equal in equipment. The few NAACP leaders who try to push in can be disregarded. To mix the children in school will only lead to disaster, and Negroes, if left to themselves, will voluntarily select schools of their own race and thus give employment to colored teachers.

Unbecoming Situation

EDITOR, THE ADVERTISER—I am a former citizen of Montgomery but I want to correct Mrs. Samuel Rushing. If she read the Bible as she should she should know that nowhere in the Bible is it mentioned that God created white superior to black, or black superior to white.

The Bible clearly tells us this: How can we love God whom we haven't seen and hate our brother whom we have seen? It's the individuals who are superior so far as intelligence is concerned. In the white race we have many individuals superior to other white, the same applies to colored I am white, but I consider that there are white people and there are Negroes too in this country superior to me.

So far as the Constitution is concerned, our forefathers, I am sure, would have written it different had they known how wicked we would have grown. Those good old Christian souls meant everything good. So let's not try and twist things on them.

As for the bus boycott I regret it very much. I am sure there are enough good white people and colored people in Montgomery to get together and settle this matter as it should be, and not allow the bad, selfish characters to dominate this most unbecoming situation.

Ministers Are Not Infallible

Editor, The Advertiser:

I would like to express my appreciation for Novelist Hurston's article which was printed in your Saturday paper. If more of the intelligent Negroes would only speak. You will notice that I said "intelligent" rather than educated. Certainly Novelist Hurston is both and we have some educated Negroes in Alabama and in Montgomery. We have more who are intelligent and maybe not so well educated. Why are they sitting back and letting the few agitators with less than their intelligence do the talking?

Certainly, as the Negro minister wrote last week, "Who, if not the ministers, are supposed to be closer to God and the church." You will notice that he didn't even profess to be closer, he said we are supposed to be closer. I think that we will all agree that even our most conscientious and religious ministers make mistakes and take a wrong turn sometimes—we will also agree that every minister who fills a pulpit is not a consecrated child of God. Oh, that we had no one in our pulpits and churches as leaders but those who are real children of God and led by the Holy Spirit!

Going back to Novelist Hurston's statement that a Negro who was really proud of his race would not want to force their mixing and associating with people who didn't want them. Do the Negroes in Montgomery really force themselves upon each other? Do we whites force our way into the society that looks a little more attractive or fashionable than the one we can afford to be in and actually belong in? If we do, then I can safely say, that person isn't enjoying the fullness of life.

What are our intelligent Negroes thinking about when they THINK they want to force their children into white schools where they are not wanted? Will those Negro children really be happy? Will they feel they belong? Rather don't you think they will have the feeling that they are ostracized, that they don't any longer belong in their own society nor in the white classes?

Don't misunderstand me, I was reared in the South on a farm and we had Negroes on our plantation. I was taught to respect them and do respect them. But the Bible says there is a time and place for all things. There is a place for each of us—but that doesn't mean mixing together in an undesired or unsatisfactory manner.

Montgomery. MARY WHITEHURST.

Biting The Hand That Feeds

Editor, The Advertiser:

It is unfortunate that Negro leaders have seen fit to employ a boycott. Like the U. S. Supreme Court, they have greatly erred. The writer has many friends of the Negro race, but he cannot imagine why any government should have the right to enforce the court's decision. No government should undertake the ramming of social equality down the throats of its people. That's what our government is trying to do, and it is absurd. It cannot be done, and should not be tried. We must face that fact.

The white population has been good to the Negroes. In Montgomery the whites have provided excellent schools for the Negroes, and in other ways have helped them. Most Negroes appreciate all that. It is not right to "bite the hand that feeds you," and the boycotters should think about that. We should strive, as different races, to live peaceably, alongside each other. I am sure, if we do that, we shall all profit and be very happy.

Editor, You Remind Me Of Neutralist Nehru

EDITOR, THE ADVERTISER—So many misstatements have occurred on your editorial page with reference to integration of negroes in public schools and as to the Citizens Councils that I feel it is proper that some one make answer.

Some weeks ago you mentioned that integration had been notably successful in the City of Washington. If you intended to say that there had been no attending violence you are absolutely correct. However, here are some of the results:

Formerly there were about 64% white pupils and 36% negroes, that percentage is now approximately reversed as the integration has forced many white families to move out of Washington into states where their children can attend segregated schools. And reports from the school officials show that the integration has caused the scholastic standards of the Washington schools to be lowered.

General Eisenhower opposed integration in the Army when he was its head. President Eisenhower, the leader of the Republican Party, who follows in the footsteps of his predecessor in seeking Negro votes for his party, does not send his grandchildren to the integrated schools of Washington. They go to a private Episcopal school in Virginia, where there is no integration, although the President is a Presbyterian.

Vice President Nixon and the Cabinet give full cry to integration but their children attend a school to which only one Negro child has been admitted.

In an editorial today occurs the following statement: "Commissioner Sellers is a card carrying member of the White Citizens Council, an organization dedicated to boycott and economic sanctions against Negroes." The statement as to the Citizens Council is absolutely false. Had you taken the trouble to investigate you would have found that you were making a false statement.

The Citizens Councils are dedicated, as was The Advertiser in times past, to the preservation of our Southern customs and laws by legal means only.

I know whereof I speak as I have helped in the formation of several county councils in Alabama.

There are many legal methods we can, and which I sincerely trust we shall, adopt to preserve the laws and customs for which our ancestors so courageously fought, even when Alabama was occupied by Federal soldiers.

It is indeed regrettable that you have never had the courage to take a stand either for integration or against it. One can't be neutral. However, you remind me of neutralist Nehru, all of your criticism is of those who have organized to fight integration, just as Nehru—who says he is neutral but only criticizes the West.

Mutually Exclusive Roles

Editor, The Advertiser:

After reading Tom Johnson's column in The Advertiser, in which the ambitious young minister of Lutheran faith is described as taking such an active part in the 90-year-old Civil War question of segregation of the races:

It is apparent that this young and well meaning minister is conscientious and feels he is doing the right thing. We need lots of young men like that and I have no objections to their feeling free to use their time as best they see fit.

For one so young to move into a strange section or into a new state and to immediately project himself into a heated controversy as age-old as the separation of races at the same time hiding behind the skirts of the ministry in order to defy the very law that grants him immunity, shows a disregard for both Christian principle and for established law which has as its purpose to guard the peace that comes from nowhere except through Christ the Prince of Peace.

Can one imagine the Master using such tactics to serve the Lord?

Pastor Graetz is either a Christian or a rabble-rouser. He cannot be both.

ALABAMA SESSIONS FACE RACIAL ISSUES

Constitutional Convention Proposal Also Studied

FOLSOM ASKS ACTION

By GLENN ANTHONY
United Press Staff Writer

MONTGOMERY, Ala., Jan. 9. —A week of committee work on the main issues before this special session of the legislature faces Alaama lawmakers who convene here Tuesday.

However, floor action may egin this week on several matters not directly connected with Gov. James E. Folsom's proclamation which named a constitutional convention as the primary object of the special session.

Rules Group To Meet

The joint House-Senate Rules committee will meet Wednesday to resume a hearing on the administration-backed resolutions that would put the question of a convention before the voters.

But even if the committees report the resolutions favorably Wednesday, they could not get on either calendar until next week.

OnThursday, another joint committee meeting will begin. The House Ways and Means Committee and the Senate Finance and Taxation Committee will get together to seek some way of closing the gap now existing between revenues and appropriations for schools. Folsom asked last week for the meeting.

At least three reapportionment bills could come up for action in the House this week. They all received favorable reports from the House Constitutions Committee last week.

One of the reapportionment measures is sponsored by Folsom floor leader George Hawkins of Gadsden. It calls for a 67-Member Senate (one senator from each county), with counties getting one House seat for each 25,000 population or fraction of 25,000.

Teacher Bill Studied

The Senate may act this week on three bills of a different nature. Senators from three "black belt" counties have introduced local bills to allow their school boards to fire teachers who advocate or who belong to organizations that advocate racial integration.

The bills, introduced by Senators Sam Englehardt of Macon County, E. O. Eddins of Marengo County and Albert Davis of Pickens County, are aimed at teachers who belong to the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People.

Senator Engelhardt introduced a similar bill last year and got it passed, bul Governor Folsom vetoed it on the last night of the session.

Negroes Are Not Asking Race Mixing On Buses

EDITOR, THE ADVERTISTR — Your editorial, Jan. 11, "Two Questions Arise," was perfectly devastating. More power to you.

But what I want to know, Why all this fuss about intergration in the schools? I am talking about Alabama. Who wants it? Certainly the white people do not want it. No doubt there is a considerable number who would not object to it but no one would say that they would ever make any trouble about it. And we are told by our state superintendent of education, who is in a position to have a good judgment of the situation, that 95% of the colored people do not want it.

The demands of the boycott in Montgomery sustains his judgment, since they are not asking for integration on the buses but only for a fair deal.

And yet our legislators are going up the hill and down again trying to find some measure that will destroy our public school system. Surely the few persons among that 5% who may make trouble here or there in our centers of population can be handled without the awful tragedy of destroying our system of education. Surely those who advocate such measures have never studied the history of public education in the United States to learn the long hard struggle to get this precious agency established for the preservation of our democracy.

We are just plain scared and when people get frightened they do many irrational things like the man who, when his house caught fire, rushed up stairs, threw the looking glass out of the window and carried the feather bed down stairs.

Let us get down to brass tacks! What the colored people really want are at least four rights to which all citizens are entitled.

¶ They want justice in the courts.

¶ They want health, sanitation which would reduce the mortality among both white and colored.

¶ Of course they want education but they would be satisfied if their schools were as good as the schools for whites.

¶ They want equal economic opportunity.

Enlightened self interest should give these rights to them.

Rebellion Is Not Good Citizenship

Editor, The Advertiser:

In my travels to other cities in the United States I have always boasted of the amicable relation between the white and colored people of Montgomery. I feel that these same conditions would have continued to exist, if those Northern agitators of the NAACP had not sent speakers down here to influence the colored population against the whites. I am heartily in favor of segregation, being a "born and bred Southerner." But the Montgomery Negroes who wish to vote, claiming they are good citizens (when they advise defiance of segregation laws), are urging rebellion against the laws of Alabama and Montgomery. Whether the Negroes consider the law unjust and unfair, it is still the law of Montgomery and Alabama until repealed.

Secondly the Negro preachers on Sunday instead of preaching the word of God, and the brotherhood of man, harp on this theme of segregation and at every meeting take up collections to keep the movement alive. Their emissaries threaten the Negroes with bodily harm if they ride the buses. There are only a certain small number of Negroes who have cars in Montgomery. Thousands of Negro men and women, who are dependent upon their jobs for their very livelihood, have to walk to their work, arriving tired and despondent and dreading the long walk home in the cold or rain. This affects also many thousands of poor white people who cannot afford a car, and with the removal of certain buses are forced to take taxis to their work, an expense many cannot afford.

The preachers tell the deluded people, "You are sinning against God; You are sinning against the future of your children, if you do not obey the mandates of the NAACP." As long as we have to live in the same city, and depend one upon the other, at least we could have pleasant and amicable relations.

Negroes, Look Around You

Editor, The Advertiser:

The white people of Montgomery are typical of the other white people of America, slow to anger and slow to make up their minds. But once they do they have always come out victorious.

The bus fare has already been raised 50%. Should you continue the bus boycott six months the loss would be repaid in 18 months and you will keep on paying and paying as long as you live. So what have you gained?

Where is your appreciation, your sense of duty? Look around your home. Who furnished the "know how" to build your homes and furnish them? Who furnished the "know how" to prepare your foods and medicines, give you electricity, make your clothes, design and build your cars and every other convenience you so richly enjoy, that goes with civilization. Now what have you done for yourself?

You are indebted to the white people of Montgomery for life itself. As the white doctor brought most of you into the world. The white man paid about 95 per cent for your education, furnished you jobs and a place to live, etc. Now suppose the white people of Montgomery would not hire you any longer or give you a place to live where would you go or do?

Ball Is Right

Editor, The Advertiser:

The most constructive advice given in any letter to you is contained in the one from Fred Ball in Monday's paper. Why is the law he mentioned not resorted to?

If the leaders of this boycott were rounded up and made to feel the punishment resulting from breaking this law, there seems to be no reason why normal condition would not return to Montgomery.

How pathetic that preachers of both races should be involved in leading people into such a state of affairs as now exists in our state capital? The trouble all began because a law was violated. It is inconceivable to contemplate the chaos resulting from the violation of many of our laws with reactions as those that followed the one violated by Rosa Parks.

The South Did Not Yield To Might

EDITOR, THE ADVERTISER—Your editorial page Jan. 19 was good journalism. Not that you are always very bad.

I must disagree with you on yours and Margaret Crits' conclusion on the "story of nullification" that "the power to secede is an attribute of sovereignty the states have surrendered"—for that is to accept the doctrine that might makes right for which is the same as to try to justify the crucifixion.

Since we are taken back into the Union by force and so far as our status in Washington is concerned we are, but as a puppet state the same as Poland to Russia. But we do not enjoy a seat in the U.N. which we should apply for immediately, else an end of the puppet state status and any further extension of the "long train of abuses and usurpations pursuing invariably the same object."

After a train of 30 years of abuses and usurpations our forefathers simply ran out of powder and beans, no governmental philosophical principle was surrendered.

One writer notes a step-up of the pressure 18 years ago of what can but be another train pursuing the same object. How long the pressure can be withstood without another open break is the sole question now. Negotiation was of no avail before—it was a Whig called by Virginia as president of the peace conference in 1867. It failed; he then supported secession. John Tyler, no less.

So, if a Whig of his stature could not keep the peace with the party on which the Northern warring element was founded, how can we hope for a negotiated peace now?

Editor, The Advertiser:

As one of your old and time-worn paid-in-advance subscribing contributors I beg of you to permit a brief reply to one of your assertions in your lead editorial of Jan. 22, which I do not believe the facts will substantiate nor corroborate. It is this:

"Whereupon the legislature, having voted to nullify the U.S. Constitution, voted to leave the Alabama Constitution just as it was."

It is believed that if your enterprising reporters would ask every member of the Alabama Legislature separately and individually if he would be in favor of nullifying the U.S. Constitution, he would answer "No."

Contrariwise: "Are you in favor of supporting and enforcing the U.S. Constitution?" It is believed that he would say: "Yes."

This because all patriotic American citizens would answer in unity and approximately one accord

I am not acquainted with any one who would nullify this sacred instrument we call the U.S. Constitution. In fact, all the people I "run with" are strongly in favor of it. We would fight for it; we stand for it and will keep on standing for it.

The thing you base your thoughtless, wild and unsupported assertion on put out by the U.S. Supreme Court in May, 1954, relating to the human mixture of public school students is not the U.S. Constitution and has never been. It was put out by Earl Warren, Bill Douglas, Felix Frankfurter and Hugo Black, et al., but it seeks to perform the very act the Constitution itself specifically provides and states they shall not do.

Members of the Alabama Legislature know all these things. The U.S. Supreme Court itself virtually admits it is out of its own jurisdiction in the decision. I understand at the bottom of the thing it says: "See Myrdal." These Alabama legislative patriots, without let or hindrance from the executive branch, undoubtedly have seen Prof. Myrdal.

All of them, wishing to preserve their own constitutional rights and prerogatives, acted accordingly and within the provisions of the U.S. Constitution. I say God bless everyone of them and I was sorry to see that one of our own Montgomery members felt he should vote "No" at such a time.

You know the farce you helped to make of the 18th Amendment to the U.S. Constitution and that was not just a politicaly minded Supreme Court decision. It was an actual amendment duly approved by 36 states, yea more.

All the way from Virginia to Texas, it is predicted, this will look like a happy May day Sunday school picnic beside what we may reasonably expect in the not too far distant future.

That one decision will probably be properly objected to, but we will save, keep and hold fast to our Constitution which protects the several states of our blessed and divinely favored country.

Give The Lord A Helping Hand

EDITOR, THE ADVERTISER — Since the blue law of Alabama has been a general topic of discussion in the past few weeks I have given quite a bit of thought to it Being a partner in a county store and having been guilty of violating this law I would like to comment on it.

Montgomery, Ala.

The more I think along this line, the more two definite things come to my mind. One is that we disregard the Sabbath in keeping it holy and let the quotation "money is the root of all evil" cling to us and we to the almighty dollar and satan or that we take a hand in the work of our Maker and realize that a helping hand from Him would mean much more to us than the dollar we would take in on the Sabbath.

I realize that habit plays a big part in our lives and that we are prone to put off getting some of the necessities we need from the store until Sunday, but most of us seem to find time to go places we want to go and do the things we want to do. Why can't we take time out to get the necessities on the other six days?

After all, from Saturday night until Monday morning is not such a long time and most likely none of us will suffer from hunger for that period of time. In this my aim is to say to each of us, let us stop and think this matter over, then try it and with the helping hand of God, I am sure that we will enjoy and be proud of a greater community, a greater county, a greater state and a greater nation.

Let Montgomery County be on top by giving the Lord a hand in and share of our profits and respect on the Sabbath.

Look Who's Riding

Editor, The Advertiser:

As a very interested citizen of Montgomery it seems that the Negro citizens would realize that while they are walking in the cold rain and mud the leaders and "big wheels" are riding in big new cars.

These leaders don't feed them and they should think of that before donating their grocery and rent money. I feel for people who are so foolish as they can't see what is best for those who live here in the South. The North is North—the South is South and one or two people can't cram the North's ways on the South simply because they want to. Stop and think Negro citizens, if not I hate to think Montgomery's future!

Violence has already begun. So far I thank God no one has been hurt. Stop and think of this alone—don't let a loud-mouth influence you. Do what your own mind tells you.

Outside Provocation

Editor, The Advertiser:

I feel that Negroes and whites have lived for years peaceably in Alabama and could have lived on that way if some of those agitators had stayed out.

The feeling has been much worse since some meetings have been held for speakers from outside Alabama.

Did you ever stop to think these bombings could have been done by some one not of the white race? Things have been done to stir up all that could be.

I feel sorry for the good colored people who have to suffer the acts of a few agitators.

M. J. WOODFIN.

Futile Gesture

Editor, The Advertiser:

I have talked to any number of Negroes since this boycott started and am convinced that it is not the responsible educated type of Negro who is back of this. For many years Negroes and whites have gone along side by side in harmony, and these agitators from elsewhere come and prey upon the emotions or ignorance of a certain class and stir up the trouble. My maid tells me that many Negroes are told that "white people have it in for them." She also says they are told the bus men and white people will "jump on them" if they ride the buses.

If they were not being intimidated by their own, many would have started riding long ago. The futility of their actions is so apparent.

Don't they know that even if the federal court should outlaw segregation on the bus and other public transportation within the state, it would be a simple matter to just do away with such public transportation? So what do they hope to gain? Surely a small handful of disgruntled citizens, be they black or white, cannot change our way of life in the South which will endure until the end of time.

Mayor Gayle Stands Firm

EDITOR, THE ADVERTISER—This is my first time to write you but I do think we should all congratulate our mayor for showing us how he stands on this race question in standing firm and not giving in to Negro demands in the boycott. If they are granted them they will only come back demanding still more.

Thurs. 1-26-56

Our city officials have seen to it that Negroes have good schools, good housing and fair and just treatment. Still they aren't satisfied. So it only proves one thing and that is they will not stop until they are allowed to come into our schools, churches and yes, even our homes.

p. 4-A

We are very proud of our mayor and two commissioners. Now if our governor would be man enough to come out in the open and tell the voters how he really stands on segregation.

If and when we do have a governor like that we will not be ashamed when we visit other states and say we are from Alabama.

We like to be able to hold our heads high with pride when any of our state, city and county officials names are mentioned. Let's all remember this when going to the polls.

Again let me say we should all let our mayor and commissioners know how proud we are of them.

Congressman Powell And Folsom

Editor, The Advertiser:

I am fed up with Jim Folsom's accusing the legislature of throwing up "smoke screens" on racial issues. This is his method of attempting to pass legislation that would render our state helpless in the hands of the greediest lot of politicians since carpet bag days.

Along the same line let me submit to you the following:

¶ Negro Congressman Adam Clayton Powell came to Montgomery in November and was met at the airport in Cadillac No. 1 (not Cadillac No. 2). Negro Congressman Adam Clayton Powell was driven to the Mansion which belongs to you and you and you.

¶ Said Negro congressman drank Scotch and soda with James Elisha Folsom, who was elected by you and you and you.

¶ This same Negro congressman made inflammatory talks to Negroes after your James Elisha Folsom told him "integration is here. It is the law of the land."

Now, this is my point: Ever since that visit by the New York Negro congressman, unrest has been evident. The bus boycott began.

I lay the bus boycott squarely in the lap of Jim Folsom and his house drinking guest, Adam Clayton Powell. These two did more than anybody else to cause the bus boycott and as long as Big Foot talks as he does—for nothing but Negro votes—we are in for many grievious days.

Publish It Not In The Streets Of Askelon—XX

Advertiser

Now once again The Advertiser illuminates a scandal in American journalism. It is a scandal of abortion on the news.

Montgomery

As you read, remember that the front pages of Northern newspapers have made the picture of Miss Autherine Lucy more familiar than that of Eleanor Roosevelt, and rendered the saga of the Rev. M. L. King, Jr., only a little less renowned than that of Davy Crockett and accorded his encyclicals a deference surpassing those of Norman Vincent Peale.

Sunile-3-56

But how do Northern newspapers play race strife news when it happens not under the picturesque Dixie magnolia, but under the Northern beaches?

As The Advertiser has previously and repetitiously documented, Northern race disharmony is subordinated, masked and even doctored. How are the American people to know the scope of the American race problem when the press veils the truth? Can the problem be realistically grappled with until the U.S. press tells the truth and shames the devil, and abandons its double standard of news coverage?

P. 2-B

How did the Northern press play the story of the Buffalo race riot? The answer is, some papers properly played it as they would had it happened in Alabama, and others—usually the pretentious preceptors of Alabama—played it obscurely.

THE ADVERTISER messaged the Associated Press in certain cities to learn how their newspapers handled the story, a major one because of the brutish conflict between whites and blacks and further dramatized because it happened at sea. It was a dull news editor who didn't recognize these elements of a top story.

DETROIT—This is the city adjoining major story exactly three paragraphs (specially written by a correspondent) and interred it on Pg. 50. Why Pg. 50? Perhaps because 50 is a nice round number, but it also happens that on this day Pg. 50 was the last page in The Times.

BUFFALO—The papers were above reproach in their handling.

NEWARK — The Evening News, the best paper by far in New Jersey, put it at the bottom of Pg. 1 in an early edition, then moved it inside in later editions.

SAN FRANCISCO—The Call Bulletin started it with a Pg. 1 banner line in 96 pt. type, but in later editions moved it inside. The Oakland papers had it on Pg. 1.

ASBURY PARK—To its credit, the Asbury Park [New Jersey] Press, which had appealed for financial support for the Montgomery bus boycott, gave the story a 2 col. head on Pg. 1. Nothing like the sensational treatment the Montgomery situation got, but sound.

THE "People's Right To Know" is the aggressive war cry of the American Society of Newspaper Editors. In Alabama, this editor keeps headquarters informed of all denials of information to the press by officials. Not a constable can withhold a reckless driving incident or a probate judge a marriage license without invoking the austere chastisement of the editor's society: the "People's Right To Know." But Northern papers mask race news and refuse to use the word Negro to explain what happened.

Dearborn, in which a Negro is not permitted to pass the night, let alone reside. This is the city where a mob of 500 recently scalped a Cherokee Indian, taking him for a Negro and making him sell his new home before the sun went down. The Detroit papers played that one as far back as Pg. 60; one gave it three paragraphs.

In the case of the Buffalo mob clash, The Detroit News ran it adequately on Pg. 1 above the fold with a 2 col. 48 pt. headline. The Detroit Times put it back on Pg. 3, but used a picture. The Detroit Free Press placed it on Pg. 32. The other papers broke it ahead of The Free Press, but this was still ridiculous—if for no other reason than Detroit, having so much race strife, is interested in race news.

KANSAS CITY—Here, where race disharmony has followed the settlement of Negro masses, The Kansas City Star judiciously played the story at the top of Pg. 1 where it belonged.

PHILADELPHIA—Proper play on Pg. 1.

ST. LOUIS — The Globe-Democrat played it below the fold on Pg. 1. And that tireless preceptor of Alabama, the St. Louis Post-Dispatch? They put it back in Section 2C under 1 col. 30-pt. head. By the way, you remember that the self-righteous Post-Dispatch has never printed the picture of a Negro bride in its society section and the technique for evading such requests was revealed in The Advertiser.

NEW YORK—Hearst's Journal-American, to our surprise, gave the story Autherine play—Pg. 1 at the top.

Likewise Scripps-Howard's World-Telegram & Sun, but it did not identify "girl gangs" as Negroes (as did the AP story).

Letter To The Chicago Daily News

Montgomery, Ala. P. 4-A

¶ The following was written by Dr. Homer A. Jack, Unitarian Minister of Evanston, Ill., long active in human relations work in Chicago and elsewhere. Dr. Jack came here recently to investigate the bus boycott.—Ed.

RECENTLY Chicago's Mayor Daley announced that he was appointing a committee of public relations counselors to recoup Chicago's good name around the world. No doubt he had in mind Chicago's reputation for gangsters.

However, in recent years, I have found, from traveling in Africa and Asia, that Chicago's reputation has extended to racial violence.

Couldn't Mayor Daley and his committee begin their laudable work by clearing up the Trumbull Park situation?

Besieged Fortress

RECENTLY Police Commissioner O'Connor was quoted as saying that "We have not had a disturbance in Trumbull Park in six months." A few weeks ago I spent an entire day in South Deering—as I have periodically for almost the last three years—and here are my observations:

¶ The 27 Negro families now in Trumbull Park homes live as if in a besieged fortress and are protected by almost 100 police every 24 hours.

¶ Negro residents have almost never been able to walk the three blocks to the east to reach neighborhood stores.

¶ Negro residents have never been able to go to the neighborhood churches unescorted by police.

¶ Negro residents without their own autos must be escorted by police squad cars to a bus stop more than a mile from the project, to do major shopping and go to work.

¶ Negro residents are intimidated by aerial bombs which are set off in the neighborhood and which the police are unable to stop.

¶ The South Deering Improvement Association is as adamant as ever in its desire to drive Negro tenants out of the housing project.

Racist Revolt

GOVERNMENTAL agencies, including the Chicago Housing Authority and the Commission on Human Relations, are all "concerned," but they and Mayor Daley apparently have no aggressive, coordinated policy to end this interposition of South Deering to the democratic right of all peoples to live in all neighborhoods.

Civic groups, including business, labor, church, and minority organizations, and the press, also periodically express "concern," but are doing nothing substantially to break the chronic nature of this racist revolt.

Must the Trumbull Park stalemate go on forever?

Is there not some new way to "solve" this problem, to get all concerned off the hook, and yet to do so without compromising one bit on the right of Negroes and all peoples to live anywhere, including in a public housing project in South Deering?

NOW once again The Advertiser illuminates a scandal in American journalism. It is a scandal of abortion on the news.

Sun. 6-3-56

As you read, remember that the front pages of Northern newspapers have made the picture of Miss Autherine Lucy more familiar than that of Eleanor Roosevelt, and rendered the saga of the Rev. M. L. King, Jr., only a little less renowned than that of Davy Crockett and accorded his encyclicals a deference surpassing those of Norman Vincent Peale.

Montgomery, Ala.

But how do Northern newspapers play race strife news when it happens not under the picturesque Dixie magnolia, but under the Northern beaches?

As The Advertiser has previously and repetitiously documented, Northern race disharmony is subordinated, masked and even doctored. How are the American people to know the scope of the American race problem when the press veils the truth? Can the problem be realistically grappled with until the U.S. press tells the truth and shames the devil, and abandons its double standard of news coverage?

How did the Northern press play the story of the Buffalo race riot? The answer is, some papers properly played it as they would had it happened in Alabama, and others—usually the pretentious preceptors of Alabama—played it obscurely.

THE ADVERTISER messaged the Associated Press in certain cities to learn how their newspapers handled the story, a major one because of the brutish conflict between whites and blacks and further dramatized because it happened at sea. It was a dull news editor who didn't recognize these elements of a top story.

DETROIT—This is the city adjoining Dearborn, in which a Negro is not permitted to pass the night, let alone reside. This is the city where a mob of 500 recently scalped a Cherokee Indian, taking him for a Negro and making him sell his new home before the sun went down. The Detroit papers played that one as far back as Pg. 60; one gave it three paragraphs.

In the case of the Buffalo mob clash, The Detroit News ran it adequately on Pg. 1 above the fold with a 2 col. 48 pt. headline. The Detroit Times put it back on Pg. 3, but used a picture. The Detroit Free Press placed it on Pg. 32. The other papers broke it ahead of The Free Press, but this was still ridiculous—if for no other reason than Detroit, having so much race strife, is interested in race news.

KANSAS CITY—Here, where race disharmony has followed the settlement of Negro masses, The Kansas City Star judiciously played the story at the top of Pg. 1 where it belonged.

PHILADELPHIA—Proper play on Pg. 1.

ST. LOUIS — The Globe-Democrat played it below the fold on Pg. 1. And that tireless preceptor of Alabama, the St. Louis Post-Dispatch? They put it back in Section 2C under 1 col. 30-pt. head. By the way, you remember that the self-righteous Post-Dispatch has never printed the picture of a Negro bride in its society section and the technique for evading such requests was revealed in The Advertiser.

NEW YORK—Hearst's Journal-American, to our surprise, gave the story Autherine play—Pg. 1 at the top.

Likewise Scripps-Howard's World-Telegram & Sun, but it did not identify "girl gangs" as Negroes (as did the AP story).

The New York Post, of which James Wechsler is the editor, Murray Kempton the columnist who wrote that the Negro porters at the Capitol had to wear white coats as marks of their Dixie serfdom whereas they are Kilby trusties, and Ted Poston, Negro reporter, a recent Montgomery tourist and Advertiser guest—The Post came through in good form. The Negro-white angle was prominent.

HEARST'S Daily Mirror obscured the story on Pg. 5 and denied the "People's Right To Know" the truth about their affairs by eliminating all reference to Negroes and race rioting.

The story broke for Thursday papers, but the Daily News and the Herald Tribune did not get around to telling their readers the race riot news until Friday (and just this week, using an Advertiser testimonial, the Herald Tribune took a double-page ad in Editor & Publisher magazine to boast of its magnificent reporting on Alabama race news). The Daily News put it on Pg. 5; the Herald Tribune, Pg. 4 with a 1-col. head.

The boast of the old gray mare, otherwise The New York Times, is "All The News That's Fit To Print" (one Negro bride's picture in the society section in 125 years). The AP advises us that The New York Times gave this major story exactly three paragraphs (specially written by a correspondent) and interred it on Pg. 50. Why Pg. 50? Perhaps because 50 is a nice round number, but it also happens that on this day Pg. 50 was the last page in The Times.

NEWARK — The Evening News, the best paper by far in New Jersey, put it at the bottom of Pg. 1 in an early edition, then moved it inside in later editions.

SAN FRANCISCO—The Call Bulletin started it with a Pg. 1 banner line in 96 pt. type, but in later editions moved it inside. The Oakland papers had it on Pg. 1.

ASBURY PARK—To its credit, the Asbury Park [New Jersey] Press, which had appealed for financial support for the Montgomery bus boycott, gave the story a 2 col. head on Pg. 1. Nothing like the sensational treatment the Montgomery situation got, but sound.

PROVIDENCE—The Providence [Rhode Island] Evening Bulletin used a Pg. 1 cut on the story but played the text itself on Pg. 12. The Morning Journal used only a four-inch story, under a 1 col. head, buried on Pg. 16.

THE "People's Right To Know" is the aggressive war cry of the American Society of Newspaper Editors. In Alabama, this editor keeps headquarters informed of all denials of information to the press by officials. Not a constable can withhold a reckless driving incident or a probate judge a marriage license without invoking the austere chastisement of the editor's society: the "People's Right To Know." But Northern papers mask race news and refuse to use the word Negro to explain what happened.

Re 'Handicapped By Laziness'

Adv. 5-4-H

EDITOR, THE ADVERTISER — I have never seen the unemployment office in Montgomery but know enough about it and the laws governing its operation to tell ["Mrs. W."] is not qualified to interview, some excuse can be found to prevent his being assigned to certain units. In addition to the units which have no Negroes, the majority of those remaining unofficially keep the percentage of Negroes assigned to their units very low.

There is very little social intercourse between Negroes and whites—even in those units with relatively large Negro populations. For example, in mess halls Negroes usually eat at certain tables and very seldom does one see a "mixed" table.

The white-Negro off-duty relationship is not so rosy as pictured either. Fist fights and brawls between whites and Negroes in on-post clubs as well as in off-post civilian establishments are very common. Only recently a race riot occurred near here in Augsburg. Fifteen or twenty Negroes converged on a German gasthaus (cafe-saloon) which is frequented primarily by white soldiers, and tried to run the whites off. The police had to be called to quell the riot. These occurrences are not uncommon.

I have heard many professional soldiers say that the Army has been "in a mess" since integration took place. Granted that this judgment may be a bit rash and superficial, it nevertheless reflects the attitude of the majority of men now on active duty. And all of these men are not from Alabama or Georgia or even Mississippi.

The Seamy Side Of Army Integration

Montgomery, Ala.

EDITOR, THE ADVERTISER—Since the furor caused by A. Lucy's admission and subsequent expulsion from the University of Alabama and the Montgomery bus boycott, I have seen many references to the "peaceful" integration of the Army which was supposedly achieved several years ago. After having spent almost two years in the army, it is evident to me that Army integration is more theoretical than real.

Of course a personnel office cannot refuse to accept a man solely because he is a Negro, but after the preliminary make a statement.

The Montgomery local office has two divisions and you chance to pass the lineup of colored applicants and claimants. I don't have figures to prove it but good reason to doubt if the percentage of Negroes (applicants and claimants) is much larger than white.

By law they must apply for, search for, and be able to work to qualify for a maximum of 20 weeks benefits a year. If they avail themselves of this maximum their chances of earning another full 20 weeks by the end of their benefit year is unlikely.

The line may be long but the life is not easy nor secure. As for the doctor's certificate mentioned and with no reflection on the profession, you can get one, a great majority of the time, to fit the needs of the case. Should a claimant of these unemployment benefits present a certificate showing disability to work he would be automatically ineligible. He would then be a candidate for relief from other tax sources into which he has made no earmarked contribution as in the case of his unemployment contribution.

I know I am ignorant of the laws and functions of many governmental agencies and I, for one, will not make public condemnation of unfamiliar agencies.

Beware Of The Stalking Horse

Editor, The Advertiser:

Being fair in voting is most difficult. For we are dealing with fraud in the presentation of the subject matter to the voting public. The voter is put to a disadvantage by the mob psychologist and most of the time the mob psychologist is not a candidate but sells his talents to various candidates for pay.

Very few voters ever have a chance to get the facts in an election campaign. Voting happens to be our greatest guessing game and most voters are no better than me—they most generally guess wrong.

There are too many elections, too many candidates to choose from, and there are always the stalking horse candidate to further confuse the voter. The stalking horses are put out by the political fixers to get the man they want elected in the runoff and in the public office. As usual there were stalking horses in the May 1 primary and again it worked for the political fixers.

Alabamian Calls Segregation 'Only Sane Way'

Journal + Constitution Atlanta, Ga.

MONTGOMERY, June 23 (AP)—The South, says George Wallace, must "let the world know" that racial segregation is "the only sane, sensible and non-hypocritical way in which our people can live in harmony together."

P. 2

As a member of the powerful platform committee at the Democratic National Convention, the circuit judge from Clayton, Ala., says he will make every endeavor to get that idea across at Chicago.

Wed. 6-24-56

"We have no apologies to make," Wallace declared Saturday. "The great majority of the men and women of the South of both races are men and women of goodwill. They can solve and work out any problem between them without the aid of Midwestern and Eastern politicians."

P. 22-A

AS A MEMBER of the platform committee, the south Alabama judge has been instructed by the state's convention delegation to seek readoption of the States' rights principles carried in the party platform in 1928. It says:

"We demand that the constitutional rights and powers of the states be preserved in their full vigor and virtue. We demand a revival of the spirit of local government without which free institutions cannot be preserved."

Wallace, in an interview, termed the 1928 position a "positive approach to the matter of federal encroachment on States' rights," and added:

"Those of us on the platform committee from the South must take the lead for the nation to fight any further efforts to weaken local government."

AS A JUDGE, Wallace recently threatened to jail any federal officer who might undertake an investigation of the courts in his circuit.

At Chicago, he said he will "oppose any of the so-called civil rights proposals, any attempt to endorse the Supreme Court decision outlawing school segregation; or any effort to tack a desegregation rider on new federal aid legislation, such as help for the schools."

Wallace said he plans to confer with Alabama's other member of the platform-writing committee, Mrs. Martha Roberts McBurney of Florence, and other members of the delegation about the segregation and related problems.

* * *

AS FOR HIMSELF, the judge said he also will recommend:

1. A farm program "designed to stop the downward trend of farm income" and assure Alabama farmers "a fair price for cotton, peanuts and other agricultural products."

2. Any proposals "that I sincerely believe to be fair to industry and labor."

3. Expansion of the Tennessee Valley Authority and the REA, especially in rural telephone development, "to counteract the efforts of the present administration to weaken these agencies that have meant so much to the people of Alabama and the nation."

4. An expanded Social Security program.

5. Continued benefits to war veterans, especially those disabled.

6. A "strong" anti-Communist stand both at home and abroad.

Make The North Obey The Supreme Court First

EDITOR, THE ADVERTISER—I would first like to state that I have no sympathy for anyone who waves the Confederate flag and sings Dixie with total reverence, any more than I like anyone else who believes the South is decadent, defeated, and Southerners sit around drinking mint julips and smelling magnolias, at the same time, and firmly believe that the North is just as bad, or worse, in the subject of intolerance and segregation. The only difference lies in the ratio of Negroes to whites in both sections of the country.

Minneapolis is just as segregated in residential areas as in any Southern city, only the Negro population is smaller than most large cities. The schools are not segregated but then again the ratio is vastly out of balance.

The Supreme Court is the law of the land and must be obeyed. But this should take time. Lots of time. Segregation should be abolished in the North just as much as in the South. And it should be abolished in the North first. Let's hope we have less Senator Eastlands and Orville Hubbards, and more Editor Halls, (Jr. and Sr.). It makes me sick how these Northern reporters ably covered the Southern situation and completely ignored their own backyards. This is a national problem and should be handled as such, not geographically.

Put more heat on these Northern papers. We should clean our own homes first and then do it together.

The Tide Can Be Turned

Editor, The Advertiser:

You doubtless have received many letters commending you for the series of articles that you have been running in your newspaper under the title of "Publish It Not In The Streets of Askelon" concerning segregation of the races in the northern states.

Please add my expressions to all the others, including my special appreciation of the excellent prose and wittiness of your writer, Tom Johnson. We are almost buried under an avalanche, but we can turn the tide eventually with an educational program in the South and in the North such as that which you are carrying on.

Keep up the good work.

Kefauver's Self-Assurance

Editor, The Advertiser:

If we digest everything the Kefauvercrats have to say about him we would believe that it was an unfortunate thing that Kefauver was not born 200 years ago and lived to the age of Methuselah.

Believe him, and you will believe there was never anything done in the U. S. right. In his own estimation he has unseated Solomon.

He concurs in the decision of the Supreme Court's upset on the constitution on the segregation issue, and by so doing he would sabotage the constitution. The most competent senators in the Senate can't tell Kefauver anything, or advise him on any subject. He should be docked for non-attendance and rebuked for deserting his family.

He would not sign the manifesto, signed by 100 loyal Southerners, believing that the Southerners hold him in greater esteem than they do the NAACP, which organization he is playing ball with.

He is so full of egoism there is not room in his makeup for sensibility.

He has become the nation's pest for the great majority.

He has the same chance to be elected President as would Congressman Powers, the Negro from New York.

Interposition Is Now More Important Than Ever

Fri. 6-1-56

EDITOR, THE ADVERTISER — Inasmuch as Montgomery is in the heart of the Deep South and, further, that you are quite enterprising in exposing the different views on the problems of the South, it only seems logical that we who have something to say on these questions should turn to you for our expressions.

Therefore, I am inclined to discuss with you the matter of interposition. In the United States, this doctrine is basic; has been under discussion before and since the Constitution was adopted, and only recently reasserted in six Southern states in connection with mixing the races in schools. Undoubtedly, too, the recent claim of the United States government that it alone has the right to punish traitors (not individual states) has caused citizens of the several states involved to re-examine the powers granted the U.S. government by the states.

The definition of the word "interpose" is "to come between." In the doctrine of interposition, the state goes between one of its citizens and a duty imposed upon that citizen by the United States government. That is, the state does so if it thinks the U.S. government oversteps its authority.

We all know, of course, that all powers not given to the U.S. government are held by the individual states. On the other hand, it is clear that the U.S. government can say what powers the states gave it. If it wants to, the U.S. government can say (through the Supreme Court's "interpretation" of the Constitution) that it has all legal power over each citizen of the United States, and that the individual state has none. This imaginary usurpation of authority by the U.S. government can be effectively stopped by the individual state when it declares the opinion of the Supreme Court is null and void (it interposes itself between the citizen and the U.S. government).

It works this way: Suppose a U.S. marshal tells a school superintendent that he must admit Nellie Jones to his school. The superintendent refuses; the U.S. marshal takes him into custody for trial. The court is duly organized and a jury selected. The jury will have to set him free because it was against the law of the state for the marshal to take him in the first place, and he is forever free of that offense (so-called) for the reason that the Constitution prohibits a man being tried more than once for the same offense.

Of course, all this is seen in advance by the marshal (and those above him in authority) and they are not foolhardy enough to go to all that trouble and expense.

In other words, the jury decides which law it wants to obey when they conflict. That is one of the beauties of trial by jury.

Our good friends of the past (John C. Calhoun; Thomas Jefferson; Andrew Jackson) held the Yankees' feet to the fire on this vital point. The New England Codfish Aristocracy thought they could give all power to the U.S. government and then take charge of the government, thus leaving the South out in the cold. But it didn't work!

The Egghead Mess In Washington

Editor, The Advertiser:

Ralph Bunche came to the State Department with some 10 or 12 other political scientists to formulate a plan for what is now known as the U.N. Two women political scientists were in the bunch. They were all fine people. They came from schools of highest learning.

But not one of them knew a thing about practical politics, national or international. Not one of them would make a creditable race for dog catcher if they should go before the voters for public office. They were college trained politically. How could they lay the groundwork for world politics with nothing to go on but book learning?

College trained politicians have got our foreign affairs in the mess they are in today. Our college trained social scientists are the main reason why our race relations are so bad today. And when and if they are ever straightened out it will be by leaders from the common people in both races.

It's A Trap

Mon. 2-28-56

EDITOR, THE ADVERTISER—Over the radio yesterday morning the announcer stated that the editor of your local paper had been challenged by the New York Post to investigate racial discrimination in this city.

It would be a mistake. The Post is pink. You would not have a chinaman's chance. Any incidents would be well hidden from you.

The New York press is biased and does not print the facts. The Southern manifesto was not printed. The Herald Tribune quoted Wayne Morse and gloated over the split in the Democratic Party. He said the Northern Democrats would vote to punish the South through the Powell amendment, etc. Yet nothing was given of the Southern side.

History is mistaught the same way through the universities as well as grammar school. JOHN T. BRYAN.

Another Unwritten Yankee Law

Editor, The Advertiser:

I was interested in your article, "Calling Detroit," also in your open letter to The New York Post, in which you suggested a tour of the environs of New York to learn of the attempted methods of segregation in vogue up there.

In the meantime I suggest that you also contact the press of Chicago and learn if the unwritten law or understanding between the real estate dealers and property owners, not to let any Negroes locate east of Cottage Grove, south of 40th Street or thereabouts, is still in effect or if encroachments have been made in this area in spite of the efforts of the white people.

Also ask them if the attempt to segregate the beach on the South Side of town is being maintained in an effective manner. Namely, the Negroes to be confined to the area north of 35th Street or thereabout. Is it not generally true that the motel operators in northern Illinois, Wisconsin and elsewhere up North dread to see Negroes apply for accommodations and will put up their NO VACANCY sign to head them off if they have a chance.

Is it not a fact and so recognized that property in a strictly Negro or white district holds its value and that when they become mixed that the bottom drops out of prices and you have the beginning of a slum.

We here in the South are open in our views and methods in preserving segregation to the advantage of both races. It is high time that the people up north take measures as we do to protect the cultural and economic values of their communities and that the Negroes take pride in their own race and advance the conditions in their ancesteral lands in Africa, etc., instead of being hell bent for what I call legalized intrusion.

I am a former yankee who fell in love with the South and one of our girls down here. The dealings that I and my wife's family have had with the Negroes have always been pleasant, they have done many a good turn for us and we have also helped them and hope the same good feeling will exist between us in the future in spite of all the furor from the outside. The Negroes have many admirable qualities but yet they are a different set of people and 99% of the ones down here recognize this fact.

If you care to publish this letter either in full or in part, please leave my name and address off of it as I work with the state and don't want Big Jim or any one else in the administration to cause me trouble. YANKEE.

The Price Of Integration In N.Y.

Editor, The Advertiser:

Allow me to congratulate you on your refusal to come to New York City and do a series of articles on racial discrimination at the invitation of the editor of the New York Post, one James Wechsler. You would have as much chance to get the true story in the company of these as you would have trying to get the number of prisoners in Russian slave labor camps.

May I humbly suggest that if you really want to get a true picture of racial discrimination here in this communist island, this city of New York, you should come alone and take a look around for yourself. Go to the West Side, embracing the 60s and as far up town to 145th st. Visit the side streets in the 70s, 80s, and the 90s. Talk to the patrolmen on duty, visit the precincts, watch the mad pattern of the mongrels, see the filth and the human degredation that is so apparent.

Here amid these crime infested streets live thousands upon thousands of Puerto Ricans, Negroes, and a few poor whites that are unable in a financial way to get away from it all. Here crime runs rampant. Murders, robberies, muggings, doe addicts, prostitutes and homosexuals. The New York police are the finest in the world, but they are powerless to do anything about this situation. Several New York papers scream and rant about racial persecution whenever one of these criminal rats are caught. People are actually afraid to walk the streets at night. Most of the public parks are under a curfew. It is truly one hell of a place.

Decent people are moving to the suburbs as fast as houses can be built for them. Talk to the property owners in Brooklyn and other sections and you will find that they are reluctant to sell property to Negroes. As soon as one moves into a block that is all white, "for sale" signs appear in all the other houses. Property values go down immediately. The people move as soon as they can sell. Real nice people want no part of them.

I have lived here for over 20 years. I am an ambulance driver and I am in the midst of all this all the time. I know what I am talking about. I will gladly assist you in any way I can if you should need me. I have lots of friends on the police force and they will be able to give you the true facts. You don't want a guided tour. THE VICE CHAIRMAN of the National Democratic Party is the Illinois Negro congressman, William Dawson, and he is a whale spout when talking about Alabama race disharmony.

Ser. 5-27-56

The Chicago newspapers have a code to guide them in subordinating and masking Chicago race disharmony and their front pages belong to Miss Arthermine Lucy.

Montgomery, Ala.

These Illinois experts are so gluttonously busy with Alabama that they find no time to tell the truth about Illinois. That leaves the burden of enlightenment upon The Advertiser.

It is our expectation that the American press will eventually land solidly on its feet and give the American people a faithful picture of the Negro's rejection in the North, and we had thought recently that this was coming to pass. Then we saw the survey of Northern race disharmony broadcast by The Associated Press. It was written by Bem Price, a superficial, chattering stereotyper who, with the apparatus of the world's greatest newsgathering agency at his command, revealed less—less by far—than has The Advertiser with one reporter and a telephone. What this Price wrote was more apologia for the North than revelation. It was reportorial malingering, saturated with the purloined patter that may be paraphrased, "the North doesn't discriminate because it has laws against discrimination."

WHEREFORE we will illustrate the officiousness and deficiency of Congressman Dawson, the Chicago papers and The Associated Press.

How many citizens in Illinois and Alabama have ever been informed about the status of the Negro in Pekin, Ill., Washington, Ill. and Morton, Ill.?

Illinoisans have been drenched with the tale of the Montgomery bus boycott, but how many have had opportunity to learn about the status of the Negro in this trinity of suburbs clustering about Peoria?

None—the Negro has no status in Pekin, Washington, and Morton because there are no Negroes there. There are 5,000 Negroes in adjoining Peoria, but they are not allowed in the three cities. In short, the cities are Dearbornized.

AN ILLINOIS citizen, traveling through Texas, discovered in a Texas newspaper that The Advertiser was interested in these oddities of the land of the abolitionist and suggested an investigation.

The Advertiser put a simple message on the teletype to the Illinois AP and by afternoon had the following confirmation. This shows how easy it is for a newspaper after the truth to obtain it in this connection.

The AP reported that:

Re query: U.S. Census says Pekin, with 21,858, had 12 non-white in 1950, but census this year showed only one non-white among 25,156.

Morton, with 3,693, had six Negroes, all women, in 1950; and Washington, two Negro females among 4,285.

No later official figures, but Sam Belfer, secretary of Peoria Human Relations Commission, says no Negro householders or renters in three towns now. Believes may be few Negro domestic servants.

Barrier apparently unofficial covenant of residents, property owners, strongly backed by officials. Riley property owner were to rent to Negro he would be "ostracized and city officials would get after him in various ways."

These three towns largely residential suburbs of Peoria where some 5,000 Negroes among 110,000 residents long accepted in schools and "a few" live without friction in white neighborhoods. Belfer says integration "has worked beautifully" in Robert H. Taft Homes, large public housing project in Peoria.

Pittman, secretary of Illinois Human Relations Commission, says one Pekin businessman wrote on survey form "the people of Pekin live in the dark ages and do not allow Negroes to sleep overnight in city limits."

Reliable informant says farmer-horse breeder employed Negro groom near Washington few years ago and brought groom into Washington tavern where they were served, but farmer called aside and told firmly it wasn't done. This source says it

What Alabama State Employment Service Offers

EDITOR, THE ADVERTISER—We are very grateful for your having printed the letter by Mrs. W. in your issue of Sunday, May 20. We would never have known otherwise the extent to which the public can be misinformed about the State Employment Service. Obviously, Mrs. W. is under the impression that an individual must be ill or at least unable to work as a prerequisite to receiving unemployment compensation. This is a common misconception. Actually, the very opposite is true: ability and availability are prime requisites to receiving benefits.

P. 4-A

It is the responsibility of the Alabama State Employment Service to maintain accurate and up to date data as to the ratio of unemployment to the total labor force, the amount of unemployment benefits paid in any given period, the average duration of benefits, the number of job openings received, the number of workers referred to jobs, and the number of workers placed. It is not our purpose here to give a statistical report on the activities of this office; however, the information is of public record and available to any person upon request.

As for the crowds of Negroes standing outside the employment office, Mrs. W. could not have known that these Negroes were waiting for employers to pick them up for day labor. We have never condoned the practice of recruitment on the streets and sidewalks outside the office, but have met with poor success in trying to curtail that practice. Many employers pick up workers from among those waiting outside the office without attempting to place an order for workers with us. This, of course, employers are free to do since, to our knowledge, there is no law prohibiting the practice. However, employers who use the facilities of the State Employment Service agree that our techniques for selection of the right worker for the right job are far better than random recruitment and selection.

Within recent months, the writer had occasion to stop an employer engaging in this practice outside our office and we asked what type of workers he was seeking. The employer wanted to hire two truck drivers. Of the two individuals he had selected, one had never driven a truck for pay, did not have a driver's license and all of his regular experience had been as a short order cook. The other individual had driven a truck, but his driver's license was no longe valid. After this had been brought to the employer's attention, he was happy to place an order for workers with us and he remained inside our office at an interviewer's desk while suitable applicants were selected for him. This employer called back several weeks later to thank us for opening his eyes to what the employment service could offer.

We acknowledge the fact that some individuals reporting to this office might be receiving unemployment benefits to which they are not entitled. Our staff is constantly alert to detect and or to prevent fraud and we are always grateful for any public cooperation directed toward reduction of improper payments. At the risk of citing information which may be common knowledge to many people, the following are primary requirements for receiving unemployment compensation:

¶ Must be able and available for work.

¶ Must seek work on his own in addition to his contact with the employment service.

¶ Must have had recent employment with employers covered by the Alabama unemployment compensation law.

The benefits paid through the Montgomery local office alone amount to approximately $50,000 per month. This is less than these individuals actually earned during a similar period to qualify for benefits, but is considerably more in the cash registers of the butcher, the baker, and the candlestick maker, were it not for these unemployment benefits.

Aside from the poyment of unemployment compensation, the Montgomery local office of the Alabama tate Employment Service placed 697 individuals on no-agricultural jobs during April, 1956. The jobs varied from professional and managerial, technical and sales jobs, right through the scale of occupational categories ranging from aircraft mechanics to ditch diggers.

Montgomery is a growing city and the Alabama State Employment Service hopes to grow with it. We hope that the citizens of Montgomery will find the time to learn about the Alabama State Employment Service, what it is, how it operates, and how it can help the employer and the worker. We hope that you will consider this a standing invitation to visit us at any time for a guided tour through our office. We will be delighted to show you first hand some of the interesting things we encounter daily in serving you.

Alabama State Employment Service.

No Prank

EDITOR, THE ADVERTISER—I think the parents of every small boy between 8 and 12, or thereabouts, in the vicinity of South Hull and Felder and Rose Lane, should find out where their boys were around 8:30 on Tuesday night.

I was driving out South Hull and several boys darted from behind shrubbery, hurled something at my car which exploded just below the window, causing a terrific noise and impact, and water or some other fluid flew all over my face and clothes and ran down the side of the car. If it was water there was something mixed with it as it was sticky on the car and had a burning sensation to the side of my face.

As I stopped I caught sight of these boys darting down into the dark behind a house. I went into the house on the corner to make inquiries and the children did not belong there. Driving around the block several times did not disclose there whereabouts. If I could have found them of course I would have turned the matter over to the police. I would like to warn the parents of boys who do such things that they are responsible for their children's actions and this could have caused a wreck, heart failure or any number of things.

This is much too serious a matter to be called a boy's prank. These are the sort of children who as they get into the 'teens will join the gangster element. My purpose in writing this is that parents find out if their boys did such a thing and perhaps prevent its recurrence, which might have much more serious results. I refrain from signing my name to this letter for fear I might be the victim of still more serious "pranks." Has it come to the point that one can't drive safely down the streets of Montgomery at night?

Bloc Voting

The Brewton Standard

During the past two weeks, articles in this paper have outlined the facts of Negro bloc voting in Escambia County as they relate to state and local politics.

On the local level, those two stories high light a development whic hmust be carefully considered by citizens and politicians alike in future elections. The Negro vote, and the weight it can swing, is of major importance now, and will become of even greater importance in voting to come.

It must be pointed out that development of this bloc vote is both normal and to be expected. The same thing has occurred in other sections of the conntry wherever there are racial groups concentrated in relatively small political units. The Negroes in Harlem, the Italians in Brooklyn, the Jews in Manhattan, the Irish in Boston, the Poles in Pittsburgh and Hamtramck — all these racial and national groups vote as a bloc in nearly every election.

It is as reasonable for the Negro to vote in his own self-interest as it is for the white citizen to ballot on the same account. If that self-interest is identical for all Negroes, then bloc-voting can be expected.

Yet, over the long haul, this tendency will sooner or later break down as Negroes learn to decide on an individual basis whether they are voting in their own interest, or whether they are "being voted" by someone else.

The Sylacauga News

Two major newspapers, one published in Illinois and one in New York state, have taken up recent editorials which have appeared in this column on the subject of segregation, and in rebuttal to our contention that segregation is not limited to the South, they take vigorous exception. Their comments are not argumentative, they simply express an undeviating opinion and an almost fanatical misconception of the true status of the Negro in the South. This attitude is not only unfair to the South but is wholly unfair to the Negro. He is not given credit for the remarkable advance made by his race as a whole, his own social structure, or his own racial pride, but the Northern editors see in him a downtrodden people, slightly removed from slavery.

How wrong can people be, and how unjust it is when people who are supposed to mold public opinion set themselves up as authority on a subject with a single basis of hearsay evidence—both editors having admitted they had never been south of the Mason-Dixon Line. It's just segregation "you-all" and that's that.

A Third Party?

The Union Springs Herald

Most of the state delegation elected to the National Democratic Convention was swept into ofice by the Citizens' Council. Alabama's delegation will go to the convention pledged to fight against a strong pro-segregation plank. Just what will happen this year at the Democratic convention is anyone's guess.

Certainly if the Southern delegation walks out, they will not walk into the Republican Party, because they are aware that their cause would be just as much in jeopardy there.

The South has walked out of conventions before for a principle. They formed the Dixiecrat movement, which was merely a mild protest vote. This time, with the South angered by the Supreme Court's ruling, and with hundreds of White Citizens Councils forming all over the South and in other sections of the nation, there is a good possibility that a third party will be born that will grow to be quite a big boy.

Such a party will not win the next election, or the next, but it must not be forgotten that the stronger the issue the more likely the new party is to survive—and who can deny that today the South's need is great indeed?

A 30-year-old Negro electrical worker, charging that he had been barred from a union because of his race and color, yesterday won a public hearing before the city's community relations board.

The open hearing will be the first ever held in Ohio. It is the first case of a discrimination charge to go this far under Cleveland's fair employment practices ordinance.

Theodore Pinkston, Florida-born, father of three and a veteran who served in the Army in Japan, is making the complaint.

He named as respondents:

Local Union No. 38 of the International Brotherhood of Electrical Workers. George J. Brown, president of the local. Vincent Skodis, business manager of the local.

They kept him out of the union ever since he first asked to get in back in May, 1951, Pinkston is charging.

Frank W. Baldau, director of the community relations board, said as he issued notices of the hearing:

"The board and Mayor Celebrezze had several sessions with the union, trying to solve this one by conference and conciliation.

"They were unsuccessful. The union denies him the right to compete in the open market for electrical work.

"They refuse him journeyman status or even a chance to go through apprentice training.

"For decades this union has let non-union Negro electricians operate only in heavily populated Negro areas.

"Pinkston has been on the civil service list for city jobs, but he claims he was kept out of the jobs because the union keeps such jobs for its members."

The national office of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People has asked permission, Baldau said, to attend the hearing.

So has the fair employment practices committee of Pittsburgh.

Mortimer Riemer, attorney for the union, said: "It is a difficult situation. There are a lot of equities on the side of the union. But I prefer not to comment on it now."

Starting in 1947, the Urban League here tried to break through the color barrier in negotiations with the late Clayton Lee, then business manager of the union.

Engelhardt hits video talk of NAACP lawyer

Mont. Ad. 5-24-56 Brom, Ala.

MONTGOMERY, Ala., May 24—(AP)—A formal statement on a request to answer nationally televised statements on the Montgomery bus boycott situation was awaited here today after indications the request might be rejected.

Mont. 5-24-56

An associate of the producer of "Youth Wants to Know," on which the statements were made, said they might be regarded as the close rather than the opening of a two-sided discussion of segregation matters.

Thurgood Marshall, general counsel for the National Assn. for the Advancement of Colored People, discussed the boycott on a Sunday broadcast. Tuesday State Sen. Sam Engelhardt, executive secretary of the Alabama Assn. of Citizens' Councils, charged Marshall with "false statements."

38a

ENGELHARDT SAID in a telegram to Theodore Granik, producer of the program, "We feel Marshall's statements only added fuel to flames already burning here." Engelhardt asked "in the interest of fair reporting" equal time "for persons acquainted with the situation as it really exists . . . to prove Sunday's presentation is another example of NAACP exploitation."

The telegram did not reach Granik's Washington office before it closed yesterday, Sylvan Marshall, an associate of Granik, said last night.

SYLVAN MARSHALL said a formal statement would await a conference with Granik and (NBC) network officials. But in what he labeled "informal" comments, Sylvan Marshall indicated he thought Thurgood Marshall's appearance might be considered as giving Negroes equal time to reply to an appearance on the program several weeks ago of Sen. Thomas Wofford.

Sylvan Marshall said Wofford "fairly well explained the Southern point of view."

Macon Solon Says Capital In Dire Period

State Sen. Sam Englehardt of Macon County told members of the Exchange Club yesterday that "Montgomery is going through a period unlike any other since the reconstruction."

Trib. 3-2-56

"It has been much overplayed by foreign correspondents — both Yankees and those from overseas," he said of the segregation situation in Montgomery and in the South.

Montgomery Ala.

Englehardt described the brutal manner used by the NAACP in going into Negro houses and threatening the occupants if they confessed to be for segregation.

"Our aim in dealing with this race problem is the White Citizens' Council," Englehardt said.

Asked by a member of the club to comment on the advisability of persons of both races meeting as an unbiased committee to work out a solution he said:

"We cannot negotiate segregation. The Negro will not give in and we cannot give in. However, the longer this thing goes on the more our membership in the councils will increase."

In connection with his talk, Englehardt played a tape recording of a speech by Roosevelt Williams, a Negro official in the NAACP, who spoke at a secret meeting in Jackson, Miss., in December of 1954.

Sen. Englehardt was introduced to the club by MacDonald Gallion, assistant attorney general of Alabama.

State Sen. Sam Englehardt Jr., executive secretary of the Alabama Association of Citizens Councils, yesterday requested equal time on a national television network to answer "an example of NAACP exploitation."

Englehardt charged that Thurgood Marshall, general counsel for the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, made "false statements" about the Montgomery bus boycott during a broadcast ("Youth Wants To Know") Sunday.

In a telegram to Theodore Granik, producer of the television program, Englehardt requested equal time "for persons acquainted with the situation as it really exists."

Police Commission Clyde Sellers endorsed Englehardt's request.

"I'm in complete agreement with the council's requests," he said. "I think we should have equal time to defend ourselves against the half truths told by Marshall, which were very detrimental to our city."

Englehardt's telegram concluded: "We feel Marshall's statements only added fuel to flames already burning here. In interest of fair reporting, we again request time to prove Sunday's presentation is another example of NAACP exploitation.

Engelhardt Calls For 'Favorite Son'

Post-Herald Brom, Ala.

Yielding To Illinois Held 'Inconceivable'

Tues. 8-7-56

MONTGOMERY, Aug. 8 (AP) — Adlai Stevenson's firmer stand on civil rights brought a fresh demand from a citizens' council leader today for a favorite son presidential candidate from Alabama.

P.1

Stevenson said last night the Democratic National Convention should write into the party platform an endorsement of the Supreme Court decision outlawing school segregation.

State Sen. Sam Englehardt of nearby Macon County sent a telegram to Sen. John Sparkman, chairman of the Alabama delegation, saying the favorite son idea suggested by citizens' council members earlier has become "most urgent."

"It is absoultely inconceivable how Alabama can yield to Illionois after Adlai's pronouncement yesterday . . ." the telegram said.

Sparkman has said he wants the Alabama delegation, first on the rollcall of states, to yield to Illinois so Stevenson can be the first presidential candidate put up for nomination at the convention next week.

Laurie Battle, the vice chairman, said in Birmingham yesterday it was his "understanding" that a majority of the Alabama delegates are for that.

Englehardt also expressed resentment over Stevenson inviting Alabama delegates to a party honoring Mrs. Franklin D. Roosevelt Sunday night.

Alabama's Gov. Folsom Unruffled By Storm of Racial Controversy

Herald Tribune

New York Sun, 3-18-56

He Plans to Tell the People There's No Real Crisis

By Robert S. Bird

MONTGOMERY, Ala., Mar. 17 —The most relaxed man in the whole state of Alabama today is the man around whom the storm of race conflict beats most furiously. Gov. James E. Folsom, who is remembered in the North as "Kissin' Jim" and is known to all hereabouts as "Big Jim," remains totally unruffled by the winds that shake the colonnaded Capitol of Alabama.

While the outside world looks in alarm on recent events in Alabama and his own citizens cry for action from him, "Big Jim" sits enigmatically on Olympus. Or more exactly, sits most of the time in his office in the Capitol, and much of the remaining time on the grassy bank of his favorite fishing stream.

Imperturbable

He was just as imperturbable the other night sitting in the Executive Mansion, discussing the Alabama situation with this correspondent over champagne and t-bone steaks. In fact, he was so relaxed that when the time came to sit down to dinner he unnotched his belt several inches and attacked his meat in shirtsleeves from the lordly Chief Executive's chair at the head of the state dining table.

Mrs. Folsom, an attractive and thoroughly charming woman, had chided the Governor for insisting that our small dinner party of four (including the Governor's executive secretary) be served in the state dining room. The table was big enough to seat a regiment of hussars and the chandelier, had it been fully lighted, could have illuminated Times Square.

She suggested that the family dining room would be cosier. But the Governor over-ruled her with an indulgent wave of hand as if to suggest that the presence of this interviewer rendered the occasion at least a semi-state affair, even if not full dress. We dined informally in the midst of elegance.

Slow-Talking

Gov. Folsom's height is well known—six feet, eight inches. But that might as well read eight feet, six inches, because when a person of ordinary height stands beside "Big Jim," a couple of extra feet in his height wouldn't seem to make much difference. He is a startlingly big man.

Give such a man the personality of an overgrown, slow-talking, hard-to-get-mad country boy with lots of hidden savvy, and the first lineaments of his portrait appear. Enhance that with a political genius capable of engaging the fiercest loyalties and deepest enmities; of shrugging off abject defeats, personal contumely, back-firing razzle-dazzle political stunts, and rancor toward unrelenting enemies, and some highlights begin to emerge.

Touch up the picture with a hint of a brooding, introspective look in the gray eyes, and a habit of lapsing into silences that he never seems to notice —and which he finally breaks by picking up the thread of conversation where he left off. Then dress this loungy giant in well-tailored clothes, invest him with legendary personal misdeeds both bizarre and horrendous, make his political maneuvers often seems suicidal and wholly inexplicable, give him a cat's ability to land on his feet—and you have a recognizable sketch of "Big Jim" Folsom, the so-called enigma of Alabama.

At this moment, he would appear to be the most unpopular person in the State of Alabama. It all happened since integration became an issue, and his unpopularity seems to extend even to those ordinarily loyal constituents in the rural areas who voted him into office in the fall of 1954.

Herald Tribune

With the people of the state demanding piteously that he do something to help stem the Associated Press

Gov. James E. Folsom

"black tide" which threatens to engulf them, he is accused by some extremists of inaction so flagrant as to warrant impeachment. He speaks with disrespect of the White Citizens Council movement, which is organizing throughout the state to fight integration, and a result is that some hitherto Folsom supporters are plotting his downfall. He gives a mild rebuke to Negro agitators and the cry goes up that he is really a "nigger lover" —the vilest label that can be pinned on a man here.

The desperate legislators, in seeking to appease the folks back home, put through nullification and interposition legislation, along with other measures so wild as to cause even them to smile a little nervously, and the Governor says "hogwash," then goes fishing.

After six weeks of traveling around Alabama, encountering passion, fear, hatred and frustration in abundance, it was quite an experience to sit down and talk about it for four hours with the most relaxed man in Alabama.

Either he's all wrong and Alabama is in a mighty bad fix, or he's a lot right and Alabama is safe; safe for itself and safe for the Union, with certain painless modifications of viewpoints still to be attained, perhaps.

At any rate, the Governor's alleged inaction is now ended. This week he intends to go out among "the people" and tell them that there is no real crisis at all here in Alabama.

In Courthouse Towns

He's going to tell them that there's nothing to worry about, to watch carefully against white folks trying to stir up trouble, to calm down and sit tight and let him handle matters in his own way.

He'll give his personal report to the people in his own way in the courthouse towns of all the sixty-seven counties, he says, and he won't even talk about his own little campaign to win office as a Democratic national committeeman. He's in that race against a couple of formidable candidates, including the author of Alabama's nullification law.

In short, the Governor is about to go to his people with aid and comfort in their frustration. He is one of them and they know it. And if their aroused passions are as elemental as the good earth itself, so is his unworriedness. At least, so he suggests. Wise in all the tricks of Southern stump - politicking, "Big Jim" may yet quiet down this wave of race hatred. If he does, it will be another Folsom miracle.

The experts laugh at the idea, they say he's too late; this time he has fallen flat on his face for good. He shrugs with unconcern. He may not win the committee post because, as he says, the wave of race hatred will not have passed until nearer the fall election. And this committeeman showdown is to be in May. But he will draw fire away from other Folsom candidates, and away from his own legislative program. Later, he is convinced, all misunderstanding will pass. "I've been through it all before," he says with weary recollection.

"Let them spleen their vent, or vent their spleen, or however you say it," he adds. "All I want is for the people to speak."

The Governor has just launched what he considers to be an ingenious bit of strategy. He has called for a constitutional convention to "legalize" the "hogwash" of nullification and interposition. As it happens, the Governor has long wanted a constitutional convention for altogether other reasons, largely to further his own state legislative program, which includes reapportionment in certain counties which are generally anti-Folsom. His Legislature in the past had no intention of giving him this constitutional convention because it feels that might open the door to all kinds of Folsom law-making mischief.

But now they are feeling the sting of a real needle, because the Governor has got a very simple stump-talk rationalization for the convention. Nobody understands interposition anyway, the rural folk least of all. They are backing it on the theory that any medicine is better than none. But here comes "Big Jim" saying that it is humbug medicine and the real cure is a constitutional convention "to make everything legal." He pretends to be surprised that the legislators are nettled.

"In a convention they can even see-seed from the Union," he explains. "They can authorize me to call out the National Guard against the Federal troops. Like I say, there's been so much hell-raising I thought they would want to do it."

"Why," he says with a gleam in his eye, "they could require the Governor to take an oath promising not to support the Constitution of the United States. You know that all the state, county and local officials of Alabama are bound by oath to support the Federal government? Only a constitutional convention can release them from that oath. Let the people speak in convention assembled!"

Would the Governor accept release of his oath to the Federal government in such a convention?

Sun. 3-18-56

"Sam Houston didn't," he grins, "but all the other Confederate Governors did."

"But would you?"

P. 27

"Sam Houston didn't."

This may be "hogwash," but the truth is the Alabama race situation seemed a lot less inflammatory to this correspondent after his session with "Big Jim" Folsom. And this much is certain, Gov. Folsom is, whether by design or not, a moderating influence on the race crisis in Alabama.

Folsom Blasts Racial Critics

Ala. Journal

Fri. 3-30-56

TROY, Ala. (AP)—Striking out at critics of his segregation stand, Gov. James E. Folsom charged last night that "nullicrats and mobocrats" are seeking to break up the Democratic Party in Alabama.

Montgomery Ala.

The governor is scheduled to continue his "Report to the people" today in South Alabama with addresses in Elba at 2 p.m. and at Andalusia at 7 p.m.

Warning that nullification means lawlessness, Folsom told some 450 persons here last night that the "faces you see today in the nullicrat party are the same ones you saw in the Dixiecrat Party in 1948."

P. 7

FOLSOM IS CANDIDATE

Folsom is a candidate for national Democratic committeeman from Alabama in the May 1 Democratic primary. One of his opponents is State Rep. Charles McKay of Talladega, sponsor of the nullification resolution approved by the Alabama Legislature. The resolution declares that Alabama is not bound by the anti-segregation rulings of the U.S. Supreme Court.

In a sidewalk address at Luverne earlier yesterday before a crowd estimated at 175, Folsom said "Any organization which advocates utter chaos does not have a place in my program."

And he emphasized: "I have never entertained a Negro socially in my life, but I reserve the right to do so."

The governor has been criticized for a statement last fall by Rep. Adam Clayton Powell, New York's Negro congressman, who said he had a drink with Folsom while in Montgomery and was allowed use of the governor's official automobile.

Answers Citizens Council—

Folsom says he'll not be bound to private groups

MONTGOMERY, Ala., March 29—(AP)—Answering a Citizens Council leaders charge that he had declined to answer a questionnaire stating his views on the racial issue, Gov. James E. Folsom said he "won't swear allegiance" to any private group.

"I won't swear allegiance to the leadership of any private group," he said in a prepared statement yesterday.

"I didn't swear allegiance to the Dixiecrats in 1948. I didn't swear allegiance when they walked out of the Democratic Convention in 1948 and later knocked the president off the Democratic ballot in Alabama. I was a loyal Democrat."

The governor referred to the States Rights uprising of 1948 when Alabama along with three other Southern states withheld their electoral college vote from President Truman, the Democratic nominee, in protest at the party's civil rights stand.

Half Alabama's delegation to the 1948 Democratic National Convention walked out of the convention when the civil rights plank in the party platform was adopted.

LUTHER INGALLS, chairman of the Montgomery White Citizens Council, told a group of pro-segregation members of the group Tuesday night that Folsom's name was among those "conspicuously absent" in the roll call of candidates getting on the record as favoring continued separation of the races.

Citizens Councils have sent out questionnaires to all candidates in statewide races asking their views on the segregation issue.

Gov. Folsom repeated his declaration that "I am not going to swear allegiance to any private group today because they are the same faces, rank, serial number and issues that led the Dixiecrats in 1948.

"I have got friends on both sides of this segregation issue," the governor's statement said, "but I am not going to swear allegiance to the leadership of any group that's trying to tear up the Democratic Party in Alabama because it was too hard to rebuild after 1948.

"Before 10,000 people in Montgomery and on every stump in the state I said I was for segregation. My views are well known on the subject. I was and I am for segregation."

"I said it while I was a candidate so that the people would know my stand before they voted and that's all I have to say on the subject."

Folsom, at Elba appearance, lashes at Citizens Councils

ELBA, Ala., March 31—(AP)—Gov. James E. Folsom brought his "report to the people" to his native Elba Friday in his campaign as a candidate for Democratic national committeeman.

The governor attacked White Citizens Council leaders whoon have criticized him for refusal to sign the Legislature's interposition resolution and other measures aimed at preserving racial segregation.

HE FACETIOUSLY "pleaded guilty" to bringing Negro salves into the South.

"My administration has been accused by the people who are trying to tear up the Democratic Party of everything except bringing slaves to this country 200 years ago. I'm pleading guilty to that here today," he declared

Folsom added that despite the criticism, "by my personal efforts we have kept our schools segregated and by my personal efforts we're going to keep them segregated for the rest of my administration."

this shows how important it is to have a godly man at the head of a nation.

And now note the following: "And Jehosaphat bowed his head with his face to the ground: and all Judah and the inhabitants of Jerusalem fell before the Lord, worshipping the Lord. And the Levites, of the children of the Kohathites, and of the children of the Korhites, stood up to praise the Lord God of Israel with a loud voice on high" (Verses 18 and 19).

YOU SEE THEN that the king and his people were very humble and prayerful and that they were keeping their eyes upon God. They rose early in the morning and moved on toward the enemy; and, as they moved, Jehosaphat said to them, "Hear me, O Judah . . . Believe in the Lord your God, so shall ye be established; believe his prophets, so shall ye prosper."

Next, after consulting with the people, he appointed singers unto the Lord, who were to praise the beauty of holiness as they went out before the army.

Then, as they began to sing, their enemies were stricken with death. The Lord fought the battle. As a people, we have enemies today; and our greatest peril comes from the forces of evil in our own land. If we win, we must keep our eyes upon the Lord.

Talmadge Rips Supreme Court At Rights Rally

BUENA VISTA, Ga., March 29 Former Gov. Talmadge, lashing out at the Supreme Court ruling on segregation, asserted here today that "no authority can force people to do something against their will."

Speaking to about 500 persons attending the Marion County States Rights Rally he was introduced as "our next senator" by Clark W. Duncan, temporary council chairman.

"Regardless of what the Supreme Court does and says, Georgia people will continue to run Georgia," he declared, urging every section of the state to organize and present a united front on segregation and states rights.

Blistering attacks on the Supreme Court decision were also made by Leonard Wilson, who was expelled from the University of Alabama for statements he made while Negro Autherine Lucy was a student there; and Peter Zack Geer, Colquitt attorney and former Miller County representative.

HOMETOWN PLEA

Governor Again Blasts GOP In Elba Address

BY STUART X. STEVENSON
Advertiser Alabama Editor

ANDALUSIA, Ala., March 30—Gov. Folsom wound up a busy schedule here tonight winning the first game of a double-header on his homegrounds in Elba this afternoon with a smash over the centerfield fence.

About 350 people including a dozen women trudged up two flights of concrete stairs to the courtroom to get a first-hand report from the native son of Coffee on his stewardship.

The crowd from every beat in the county sat in silence as "their boy" lambasted the Republicans, told how he usd airplanes to get big business and "black-topped them roads" but they broke out in a wild whoopee when he roared "so help me God that crowd's not going to tear up the Democratic Party."

He was referring to the group that walked out during the last national convention.

Big Jim made a stirring plea to the home folks in reminding them "I need your support to protect your party, our party of the people."

This direct come-on for their vote in the forthcoming primary was obvious enough and effective. He is one of the three in the race for post of National Democratic Committeeman.

In reporting to the people on his stewardship, Gov. Folsom related that he had labored for nearly eight years in "getting to the top" with my program. Then he outlined what he described as "the facts of life."

First came the attack on the newspapers for "lying" about the mansion expense, use of planes and spending. From this he swung his big bludgeon at the Republican administration "which has given us $200 heifers running around the pastures with $5 calves."

On the subject of roads Gov. Folsom said 15 projects in Coffee County costing some $600,000 were under way "and when I come back next year I hope the entire 100 miles promised for this county will be finished," he added with a quick reflex.

Big Jim kept the opposition in the minds of the listeners in Elba with a repeated barb at the Republicans. He reiterated the price of the heifer and the calf.

Actually nothing new was developed by the governor in his free-wheeling talk to the home crowd. He didn't seem to stir the business, political and professional folk present and the large array from the branchheads didn't exactly grasp at reference to "destruction of our freedoms and liberties by the wild bills" passed recently by the legislature.

On segregation he emphasized that "you'll beat the Nullification Act five to one if they let you vote on it."

PEACEFUL TALKS

Then he told how he had handled the segregation issue peacefully and "without going wild" about it. Gov. Folsom told the home folks they knew he hadn't been "around with Negroes socially, but I've talked with all of them and done it peacefully."

Just bare mention was made of other phases of his program including the state docks, ABC Board, education and old-age pensions. He promised to continue his fight to get $50 per month for every person 65 years of age and over and he urged all to "get your names in the pot."

The Elba speech lasted 22 minutes and it required nearly twice that long for the governor to finish shaking hands with his enthusiastic admirers. Finally he broke away to go into a huddle with the county commission.

spots on you," he said.

Folsom let the interposition resolution go into effect without his signature after the Legislature gave it almost unanimous approval earlier this year.

Folsom Is Chided For Not Signing Interposition Edict

PRATTVILLE, March 21 (U.P.)—A White Citizens Council leader chided Gov. James E. Folsom here last night for refusing to sign an interposition resolution declaring null and void the U. S. Supreme Court segregation decrees.

Attorney Alston Keith, Selma, chairman of the Dallas County Citizens Council, told the Autauga Citizens Council "Alabamians never again will elect a person to the governor's chair who would fail to sign the interposition resolution."

Folsom Favors Troop Use To Quell Racial Disorder

Advertiser Montgomery, Ala.

By BOB INGRAM

Gov. James E. Folsom said yesterday he agreed with the action of Tennessee Gov. Frank Clement in ordering National Guard troops and tanks into the rioting city of Clinton after 12 Negroes enrolled in the previouly all-white high school there.

"That's all he could do," Folsom replied emphatically when asked to comment on the Clinton situation. Gov. Clement ordered a contingent of Guard troops into the city following an outbreak of mob violence which resulted when the Negroes were admitted into the school.

"Certainly would have done the same thing," Folsom continued. "In fact, I would have called out the Guard if that girl Autherine Lucy had returned to the University."

"In fact, that thing (the University incident) slipped up on us we would have called out the Guard the first time," Folsom added. "I didn't realize the Highway Patrolmen we had sent over there couldn't handle the situation alone."

"It's regrettable to have to do something like that but we are going to maintain law and order," Folsom added. "There will be no mob rule in Alabama as long as I am governor."

Meanwhile, the governor said he was not too concerned about a sudden revival of Klu Klux Klan activity in Alabama and the South...

"I haven't heard much lately of any klucking in Alabama," Folsom said. "They've got a perfect right to meet if they want to, but they've got to keep their masks off."

Turning to the national political scene, Folsom said he returned from the meeting of Southern Democratic Party leaders with Adlai Stevenson and Sen. Estes Kefauver in Knoxville last week "high spirited and confident" about the Democrats' chances.

"There's no question thaa we will have a Democratic Congress next year," Folsom predicted.

When asked if this meant the Republicans might remain in the White House, the governor replied:

"No, not if our shepherds shoot at the leader of the wolf pack."

"I'm glad to see Stevenson now calling it the Eisenhower foreign policy, the Eisenhower farm program instead of the Republican program," Folsom continued, warming to the subject. "He's ain't God."

"I never did think he was God. I told them a long time ago that he wasn't God," Folsom added. "They never did fail to gut me, Harry Truman or Franklin D. Roosevelt. That's what a President is for, to be gutted."

"I've been shot at a lot. I like it and I hope to get shot at some more," Folsom added.

The invitation was readily accepted, when a reporter asked for comment on Atty. Gen. John Patterson's action last week in gaining a court order withholding payment on two road-building contracts which he alleged were illegal.

"I read all about that, but didn't think much about it," Folsom declared. "If there is anything illegal going on over there in the Highway Department it is going to get straightened out."

"In a $200-million-a-year business there are going to be a lot of mistakes made, technical and otherwise," Folsom said. "When I find them I'm going to try to correct them."

Governor Will Seek County Road Markings

Concerned over the increasing number of traffic deaths on county roads, Gov. James E. Folsom said yesterday he intended to recommend that legislation be enacted requiring such roads be marked in the same manner as state roads.

Wed. 9-5-56

"In traveling county raods it is well to note that they are not properly marked," Folsom pointed out. "People tend to forget they are on county roads and drive as fast as on state roads, which are properly marked."

As a result, Folsom continued, "many of our worst accidents are on county roads."

Col. Bill Lyerly, director of the Department of Public Safety, added weight to this by noting that five of the nine traffic fatalities reported during the long Labor Day weekend occurred on county roads.

"But until these roads are properly marked," Folsom concluded, "I would like to urge all motorists to drive carefully on county raods."

The governor also called on motorists to take extra precautions since schools are opening in the immediate future, and to be particularly careful when driving in the vicinity of school buses.

"When those kids get off a school bus they are liable to go any direction, including straight up if they can," Folsom said.

COUNTY OFFICIALS MEET

Folsom Sees Demo Victory; Outlines Legislative Slate

MOBILE, Ala., Aug. 31 (AP) — Gov. James E. Folsom gave Alabama county officials an outline of his views and plans in politics and government today and threw in a guarded prediction of Democratic victory in the national election this fall.

The governor flew to Mobile from Knoxville, Tenn., where he attended a regional conference of Democratic leaders.

Folsom made these comments at the final business session of the annual convention of the Alabama Assn. of County Commissioners:

1. That as long as he is governor, there will be no desegragation of the public schools.

2. That he has no intention of calling a special session of the legislature at its general session beginning next May.

4. That no new taxes will be proposed.

5. That the remainder of his term will be devoted primarily to "administration" and not to introducing new ideas in state government.

6. That he plans to "retire from politics" at the end of his present term.

7. That he will give active support to the reapportionment amendment which will be submitted to Alabama voters at the November general election.

Referring to the Knoxville meeting, Folsom told the county officials "I bring good news if you are Democrats and bad news if you are Republicans."

He said the "Democratic leadership of all the Southern states" was in agreement in supportiing Stevenson and Kefauver, who were present at the conference.

Commenting on the segregation issue, Folsom remarked that "there are 500 school districts in Alabama and before segregation can go, a case must be won in each district."

"I have been working with Negro leaders for two years," he said, "to keep such cases out of the courts."

Folsom took a thrust at the "Freedom - of - Choice" school amendment which was approved in last Tuesday's special state election.

Says He's For Segregation—

Gov. Folsom Refuses Allegiance To Council

MONTGOMERY, March 28 (AP)—Insisting "I am for segregation," Gov. James E. Folsom said today he ignored a pro-white Citizens Council questionnaire because "I won't swear allegiance to any private group."

Folsom issued a statement in reply to criticism from a Citizens Council leader, Luther Ingalls of Montgomery.

Ingalls told a rally last night that the governor's name was "conspicuously absent" from the list of candidates for office speaking out in favor of segregation.

Folsom said he told listeners throughout the state during his campaign for governor in 1954 that he stood for racial separation.

"My views are well known on the subject," he declared. "I was and I am for segregation. I said it while I was a candidate so that the people would know my stand before they voted, and that's all I have to say on the subject."

However, the governor declared, "I am not going to swear allegiance to the leadership of any group that's trying to tear up the Democratic Party in Alabama, because it was too hard to rebuild after 1948."

The governor said he didn't swear allegiance to the Dixiecrats in 1948. I didn't swear allegiance when they walked out of the Democratic convention in 1948 and later knocked the President off the ballot in Alabama. I was a loyal Democrat."

He referred to the States Rights revolt that year when Alabama's presidential electors, chosen on the Democratic ticket, cast the state's 11 electoral votes for the Thurmond-Wright ticket instead of for Harry Truman, the Democratic nominee.

Actually, the presidential candidate's name never appears on the ballot in Alabama—only the names of candidates for presidential elector.

Folsom said the Citizens Council leaders "are the same faces, rank, serial number and issues that led the Dixiecrats in 1948."

Citizens Council leaders have sent questionnaires to all candidates for office in the May 1 Democratic primary asking how they stand on the segregation question.

Folsom is running for Democratic National Committeeman. One of his opponents, State Rep. Charles McKay of Talladega, is a leader of the council in his community.

Two of the three candidates for president of the Alabama Public Service Commission, John E. Drinkard of Cullman and Billy Tucker of Birmingham, did not return the questionnaire, Ingalls said.

The third aspirant, incumbent Jack Owen, was present at the meeting and addressed the group. He pledged to continue his fight to maintain the separation of races on public transportation in Alabama.

John Crommelin, retired Navy admiral from Wetumpka, who is running for the U. S. Senate against Sen. Lister Hill, also spoke in favor of segregation. Ingalls read a letter from Hill reaffirming the senator's support of segregation.

However, Ingalls noted the senator had not answered his questionnaire, but returned it with a note written across the front "proclaiming in bold handwriting his support of segregation."

The two candidates for U. S. House of Representatives from the Second District, Rep. George Grant of Troy, the incumbent, and Wilbur Nolen of Montgomery, a member of the state House of Representatives, also expressed pro-segregation views.

Grant told of his support of the recent Southern Manifesto presented in the U. S. Congress, while Nolen later stated that it "is not the time to present a mere manifesto, but to present a united front."

One of 68 to do so—

Folsom disregards Council's questions

BY FRED TAYLOR, News staff writer

MONTGOMERY, Ala., April 14—Gov. James E. Folsom is one of the 68 candidates—representing a majority of public and party office aspirants—refusing to answer questionnaires sent them by the White Citizens Councils of Alabama.

A check of councils' files in state headquarters offices here disclosed that 46 candidates sent in answers in one form or another to the nine questions submitted to them by registered mail on racial matters and the acceptance of Negro votes.

Macon State Sen. Sam Engelhardt Jr., executive secretary of the state organization which sent out the questionnaires March 20, said "I think sufficient time has elapsed for replies to have come in from all candidates who intend to answer."

Sen. Engelhardt, who made the council's answer files available to this reporter, announced at the time the questionnaires were made public that answers would be made public.

Answers varied

SOME OF THE questionnaires were answered "yes" or "no," as requested by the councils, while other answers were in elaborated form, written on the face of the questionnaires or set out in separate letter.

A number of candidates balked at the council quiz shortly after the questions were made public, declaring they considered them bullying and intimidating.

Appearing recently on WAPI-WABT's "Legislative Report" radio-TV discussion program, both Sens. Broughton Lamberth of Tallapoosa and E. L. Roberts of Etowah, candidates for alternate delegate-at-large to the Democratic National Convention, said they would not answer the council's questionnaire.

Lamberth, who is Gov. Folsom's Senate floor leader, said "Everybody's for segregation. No, I don't intend to answer the questionnaires."

OF CANDIDATES replying to the questionnaires, some experienced difficulty in answering questions Nos. 4 and 5. And they took pains to elaborate in answers, rather than put down "yes" or "no."

No. 4 asked: "Do you here and now deny the Negro vote?"

And No. 5 asked: "Do you here and now say to the Negro that you do not want his vote?"

Candidates also were asked if they would give "whole-hearted support" to actions already taken by the Legislature toward maintaining segregation.

Another question sought to elicit an expression from candidates that they would fight "any attempt to bring integration to this state."

Still another query asked if the NAACP, "or any other organization dedicated to the breakdown of Alabama's policies on segregation," had made any direct or indirect contribution to the candidate's campaign.

And they were asked, among other things, if they believed in the Citizens Councils of Alabama movement, if they were members of or willing to join any council unit.

Folsom's stand

GOV. FOLSOM, candidate for Democratic national committeeman, made it clear he would not answer the questionnaire.

He had declared his adoption of what he termed a "no slate, no hate, uninstructed and undecided platform."

In his "report to the people" speeches up and down the state, Folsom made no direct references to the Citizens Councils or to Talladega Rep. Charles McKay Jr., one of his opponents for national committeeman, who is chairman of the Sylacauga Citizens Council. But he blasted away at both without calling them by name.

Addressing a crowd at Troy, Gov. Folsom said "the Nullicrats and Mobocrats want to tear up the Democratic Party in Alabama."

He was shooting at McKay, the White Citizens Councils and at members of the Legislature who voted for McKay's interposition resolution which declared the U. S. Supreme Court integration decision "null, void and of no effect."

Folsom, who has fought the Dixicrats since the 1948 revolt against Truman and Barkley, added:

"Nullification means lawlessness, riots and disorder. Nullification means secession. The faces you see today in the 'Nullicrat Party' are the same faces you saw in the Dixiecrat Party in 1948. But we will not let them destroy the Democratic Party in Alabama again."

McKay, McCord answer

ENGELHARDT'S files disclosed that McKay and Roy D. McCord, Gadsden attorney, who are Gov. Folsom's opponents in the race for Democratic national committeeman, submitted answers to the questionnaire.

McKay's answers were straightaway "yes" and "no," in compliance with councils' request. He pointed out that he is chairman of a council.

McCord answered all questions "yes" and "no" as requested by the councils, with exceptions of Nos. 4 and 5.

As to whether he would deny the Negro vote, McCord wrote:

"I don't understand this question," adding "I don't think Negroes ever should have been allowed to vote."

Regarding No. 5 as to whether he wanted the Negro vote, McCord had this reply:

"Any man who is running for office will accept any legal vote he can get. I cannot be honest and answer otherwise."

McCord added that he believed in "strict segregation." He said he is not a council member, writing "All I know of them is what I read in the paper. I will have to see a copy of their constitution before I can intelligently answer this question."

U. S. Senate race

BOTH SEN. LISTER HILL, up for renomination in the May 1 Democratic primary, and his opponent, retired Adm. John G. Crommelin, answered the questionnaire.

Sen. Hill's answer, which had been read earlier in a Citizens Council meeting at Montgomery's Municipal Auditorium and announced as acceptable by council leaders, was written in longhand on the questionnaire form:

"I shall continue to fight, as I have fought through the years, for the maintenance of segregation and the preservation of our Southern customs, traditions and way of life."

Crommelin gave "yes" and "no" answers, as requested by the councils to all nine questions.

But Crommelin wrote in the word "bloc" in quotations in Nos. 4 and 5, which made them read: "Do you here and now deny the Negro bloc vote?" and "Do you here and now say to the Negro that you do not want his bloc vote?"

He answered "yes" to both, with this word added.

Owen answers

JACK OWEN, up for renomination as president of the Alabama Public Service Commission, was the only one of three candidates in this race to answer the questionnaire. The other two are Cullman's John E. Drinkard and Birmingham's Billy Tucker, shown by Englehardt's files to have sent in no replies.

Owen answered the questions straight away, but elaborated his replies to questions Nos. 4 and 5 to say:

"I want every vote that is cast for me to be counted for me, with the understanding that if I am reelected, I will continue to do everything in my power to maintain segregation in Alabama."

As to joining the Citizens Council, Owen wrote Sen. Englehardt:

"I have been advised that a person in a judicial position is not eligible for membership in the Citizens Councils of Alabama. I, as president of the Alabama Public Service Commission, would be ineligible."

Sen. Englehardt explained that no questionnaires were sent to candidates in the Supreme Court, Court of Appeals and other judgeship races, since the councils did not consider it appropriate to request answers from judicial post aspirants.

Congressional answers

ONLY TWO OF this state's nine congressional seats are being contested in the May 1 Democratic primary, with the veteran Rep. Frank Boykin being opposed for renomination in the First District by Jim T. Hamrick, Prichard automobile man.

Another veteran congressman, Rep. George Grant of Troy is opposed for renomination by State Rep. Wilbur Nolen Jr., Montgomery real estate and insurance man. All four sent in answers.

Congr. Boykin gave "yes" and "no" replies, writing an emphatic "Hell, no," to No. 3 asking if the NAACP had contributed directly or indirectly to his campaign. And he elaborated his answer to Nos. 4 and 5 regarding acceptance of the Negro vote to state:

"If our good Negroes want to cast their votes for me, knowing of my stand against integration, that is their privilege."

Boykin wrote at the bottom of the questionnaire: "I belong to the Linden and Camden Citizens Councils and will join others in my district. The CIO in Mobile has endorsed my opponent."

Hamrick likewise answered the questions "yes" and "no," stating he was a member of Citizens Councils.

But Hamrick substituted "NAACP" for "Negro" in questions Nos. 4 and 5 to say that he would deny and would not accept this vote.

Grant and Nolen

CONGR. GRANT answered the questions straight away "yes" and "no," but also substituted "NAACP" in questions Nos. 4 and 5. He said he is a Citizens Council member.

State Rep. Nolen replied "yes" and "no" up and down the line without changing the wording of any question, adding that "I am a member of several councils in the Second Congressional District."

Although they have no opposition, Reps. George Andrews in the Third District, Kenneth Roberts in the Fourth and Armistead Selden Jr. in the Sixth also answered the questionnaire to emphasize their support of measures to maintain segregation.

They, along with all other Alabama congressmen and senators, signed the recent Southern Manifesto to resist integration attempts.

Delegate races

OF THE 35 candidates for 16 delegate-at-large places on Alabama's delegation to the Democratic National Convention, 16 sent in replies and 19 ignored the questionnaire.

Of the 67 candidates for 36 district delegate posts—four are to be elected from each of the nine congressional districts—22 replied and 45 let the questionnaire go unanswered.

It was significant that none of the delegate aspirants in the North Alabama Seventh and Eighth Districts, which have comparatively little Negro population, sent in answers. Six candidates are seeking the four delegate posts from the Seventh and 15 are running for a like number of seats from the Eighth.

And in the winding Fifth District, which stretches from Central Alabama all the way across Sand Mountain to include Marshall and DeKalb Counties, only one of six candidates answered the queries. The northern part of this district has comparatively little Negro population.

The one answer came from Guntersville's Gene Starnes, a member of Alabama's 1952 Democratic delegation at Chicago (he was for Dick Russell for the Democratic presidential nomination). Starnes answered by letter to point out that both of his grandfathers were Confederate soldiers, adding:

"No one can doubt my stand on segregation. I am, I have been and always will be for segragation. I favor abolishing our public schools, if it takes that to maintain segregation as we have in the past.

"The NAACP or any other radical organization will not tell me how to vote and who to vote for at the convention. I am not, and will not be obligated to any clique of candidate, should I be elected."

Other candidates for the four Fifth District places are C. G. Allen of East Gadsden; State Rep. F. L. (Hello) Ferrell of Mentone; J. C. Henderson of Alexander City; Probate Judge Wiley Hickman and former State Rep. Ed Miller, both of Gadsden.

(Editor's note: The News Monday will carry in further detail the names and answers of the other district and at-large delegate candidates, together with names of those who declined to answer the councils questionnaire.)

Folsom refuses allegiance to hate councils

Afro-American P.3 Sat. 4-14-56 Baltimore, Md.

MONTGOMERY, Ala. (ANP) —Gov. James E. Folsom, answering a Citizens Council leader's charge that he had declined to answer a questionnaire stating his views on the racial segregation issue, said last week that he "won't sware his allegiance" to any private group.

Luther Ingall, chaiman of the Montgomery council, told a group of pro-segregation members Tuesday that Folsom's name was among those "conspicuously absent" in the roll call of candidates on record as favoring continued racial separation in Alabama.

On the same subject, Folsom ddclared emphatically he would support the Democratic Party's nominee, whoever he might be, "with every ounce of strength I've got."

Gov. Folsom, returning to the segregation subject, also repeated his earlier statement that he would call another special session of the Legislature if no action was taken during the current session on his plan for a convention.

"I want to gently remind them that they've established a platform and they ought to carry it out," Folsom said. "I want them to let the people decide."

'VIEWS WELL KNOWN'

Gov. James E. Folsom charged yesterday in a press conference that members of the Alabama Legislature "individually and collectively" violated their oath to uphold the U.S. Constitution when they passed the Nullification Resolution.

The governor, back in his office after a three-day stumping tour of Northwest Alabama, resumed his insistence that the Legislature "let the people decide at the polls" whether they favor nullification.

"The only way we can nullify the Supreme Court decision is through a convention assembled by the people," Folsom said. "And that resolution they passed calling the decision null and void is actually null and void itself."

On another subject, Gov. Folsom said Sen. Estes Kefauver's upset victory over Adlai Stevenson in the Minnesota presidential primary Tuesday "means he's (Kefauver) strong in the midwest."

"I don't know what he's doing, but if I was him I'd keep on doing it," Folsom said regarding Kefauver's victory.

Asked if he thought the outcome of the Minnesota Primary had dimmed Stevenson's chances, Folsom said, "According to the papers he's not the front runner any more."

Council Chief's Attack Brings Folsom Rebuttal

Answering criticism aimed at him at a meeting of the Montgomery White Citizens' Council here Tuesday night, Gov. James E. Folsom declared yesterday he had ignored a questionnaire that organization sent him because "I won't swear allegiance to any private group."

Folsom's statement came in rebuttal to a remark made at the political rally Tuesday night by Luther Ingalls, a chairman of the local group.

Ingalls told the crowd of more than 2,000 present at the rally that the governor's name was "conspicuously absent" from the list of candidates for public office speaking out in favor of segregation.

Segregation 'Compromise' Attacked By State Lawmaker

Advertiser Montgomery, Ala. Sun. 2-28-56 P. 1

A member of the Alabama Legislature warned yesterday that if the white people of the state continue to "give in and be compromised" on the race issue "we will have but three choices to make—sell our homes and get out of Alabama, be humiliated or take up our shotguns."

Rep. W. L. (Doc) Martin of Greene issued that warning in speaking in support of a resolution he had introduced to the legislature's interim committee on education requesting President O. C. Carmichael to furnish to the committee the names and addresses of students who signed a petition favoring the readmission of Miss Autherine J. Lucy to the University.

Such a petition was circulated on the University campus last week and reportedly was signed by 500 students, faculty members and others.

REP. W. L. MARTIN

Later apologizing to the committee for having referred to the Negro student as "Miss Lucy" in his resolution, Martin added:

"If we expect to keep Negroes out of our white schools, it becomes the leadership of the Legislature to take this action. Let's find out who these students are who want to go to school with Negroes, and let's let them go."

It was at this point that Martin warned that continued compromise on the part of the white people would leave them with but the three choices—"sell out our homes and move out of the state, stay here and be humiliated, or we can take up our shotguns."

"I don't want to do any of these things, but I want to stay in an Alabama that is controlled by white people," Martin said. "It is time to let the people know that white supremacy is going to stand in Alabama."

Martin's resolution, introduced just as the committee had completed its detailed, two-week study of school financing, touched off a flurry of debate.

Sen. Albert Boutwell of Jefferson questioned the "benefit" of such a resolution, and Sen. Ben Reeves of Pike called it "out of order and improper."

"I feel as strongly as anyone on the racial question, but I think the resolution is out of order and improper at this time," Reeves continued. "I suggest you introduce it at the next special session, and I will be for it."

Moments later the committee voted 15-7 to adjourn until 9 a.m. today, thus avoiding a vote on the Martin resolution.

The seven members who voted against adjournment—and in effect were supporting the resolution—were Martin, Reps. Charles Ramey of Hale, Jimmy Dement of Limestone and James Branyon of Fayette and Sens. Roland Cooper of Wilcox, Walter C. Givhan of Dallas and E. O. Eddins of Marengo.

Martin said later th purpose of the resolution was only "to find out who signed the petition." Earlier, Sen. Cooper in support of the resolution had noted "we aren't doing this just to kick them out of school. We just want to see who signed the petition."

The segregation uprising overshadowed action taken by the committee regarding the school crisis.

The committee, after making several amendments to a report adopted last Friday, passed a resolution recommending that Gov. James E. Folsom call a special session of the Legislature to open Wednesday of this week.

The group meets with Gov. Folsom at 9 a.m. today to present their formal report.

Earlier yesterday afternoon, the committee voted to restore the appropriations to Jacksonville and Troy State Teachers Colleges which previously had been cut. Jacksonville was given back the $30,000 slashed last week, and $20,000 was returned to Troy.

To make up for this $50,000, the committee voted to cut that amount from the Teachers Equalization Training Fund.

Later, the committee heard arguments against a cut of the civilian rehabilitation fund of $211,000, but took no action on a request to restore this appropriation in full.

Martin Asks List Of UA Petitioners

Legislative Unit Kills Action

FROM PRESS REPORTS

MONTGOMERY, Feb. 27 —A "Black Belt" legislator today lost a move to have the University of Alabama present a legislative school study committee with a list of student petitioners asking that a Negro co-ed be re-admitted to the school.

Rep. W. L. (Doc) Martin, a veteran Greene county lawmaker, offered an interim committee studying school money needs, a resolution requesting University President O. C. Carmichael to furnish the group the names of students who favor readmittance of Autherine Lucy.

Martin's resolution set-off a mild flurry of debate, led by Sen. Albert Boutwell of Birmingham. Boutwell, Sen. Ben Reeves, Pike County, and Garet Van Antwerp, Mobile County, objected to the resolution on the grounds that the committee was called to study school finances and not segregation questions.

The committee voted to adjourn on a motion by Rep. Otto Simon, Mobile County, killing action on the matter. Speaking for his resolution, Martin said:

"If we expect to keep Negroes out of our white schools, it becomes the leadership of this Legislature to take this action. Let's find out who these students are who want to go to school with Negroes, and let's let them go.

"The time has now come when the white people in Alabama have but three choices remaining. We can sell our homes and move out of Alabama, we can stay here and be humiliated or we can take up our shotguns."

"I don't want to do any of those things, but I want to stay in an Alabama that is controlled by white people," Martin said. "It is time to let people know that white supremacy is going to stand in Alabama."

Sen. Boutwell questioned the need of such a resolution.

"I wonder how much benefit would come from this," he said. "I don't see how it would help us in solving the financial problems of education."

Sen. Reeves of Pike voiced similar sentiments.

"I feel as strongly as anyone does on the racial question, but I think the resolution is out of order and improper at this time," Reeves declared. "I suggest you introduce it at the next special session, and I will be for it."

Moments later the committee voted 15 to 7 to adjourn until tomorrow.

Martin said later the purpose of the resolution was only "to find out who signed the petition."

Earlier, Sen. Roland Cooper of Wilcox had noted: "We aren't doing this just to kick them out of school, we just want to see who signed the petition."

The committee concluded two weeks of study of the general education appropriation bill today. Post-Herald

The group will meet with Gov. James E. Folsom tomorrow morning and present the committee report for his consideration. P. 1.

Folsom withheld until tomorrow or later in the week the announcement of the date and content of the next special session that had been expected today.

The committee approved a motion to have the governor call the session for Wednesday.

Press Secretary Ralph Hammond said the governor might issue the special call tomorrow or he might wait until later in the week.

Alabama Solon Says State 'Compromised' by Unrest

Constitution Atlanta, Ga. Tues. 2-28-56 P. 13

MONTGOMERY, Ala., Feb. 27 (AP)—An Alabama legislator said today the time has come when white Alabamians must either move out of the state, "stay here and be humiliated, or take up our shotguns."

Rep. W. L. Martin of Greene County said white Alabama citizens have been "compromised" to such an extent by recent racial unrest that they apparently must choose one of those three courses of action.

WANTED LIST

He did not elaborate on the "compromise." His remarks came during an unsuccessful effort to get a list of the University of Alabama students who requested that a Negro coed be readmitted to the Tuscaloosa campus.

The interim legislative committee investigating school finances adjourned without taking a vote on Martin's proposed resolution asking university President O.C. Carmichael for the names of students who signed a petition urging that Autherine Lucy be readmitted to the university.

500 SIGNATURES

The petition circulated on the campus last week reportedly was signed by about 500 of the university's 7,000 students. Miss Lucy, the first Negro ever admitted to the university, was barred from the campus "for her own safety" following violent demonstrations three weeks ago.

Speaking for his resolution, Martin said:

"If we expect to keep Negroes out of our white schools, it becomes the leadership of this Legislature to take this action. Let's find out who these students are who want to go to school with Negroes, and let's let them go.

THREE CHOICES

"The time has now come when the white people in Alabama have but three choices remaining. We can sell our homes and move out of Alabama, we can stay here and be humiliated, or we can take up our shotguns."

Martin said the purpose of the resolution was only "to find out who signed the petition."

Meanwhile subpoenaes for ranking Tuscaloosa police officers and the editor of the Tuscaloosa News have been issued to appear as witnesses at the Lucy hearing at Birmingham Wednesday. The subpoenaes are in addition to those for most of the principals in the coed's fight for readmittance to the university.

The Alabama Senate yesterday passed by a unanimous vote a resolution petitioning the U.S. Congress to provide federal funds to move Negroes out of the South, giving shocking evidence of the mounting racial tensions in the state.

Meanwhile, the House of Representatives on a vote of 75-0 approved a resolution calling for an investigation to determine if the Alabama chapter of the National Assn for the Advancement of Colored People had been infiltrated by Communists.

These two resolutions highlighted the opening day of a special session which had been called for the primary purpose of solving the financial problems of education

MASS TRANSFER

Sen. E. O. Eddins of Marengo County introduced the resolution seeking federal funds for a mass transfer of Southern Negroes to other sections of the nation. After it cleared the Senate the resolution was stalled in the House and sent to the Rules Committee.

Noting that the South's race problem grows out of the overwhelming number of Negroes who are "untrained, unskilled and uneducated," the Eddins resolution said the problem "can be solved by the emigration of Negroes to areas where they are wanted and needed and can be assimilated."

Continuing, the resolution urged Congress to appropriate funds "to finance apportionment of Negroes among the several Northern and Western states."

Rep. Charles W. McKay of Talladega, in speaking in support of the resolution in the House, said in his opinion "it's not strong enough."

"I think it should include a clause making it a felony for any Negro so transferred to later return to the South when he discovers he was far better off here," McKay declared.

When asked if Congress would also pay off any debts the Negro people might have incurred in the South, McKay replied:

"I am sure most white Southerners would be happy to cancel all the Negro debts if they didn't have to put up with them (the Negroes) any more."

Rep T. K. Selman of Walker sponsored the resolution calling for an investigation of the NAACP. He said racial tension had mounted too fast in Alabama adding "I believe it to be the work of the Communists working through the NAACP."

He suggested that the committee might subpoena Autherine Lucy to testify next Monday at 9 a.m. the date previously set at which time she was to reenter the University. The resolution was sent to the Senate Rules Committee.

Other pro-segregation bills dropped in yesterday included:

1. A measure by Rep. W. L. (Doc) Martin of Greene providing that the state's $350,000 appropriation to Tuskegee Institute be cancelled in the event any Negro is admitted to a white school.

2. A second measure by Martin based on the same conditions would kill the $82,500 out-of-state scholarship fund set up primarily for Negroes.

3. A bill sponsored by McKay to tighten entrance requirements at all state-supported schools.

4. A resolution by Rep. Charles Ramey of Hale requesting that President O. C. Carmichael of the University of Alabama forward to the Legislature the names of all students who signed a petition 10 days ago urging the readmission of the Negro coed This resolution was sent to the House Rules Committee.

Adv. 3-2-56

The segregation developments far overshadowed other matters on yesterday's opening of the fifth special session.

During the day bills were introduced to carry out five of the six items listed in the call issued by Gov. Folsom. The bills included a measure to reduce the school appropriation; a proposal to place the Legislature on an annual salary of $1,900; a bill to create the biracial commission recommended by Folsom; a measure to increase the corporate income tax to 5 per cent, and a series of bills relating to the oil and gas industry in the state.

The final matter contained in the call was the creation of interim committee to make a study of state government.

Gov Folsom addressed the Legislature yesterday, outlining the six matters in the call, and urging that the Legislautre "help keep the rough edges on the racial problem smoothed off."

During the afternoon the two houses formed a committee of the the whole to begin a study of the school situation. The committee will return to its work at 10 a.m. today, with the legislative session to resume next Tuesday.

In speech tomorrow—

Mayfield to announce stand on segregation

BIRMINGHAM, March 27—(AP)— Justice James J. Mayfield of the Alabama Supreme Court announced today he would make "my position on segregation completely clear" in a speech tomorrow at Lanett, Ala.

Mayfield, a candidate for reelection to the post he won in November, 1954, included the segregation announcement in a statement on his campaign.

Segregation has been a primary political issue in Alabama since the Supreme Court of the United States outlawed segregated schools in May, 1954.

Mayfield's statement came a few hours after one from politically prominent Judge Roy Mayhall in which Mayhall disclaimed any connection with a "so-called 'Folsom slate' in the May primary.

Mayhall, chairman of the Alabama Democratic Executive Committee, is running against incumbent Justice Davis F. Stakely for the Supreme Court.

MAYFIELD, whose opponent is State Sen. James Coleman, scheduled the Lanett address last Feb. 15 before the Valley Lions Club. He had been invited earlier and the segregation topic was suggested by I. B. Barron, the club secretary, in a letter written Feb. 13.

Mayfield's statement did not refer to Coleman by name, but asserted that he (Mayfield) had been forced back into politics by "my opposition."

THE STATEMENT:

"Under the charter of the White Citizens Councils, judicial and law enforcement officers are prohibited from membership.

"I received a WCC questionnaire, as did other candidates, relative to my stand on segregation. Shortly thereafter, I received a letter from the WCC pointing out that judicial and law enforcement officers were not required to answer this questionnaire.

"Yet during all of the time since I have had an opponent for the place on the Supreme Court, he has used the White Citizens Councils of Central Alabama as a political forum and has addressed many of their meetings.

"When I was elected by the people of Alabama as a justice of the Alabama Supreme Court I made a public statement that I was withdrawing from all political activity. This I have scrupulously followed. The fact that my opposition has forced me back into the political arena is not a matter of my choosing.

"But since I have been forced back into political activity, I intend to make my position on segregation completely clear at Lanett before the Valley Lions Club at 12:30 (EST) tomorrow."

Mayhall's statement, issued from Jasper yesterday, followed an assertion by State Sen. Albert Boutwell that Mayhall is on a "handpicked slate" Gov. James E. Folsom is supporting in the May 1 Democratic primary.

"My candidacy is linked to no one except the people of Alabama," said the Walker judge, who is chairman of the State Democratic Executive Committee.

"As a candidate in the Democratic primary," Mayhall added, "I point out that I have always been a member and a leader of the loyal Democrats, and as such I know I have invoked the enmity of some who would destroy the Democratic Party in Alabama for either their own selfish motives or for the creation of a third party to give them political power.

"It appears to me that they will do well to declare their own slate, rather than to try to place my candidacy on the slate of any other candidate."

FOLSOM IS a candidate for Democratic national committeeman from Alabama. He is opposed by Rep. Charles McKay of Talladega County and Atty. Roy D. McCord of Gadsden.

The governor currently is making a series of speeches around the state, reporting on the record of his administration. He also has discussed his stand on segregation, which has been criticized by some pro-segregationists.

Folsom has denied that his talks are political, calling them a "report to the people."

Boutwell, from Jefferson County, charged that Folsom is quietly passing on to his followers the names of those candidates he wants elected.

Boutwell said Folsom is boosting Mayhall over Stakely; and also endorsing Supreme Court Justice James J. Mayfield and Court of Appeals Judge Rowan Bone for reelection.

Montgomery Council recruiting support

MONTGOMERY, March 27—(AP)—The pro-white Montgomery County Citizens Council has undertaken an extensive postcard and letter-writing campaign aimed at recruiting support in the Northern and Eastern states for segregation.

LUTHER INGALLS, the Council's legal adviser, said each of the "at least 13,000" members has been asked to send five or more pieces of mail to friends, relatives and others "telling people about segregation and why we think it's necessary to maintain it in the South."

Council officers, in mimeographed letters to each member, have suggested also that they write President Eisenhower, Chief Justice Earl Warren, members of Congress and "Northern newspaper editors."

Each member likewise is requested to get friends here to join the campaign, adding to the volume of mail.

Ingalls said some of the letters and postcards also will go to "some people in the South." He mentioned President O. C. Carmichael and members of the board of trustees of the University of Alabama.

A NEGRO CO-ED, Autherine Lucy, was admitted to the University on court order last month but was barred from the campus after mob violence Feb. 6. When Federal Judge Hobart Grooms in Birmingham ordered her readmitted, the trustees expelled Miss Lucy for unproved charges she had made against University authorities in connection with the rioting.

The board also expelled a pro-segregation student, Leonard Wilson of Selma, for his activity during the campus demonstrations and for remarks against school officials.

Negroes, whites to join national prayer

NEW YORK, March 27—(AP)—Negroes and whites in many communities across the country are expected to join tomorrow in "national deliverance day of prayer," outgrowth of the Montgomery, Ala., bus boycott, Rep. Adam Clayton Powell (D., N. Y.) said today.

Powell, himself a Negro minister, is chairman of the committee beehind the movement. He listed these as among the bigger cities where observances will be held:

New York, Chicago, Los Angeles, Washington, Columbus, Cleveland, Boston, Philadelphia, Pittsburgh, Atlanta, Galveston Honolulu.

"We will pray," he said, "for the deliverance of all who suffer from persecution and we will pray for the salvation of all who are afflicted with racial prejudice."

Powell said it is impossible to estimate how many persons will take part because "this is a movement, not an organization." He said the emphasis will vary from city to city.

Representatives of the Montgomery Negro community which has shunned the city bus lines in protest against segregation, will appear at meetings in most big cities, Powell said.

In New York he will be E. D. Nixon, treasurer of the Montgomery Improvement Assn.

Mayfield says he won't honor court decision

LANETT, Ala., March 28 —(AP)— An Alabama Supreme Court associate justice today pledged to uphold segregation and accused the U. S. Supreme Court of "twisting the federal constitution so as to arrive at its infamous integration decision."

Justice James J. Mayfield, a candidate for reelection, said in a speech prepared for delivery to a civic club here that he "will not stand by and see the United States Supreme Court abolish our Southern way of life."

The U. S. high court had ordered integration in the nation's schools. Mayfield declared he has taken an oath to uphold the state constitution, which forbids mixed schools.

"I HAVE SWORN to uphold the Constitution of the sovereign state of Alabama, and when I can no longer carry forth my oath of office to maintain segregation in Alabama, I shall resign," he told the Valley Lions Club here.

Mayfield said he had promised to withdraw from politics when he took office, but declared that he was "forced back into the political arena by political opposition."

He is opposed in the May 1 primary by Sen. James Coleman. Although he mentioned no names, Mayfield in a statement yesterday accused Coleman of using the White Citizens Councils of Central Alabama "as a political forum."

THE ALABAMA justice said he has met personally most of the federal judges in the South, "and with two exceptions it is my belief . . . that when the time comes they will stand up like men and be counted, and will deny the validity of the integration decision . . ."

He did not amplify his statement, and he did not name the federal judges to whom he referred.

"As one Southern justice of a Southern supreme court, I do not feel myself bound by, nor will I be bound by, a decision that I know is morally and intellectually dishonest and based on no legal precedent or legal authority," Mayfield declared.

COURT RULING LASHED

Mayfield Vows To Keep Segregation In Alabama

LANETT, Ala., March 28 (AP)— Alabama Supreme Court Justice James J. Mayfield today lashed the U.S. Supreme Court's decision ordering integrated schools, and pledged to uphold segregation in his state.

Mayfield opened his campaign for relection in a speech before a civic club here. He reminded his listeners that he had taken an oath to uphold the state constitution, which forbids mixed schools.

"When I can no longer carry forth my oath of office to maintain segregation in Alabama, I shall resign," he declared.

Mayfield is opposed in the May 1 primary by Sen. James Coleman.

Referring to the U.S. Supreme Court's decision ordering integrated schools, Mayfield said he does "not feel myself bound by, nor will I be bound by, a decision that I know is morally and intellectually dishonest and based on no legal precedent or legal authority."

He reminded that Alabama has adopted a resolution which seeks to nullify the U.S. court's ruling, "and when we are joined by other Southern states we will be able to assert sufficient power within the federal government to effect some form of relief."

He added that "courts, state or federal, cannot coerce a whole people. You cannot rule a whole people by judicial decree. That is a province of the legislative branch of the government, which the Supreme Court of the United States attempted to usurp . . ."

LANETT, March 28 (AP)—Alabama Supreme Court Justice James J. Mayfield today lashed the U. S. Supreme Court's decision ordering integrated schools, and pledged to uphold segregation in Alabama.

Mayfield opened his campaign for re-election in a speech before a civic club here. He reminded his listeners that he had taken an oath to uphold the state Constitution, which forbids mixed schools.

"There are many people in the Northern states who have traveled and lived in the South since the war. They are conversant with our problems and are coming to our aid and assistance in ever-growing numbers. We in the South will not have to fight our battle alone," Mayfield declared.

RACIAL RULING HIT BY ALABAMA JURIST

Commercial Appeal

Justice Won't Be Bound By Law, He Says

Thurs. 3-29-56

LANETT, Ala., March 28. — (UP) — An Alabama Supreme Court justice said Wednesday he will not be bound by the "morally and intellectually dishonest" anti-segregation decrees of the United States Supreme Court.

Judge James J. Mayfield, candidate for re-election to the state's highest court in the May 1 Democratic primary, said he spoke for himself but felt the "majority" of the state's justices agreed with him.

Judge Mayfield added he would resign before he would abandon his oath to the Alabama Constitution which requires racial segregation. He said he believed most of the other justices would, too.

The main speaker at the local Lions Club, Judge Mayfield said, "Courts, state or Federal, cannot coerce a whole people. You cannot rule a whole people by judicial decree. That is a province of the legislative branch of the Government."

Judge Mayfield said he doesn't believe Southern courts will punish defendants charged with refusing to abide by the high court's decisions. "When the time comes," he said, "they will stand up like men and be counted; and will deny the validity of the integration decision and state as Southern men that they are not bound thereby."

The judge said, "The result of the threat of nullification has invariably resulted in compromise that preserved the union."

He predicted if other states join Alabama in its interposition resolution declaring null and void the anti-segregation decrees, "we will be able to assert sufficient power within the Federal Government to effect some form of relief."

Extremists Dominate South's Racial Fight

Star, Wed., 3-7-56
Washington, D.C. P.9-A

By Star Staff Correspondent

BIRMINGHAM, Ala., Mar. 7.—The extremists are in command on both sides of the South's racial problem—the citizens councils, pledged to defend segregation to the bitter end, on the one side, and the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, calling for immediate and full integration, on the other.

There is no difficulty getting expressions of opinion from either of these groups. They will even spell their names for you, to make sure you got them right. But to get a quote from those who believe that some middle ground must be found for resolving the race issue now is impossible.

I interviewed three persons who were said to represent the socalled "moderate" approach to the race problem. All refused to talk unless their names were withheld.

The first was a 32-year-old Negro businessman. He said:

"The difficulty here is no more than what has been going on all along. It has just been brought out in public. The Negro still wants an end of segregation. There are no moderates among the Negroes on that point. There is a difference on how and when you get there.

"I was taught by my father that segregation was evil and must be done away with.

"There has been an increase of feeling and tension between races, but that is only natural in view of what has happened.

"We had legal sanctions against integration, the separate but equal theory. The Supreme Court has removed those sanctions and it has given the Negro a chance to fight. He feels it has given him a real good case.

"All of the violence and threats of violence are coming from whites who would rather die than see segregation removed. The Negro is not on the war path. We are not going to push people off the sidewalks. His position is that he will defend himself if attacked.

"Price You Have to Pay"

"It is impossible to bring about an end of segregation without trouble so long as you have political leaders who advocate trouble as the price you have to pay.

"They tell the Negro if he gives up the fight against segregation he will have peace. Sure, it would be the most peaceful and harmonious relationship you ever saw. All of the world tensions would be worked out too, if we capitulated to Russia.

"But we want peace without segregation and if it means a decade or so of tensions we will buy it at that price.

"I am for an agreeable plan to work this thing out. I'm for that. If it took 5 or 10 years of fruitful negotiations, I would be willing to go along with that. I believe the NAACP would too. You know these court things cost a lot of money.

"If we could only find some one to sit down with and talk to and get something started. But it is mighty discouraging when no one shows up and over at Montgomery you have the Legislature with a hopper full of crazy bills. It just makes you think there is no point in arbitration.

Need of A Plan

"Any show of the political leaders to put some plan into operation would be acceptable to the Negroes. But nothing has been started here. If someone suggests some plan of gradual integration and the Federal judge accepts it, sure we will go along."

A leading member of the clergy:

"The thing that disturbs me are these two extreme positions. The White Citizens Councils, growing up all over Alabama, is one extreme—it seems too much like the Klan.

"The other extreme, the NAACP, is presently pushing too hard for the good of its own cause. A little breathing spell might do a lot of good.

"Those representing Miss Autherine Lucy made a terrible mistake when they accused university officials, particularly Dr. Carmichael (Dr. Oliver C. Carmichael, president of the University of Alabama), of conspiring in the mob action. I just don't understand it, because they admitted in court they had no evidence.

"The day they drove the girl from the campus, Alabamians were deeply ashamed and a majority of them, at the time, were ready to see that she was protected and brought back. The Negro cause gained tremendous sympathy.

Feelings Reversed

"But the following day they made the accusations against the university officials, people who had risked their lives to protect Miss Lucy. Feelings were reversed. The cause, even as far as I am concerned, is lost. I don't want to see her get in. I don't think it essentially was her fault but the impression was given throughout the world that those officials fomented the riot. You can never undo that kind of harm.

"My hope would be that the next Negro applicant would be in the graduate school—law or medicine. You could accomplish such an entry with the least complications. You would have none of the social complications as you do when you put a Negro girl in the dormitory.

"I think Negro students should be admitted to the university. It is a public institution. There are certain fields of learning there that are not available at Negro institutions. There is no comparable training offered in Alabama in law, medicine, and to a lesser degree, in certain undergraduate courses.

"As human beings Negroes are entitled to the same treatment as whites, there is no question about that.

"No one down here has put forward a positive approach toward complying with the Supreme Court decision (ending segregation in public schools).

"Now" or "Never"

"Even if a workable 25-year plan would be proposed for the Deep South I believe the Supreme Court would accept it. But the NAACP says "now" and the citizens councils say "never." No one seems to see the handwriting on the wall.

"This thing must be done and it must be done with a minimum of friction, if it takes, 15, 25 or 30 years. In Alabama the plan must be set up on almost a county-by-county basis. For they have ratios of population ranging from 80 per cent Negro in the "black belt" to almost no Negroes in some Northern counties."

'Hire Our People, Or Forget Our Trade,' Says Ala. Minister

Call P. Fri. 6-22-56

Kansas City, Mo.

BIRMINGHAM, Ala.—(ANP)—"Stores that get our trade are going to have to employ our people in jobs besides maids and butlers," a Baptist minister and vice-president of the newly-formed Alabama Christian Movement for Human Rights told a meeting of 800 Negroes last week.

"The money they get from us," he continued, "they use to educate their children, to build their homes, and then they treat us like dogs."

The Rev. R. I. Alford made the statements and urged the applauding crowd to "spend their money where it is appreciated."

Meanwhile, Rev. F. L. Shuttleworth, president of the organization, appointed a transportation committee and denied an earlier report that serious trouble was expected in that area.

The Rev. Mr. Shuttleworth said, "there are going to be some questions put to them (the transportation officials) and I don't see what could bring on any trouble about that."

Leaders of 8 States Meet in Mississippi to Discuss Region's Key Problems

New York

ARDEN HOUSE PATTERN

Group Will Seek to Arrive at Some Common Group on Pressing Topics

Special to The New York Times.

BILOXI, Miss., April 19—A four-day conference at which representatives of a cross-section of southern life will study "the major problems that confront the region" opened here today.

Known as the Southern Assembly, the meeting is the first regional follow-up to the American Assembly, which was founded by General Eisenhower in 1950 when he headed Columbia University.

The American Assembly is a national, nonpartisan program of continuing conferences that brings together representatives of business, labor, farm groups, political parties, the Government and the professions for discussions looking to workable solutions of difficult domestic and foreign issues.

The national project, under the aegis of Columbia University, has held eight conferences of three to five days' duration at Arden House in Harriman, N. Y. President Eisenhower has described this project as one of "the most important steps" in his career.

Leaders in 8 States Meet

Forty-five men and women prominent in varied fields of endeavor in eight southern states opened the first session of the Southern Assembly under the aegis of Tulane University and with the co-sponsorship of Columbia. The meetings are being held in the Buena Vista Hotel overlooking the Gulf of Mexico.

The conferees, in a series of closed roundtable discussions and one open plenary session, will bring the give-and-take of friendly debate to the general subject of "State Governments in the South: Their Functions and Problems."

During their secluded deliberations the participants will discuss questions of one-party and two-party political systems in the South, the regulation of pressure groups in the legislative process, taxation, public education, industrial development, Federal grants-in-aid and the impact of the states rights theory of government.

Such problems as public school racial segregation and taxing and fiscal expenditures to beat the expanding urbanization and industrialization of the region will also be reviewed.

Basic Idea of Parley

The basic idea of the conference is to provide a mental workout for informed citizens in the hopes they can arrive at some common ground on many pressing problems.

A spokesman for the conference will summarize daily the general theme of the closed roundtable sessions. The findings and opinions of the group will be correlated and presented at an open plenary session on Sunday.

Dr. Henry W. Wriston, former president of Brown University and a director of the American Assembly, and Clifford C. Nelson, also representing the American Assembly, are attending the Southern meeting as observers.

The Southern Assembly participants include bankers, farmers, labor leaders, business men, educators, journalists and state agency heads from Alabama, Tennessee, Florida, Louisiana, Mississippi, Texas, Oklahoma and Arkansas.

Dr. Robert W. French, vice president of Tulane and an American Assembly discussion leader, is chairman of the Southern Assembly. Dr. L. Vaughn Howard, Professor of Political Science at Tulane, prepared the discussion program.

Scientists to shun undemocratic cities

ATLANTA—The council of the American Association for the Advancement of Science voted 72-13 Friday for a resolution banning future meetings in cities that tolerate discrimination based on race or creed.

Before it becomes fully effective, however, the resolution must be submitted to a mail ballot by all 325 council members of the AAAS the largest scientific organization in the world.

The action came after the organization's biology section, headed by Dr. Montague Cobb of Howard University, Washington, had voted not to participate in the Atlanta meeting "because the city permits segregated hotels, restaurants and public transportation."

Sat. 1-7-56

THE FORMAL request that the association "not meet again in a city where segregation is practiced" was made by the Council for the Advancement of Negroes in Science, NYC, according to Dael Wolfle, administrative secretary of the AAAS. The council also had received a half dozen resolutions urging it to take a stand against segregation and asking that the organization not meet in cities where racial segregation and discrimination is permitted.

The resolution adopted by the council stressed that AAAS objectives of "free scientific discussion and exchange of ideas cannot be fulfilled if free association of the members is hindered by unnatural barriers."

* * *

"IT IS PRETTY clear that it is referring to racial and religious discrimination," declared Dr. George W. Beadle of the California Institute of Technology, geneticist and retiring AAAS president.

Sat 1-7-56

Text of the resolution follows:

"The AAAS is a democratic association of all its members; no one is barred from election because of race or creed.

"All members are privileged to cooperate freely in the fulfilment of the association's high objectives which are the furtherance of science and human welfare. No member is limited in his service because of race or creed.

"In order that the association may attain its objectives, it is necessary and desirable that all members may freely meet for scientific discussions, the exchange of ideas and the diffusion of established knowledge.

"THIS THEY must be able to do in formal meetings and informal social gatherings. These objectives cannot be fulfilled if free association of the members is hindered by unnatural barriers.

"Therefore, be it resolved, that the annual meeting of the AAAS be held under conditions which make possible the satisfaction of those ideals and requirements."

The next seven annual meetings are scheduled in northern cities where racial segregation is not part of the law. They are New York, 1956; Indianapolis, 1957; Washington, 1958; Denver or Cleveland, 1959; Philadelphia, 1960; Chicago or St. Louis, 1961, and Boston, 1962.

ADD TO SCIENTISTS to SHUN

"The amount of interest provoked by the resolution shows we will get some progress. I hope it will be a favorable ballot."

So Dr. ontague Cobb commented Saturday on the resolution.

ATLANTA—The nation's anthropologists, chairmaned by Dr. Montague Cobb of Howard University, boycotted the parent body's recent meeting in Atlanta because of segregation in the hotels and auditoriums.

Furthermore the council voted to submit by mail to all members a resolution against holding future meetings in cities that practice segregation.

Attending the meeting of the American Association for the Advancement of Science were some 5000 persons. Only 87 of the Council's membership were present.

In deferring a vote on the segregation issue the Council termed the matter national, not regional. Copies of the resolution are to be mailed to the 235 members representing 265 scientific societies.

Results of this mail ballot will be announced in the near future.

The AAAS is the largest scientific organization in the world.

by one of its affiliated groups, the section on anthropology.

That section's chairman, Dr. W. Montague Cobb, of Howard university, Washington, D. C., explained his group would not take part in the Atlanta meeting because it was "at a place where there is segregation in hotels, restaurants and public transportation."

Defender

Cobb and other individuals, plus such organizations as the National Association of Science Writers, the Council for Advancement of Negroes in Science, and the American Association of Scientific Workers submitted similar petitons asking the AAAs not to meet in cities where racial segregation is practiced.

The council's resolutions committee presented its own proposal however, which is the one to be voted upon next week in the mail ballot.

The retiring president of AAAS, Dr. G. W. Beadle of the California Institute of Technology, said the resolution was "aimed solely to seek equal opportunity and use of facilities in future convention cities for all races."

The resolution would not be effective until 1963, because convention cities for intervening years already have been selected, with New York chosen as next year's site.

ATLANTA — (INS) — Councilmen of the American Association for the Advancement of Science put off last Friday a vote on a resolution that would keep the organization from holding its annual conventions in cities where racial segrgation is practiced.

Only 85 of the 325 council members were present at the closed meeting to consider the issue. They voted 72-to-13 to take a mail ballot of all council members rather than make the decision themselves.

Scientists Say Impossible To Predict Action In South On Segregation

See Race Relations In State Of Marked Confusion

Sat. 2-7-56

ATLANTA, Ga., Jan. 3—There is a lot of difference, a couple of sociologists observed Wednesday between what it said and what it done about the big changes going on in racial relationships in the South.

Jackson, Miss.

The public pronouncements from leaders on both sides of the issue can pretty well be predicted, the two told a session of the American Association for the Advancement of Science but, they added, "It is quite impossible to predict" exactly what action will be taken in any given Southern City or any particular phase.

The two, Dr. Harlan W. Gilmore of Tulane University and Dr. Nicholas J. Demerath of the University of North Carolina, noted that while Southern cities remain Bi-Racial the old patterns have been broken.

Advocate

State of Confusion

The best that can be said of the present patterns of racial relationships they said is that they are in a state of marked confusion."

One reason for the change in racial relations in Dixie's cities can be attributed to another big Southern change outlined by another speaker. Dr. Homer L. Hitt of Louisiana State, described the drastic population shifts that have steadily drawn both whites and Negroes away from the farm, with Negroes generally moving to the cities and the whites to the cities' suburbs.

P. 4

Gillmore and Demerath said the traditional formula for interracial relations in Southern cities has been changing since World War One.

"For at least the past 15 years," they noted "one could find in almost any Southern City unpunished violations of almost every supposed formula of interracial relations with the possible exceptions of interracial marriage and nonsegregation in public schools."

Groups Solidified

Now this change in formula has become the most controversial issue in the region. Each of the two groups, white and Negro populations "is more solidified as a conflict group than in the past," the sociologists said, "but in spite of this, the issues are not very clearly drawn."

They observed:

"As a gesture of loyalty to his side, a Negro is supposed to avow a desire to abolish every racial formula of the past, and similarly every white is supposed to pretend to oppose all such change.

"Actually this is not the state of mind many, perhaps most, individuals on both sides. There are many changes which Negroes would not try very hard to get and likewise there are some changes which most whites would not miss a bridge game to prevent.

No Clear Conception

"Of what they think the New South should be in the field of race relations."

Other changes in Southern cities outlined by the authors included changes in their economic function, loss of social and economic control of the old families,' emergence of middle-classes as a political factor.

Scientists Vote Not To Meet In Segregated Cities

WASHINGTON. (ANP) —Officials of the world's largest general scientific organization have voted 219 to 28 not to hold future meetings in cities where racial segregation is practiced.

Courier Mail Ballot

The mail ballot of the executive council of the American Association for the Advancement of Science was ordered at the association's meeting in Atlanta last December, following protests over segregation practices in that city. Two members of the group resigned.

Dael Wolfle, administrative secretary for the AAAS, said three members of the executive council did not vote.

The association has about 50,000 members.

Jewish Congress Demands Assistance For Children Of World, Regardless Of Race

Globe

The need to aid the world's children, regardless of race, religion or nationality, was highlighted today (Tuesday, December 20) by the Women's Division of the American Jewish Congress at its annual Hanukkah Luncheon at the Waldorf-Astoria Hotel in New York City.

Mrs. Eleanor Roosevelt was honored for "her outstanding contribution to the welfare of the children of the world" at the event, which benefitted the Louise Waterman Wise Youth Center in Jerusalem. Dr. Martha Eliot, Chief of the Children's Bureau of the U. S. Department of Health, Education and Welfare, and Judge Hubert Delany, one of the leaders of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People and an outstanding lay leader of the Episcopal Church of America, also spoke.

Prominent among the guests were representatives of 14 member nations of the United Nations International Children's Emergency Fund. The Hon. Justine Wise Polier, Justice of the Domestic Relations Court of New York City and national Women's Division president, presided at the luncheon.

Judge Polier Reports on Center

The more than 1,500 women leaders who attended heard Judge Polier report that young people of all races, religions and nationalities are today availing themselves of the facilities offered by the Louise Waterman Wise Youth Center in Jerusalem. The Youth Center, which was built and is maintained by AJCongress' Women's Division, in cooperation with Israel's Ministry of Education, is the only institution of its kind in Israel. The Center provides recreational, cultural and educational activities for Israel's young people, Jewish, Christian and Moslem; and during the Summer months, through affiliation with the World Hostel Movement, to young people of college age from all nations.

"I would like to feel," said Judge Polier, who is the daughter of the founder of AJCongress' Women's Divison for whom the Jerusalem institution is named, "that the Youth Center is a symbol and a promise of what Israel itself may come to mean, not only in the Middle East but throughout the world when peace shall come. There is no tradition more meaningful to Jews, whether they live in Israel or in other lands throughout the world, than the teaching of the prophet, 'Love thy neighbor as thyself.'

Presentation to Mrs. Roosevelt

"Knowing that the hope of mankind lies in its children, that the test of all civilization, as the test of civilization in any single country is reflected in the treatment of its children," Judge Polier declared, "we feel that we should today broaden our horizons, and together review what needs to be done, what should be done, and what can be done for children throughout the world. In facing this challenge, there was one person whose name, as whose life, reflected her deep devotion, her untiring effort and her complete love for all children." Judge Polier then presented Mrs. Roosevelt with a piece of ancient Jewish silver as a token of appreciation for Mrs. Roosevelt's service to children everywhere.

Judge Delany Dauds Israel

Justice Delany, in his address, recalled two sections from the 25th chapter of the Book of Leviticus: "Proclaim liberty throughout all the land unto all the inhabitants thereof," which is engraved on the Liberty Bell; and "Ye shall not therefore oppress one another." "These are words of faith and moral commitment that have moved Jews throughout the centuries to lead in the struggle for human freedom and dignity," Judge Delany said, adding that, "Whenever I work or travel in America on behalf of my people, I find among those Americans most ready to give of their substance and themselves in the struggle for full justice to Negroes are members of the Jewish community in every range of life.

"I believe and know that Israel will help to bring understanding between peoples, renewed faith in human dignity and freedom not only for the people of Israel who are rebuilding their ancient homeland but, in time, will become a source of inspiration for all people in all lands who cherish the great ideal of human brotherhood."

American Jewish Committee Says 'Bigots' Are Adopting New Political Tactics

New York, N.Y.

By IRVING SPIEGEL

Special to The New York Times.

CLEVELAND, May 11—The American Jewish Committee warned here today of what it described as a major change in tactics by "organized hatemongers."

This change according to the oldest organization in the country, devoted to the defense of Jewish civil rights, can have sharp political repercussions in the Presidential campaign.

The warning was in a report based on data gathered by the committee's fourteen area offices in the last six months. It was submitted to the agency's 200-member executive board, which opened its three-day annual meeting at the Statler Hotel.

The report said that bigots had failed to infiltrate the Republican and Democratic parties and were concentrating on "political grievances of sincere ultraconservatives."

Third Party Called Aim

It added that bigots "see their greatest political opportunity this year in the growing desire of the ultraconservatives to form a third party, or failing that, to force a realignment in the Democratic and Republican parties."

While the average American citizen "has built up strong antibodies against intolerance," the report declared, "efforts to inject bigotry into the forthcoming campaign are appearing with alarming frequency now, almost six months before election day."

The report said that President Eisenhower and Adlai E. Stevenson, as the Republican and Democratic nominees for President were subjected "to some of the most vicious and venomous attacks by professional bigots" in the 1952 campaign.

It warned of an "increasing tendency by racists to coordinate their activity with ultraconservatives during recent months," adding that the President and the Democratic candidate again would be "prime targets" for hatemongers in this year's campaign.

President Eisenhower's decision to run again has left "several die-hard elements groping for some third or new party as a means of continuing their opposition to him," the report declared.

It said that ultraconservative elements had long felt that the Republican and Democratic parties had moved "to the far left."

Political dissidents among the ultraconservatives, it asserted, were "being wooed by bigoted agitators," who "are interlarding openly anti-Semitic and anti-Negro appeals with legitimate stands favored by ultraconservatives."

3-Point Appeal Sounded

To meet what it called "the danger from a possible coalition of bigoted agitators with political dissidents among the ultraconservatives" the report proposed a three-point appeal as follows:

1. All political candidates should take the strongest measures to prevent any expression of racial or religious bias by any of their adherents and should "condemn publicly and emphatically every occurrence thereof."
2. National leaders of the Democratic and Republican parties should condemn any attempt, from whatever source, to inject racial or religious bias into the campaign.
3. Every community should have a nonpartisan, nonsectarian committee to keep "a watchful eye on campaign activities and call to the attention of political leaders any instances of racial or religious prejudice."

Irving M. Engel of New York, president of the American Jewish Committee, said that this program did not call for censorship but was aimed at "alerting American voters to a potential danger."

Constitutional Amendment Is Proposed

BALLOT TITLE SOUGHT

Memphis, Tenn.

By KENNETH JOHNSON

From The Commercial Appeal Little Rock Bureau

P. 7

LITTLE ROCK, Jan. 21.—Prosecretation leader James Johnson of Crossett said Saturday he plans to sponsor a proposed amendment to the Arkansas Constitution "to nullify and circumvent" the desegregation rulings of the United States Supreme Court.

Mr. Johnson, an attorney and former state Senator, didn't detail exactly what he will propose. An assistant said, however, it would be a combination of ideas, including the principle of interposition adopted recently by the Alabama Legislature.

Submits Proposal Soon

The first step Mr. Johnson said he will take, however, is to submit the proposal to Atty. Gen. Tom Gentry Monday for approval of a ballot title.

The former state Senator, who became involved in the controversy over the Hoxie School Board's integration ruling, also announced he will stage a series of television appearances to explain the amendment to the people this summer. The telecasts will start following approval of a ballot title, he said.

"When this amendment is approved, it will absolutely guarantee continued segregation in the public schools of Arkansas and in other phases of Arkansas society," said the Crossett attorney. Mr. Johnson was a candidate for attorney general in 1954, and has been mentioned as a candidate for governor this year.

Council Director

Mr. Johnson is director of the White Citizens Council of Arkansas, is the Arkansas representative on the executive committee of the Federation for Constitutional Government, and also is on the policy committee of the organization called, "For America."

All three groups, he said, are dedicated to the preservation of states rights.

Pools Closed Until Race Issue Settled

Fri. 5-18-56 P. 1

Little Rock, Ark.

The city recreation board decided last week to not to open public swimming pools last week after an appeal for desegregation was made. The pools were scheduled to open June 2.

Fort Worth has operated five swimming pools for whites and one for Negroes in the past. A proposal to build a new pool for Negroes was made by City Council Barney Holland. The board voted to keep the pools closed until the proposal submitted by Holland could be explored.

Attorney Clifford Davis, spokesman for a delegation from the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, said, "By now it is obvious that racial segregation in recreational facilities can no longer be sustained as a proper exercise of the police power."

Golf courses maintained by the city were desegregated last year. Many of the other facilities, in addition to the swimming pools are still maintained on segregated basis.

Doesn't Like Segregationist Stand Of Candidates

Sat. 6-16-56

From The Commercial Appeal Little Rock Bureau

P. 17

LITTLE ROCK, June 15. — A Negro political organization Friday officially voted a "wait and see' attitude toward the question of whom they will support for governor in this summer's Democratic primaries.

Leaders of the Arkansas Democratic Voters Association made it clear they didn't like the segregationist stands of all three major candidates, including Gov. Orval Faubus.

In addition, they set up a committee to "scrutinize" the campaign platforms of all gubernatorial and other state candidates.

The head of the association—I. S. McClinton of Little Rock—blasted the anti-integration proposals being backed by Governor Faubus and another candidate for governor, James Johnson of Crossett.

McClinton declared the proposals to be "an insult not only to the culture of the trained colored people, but also a discredit to the fine judgment of the thinking white citizens of our state."

McClinton said efforts will be made to weld Negro voters into a "common front" in this year's campaign and hinted that sooner or later, if the race gets hot, some of the candidates may end up asking for Negro support.

In the meantime, he appointed a five-man committee which will function as a study team on the candidates. It will be made up of Dr. H. H. Rheinhart of Warren, Rev. C. F. Odom of Little Rock, S. V. Clement of Stuttgart, Rev. N. L. Dove of McGehee and Andrew Howard of Marianna.

The Negro political leader estimated there are 90,000 potential Negro votes in Arkansas this year, and said he believed "we can vote at least 60,000."

Professor Says Interposition Used Loosely

Advertiser Montgomery, Ala.

Sat. 6-9-56

HOT SPRINGS, Ark., June 8 (AP) —Paul H. Sanders, Vanderbilt law professor, has said that the U. S. Supreme Court has "rather consistently invalidated" some basic points in the doctrine of interposition.

However, he said that the high court never has ruled directly on the question.

Sanders also pointed out that "an essential tenet of the interposition doctrine is to challenge the right of the court to make any final decision with regard to those matters."

Sanders, who has made a special survey of recent Supreme Court decisions on race relations, addressed the 58th annual convention of the Arkansas Bar Assn.

He said that "declarations of the Supreme Court seem to have rather consistently declared invalid the premises needed to give legitimate status to state interposition."

Some Southern states have taken steps toward interposition as a means of combating the U.S. Supreme Court decisions which declared segregation of white and Negro school children unconstitutional.

Sanders said that the term interposition is being used "loosely today to cover any protest."

He said that there are several legal steps that may be used to change a Supreme Court decision:

1. A constitutional amendment.

2. A change in the law by Congress. Sanders cited the Tidelands Case as an example of a congressional action that overruled a high court decision.

3. Withdrawal of jurisdiction. He said that Congress has virtually complete power over Supreme Court jurisdiction and could decide that the court had no authority to rule in the segregation cases. Sanders said this method had been tried unsuccessfully on at least six different occasions.

4. Changing size of the court.

Clarence Manion Points To Constitution Threat In Monopolization

Memphis, Tenn.

Sat. 5-26-56

By The Associated Press

LITTLE ROCK, May 25. — Clarence Manion, a nationally-prominent attorney, charged here Friday that the United States Supreme Court is the architect of centralized government which eventually might destroy the United States Constitution.

Mr. Manion, en route to El Dorado for a states rights rally Friday night, cited the Supreme Court's ruling against segregation as the latest example in the court's usurpation of states rights. He said this trend in the court's thinking has been in the making since 1920.

Resistance Is Urged

"We must either reconcile ourselves to a complete monopolization of Government in Washington or adopt some alternative," declared the South Bend, Ind., lawyer.

The alternative he suggested was resistance by the people to "any excess of power on the part of any branch of the Federal Government—the Supreme Court, the President or the Congress."

He said the states rights provision in the Constitution "is the axis on which the whole constitutional system turns."

For America Leader

Mr. Manion, former dean of the Notre Dame Law School, was President Eisenhower's appointee on the Commission on Intergovernmental Relations in 1953. He was asked to resign in January 1954.

He presently is co-chairman of For America, an organization of conservatives.

Mr. Manion was met here by James Johnson, Crossett attorney and former state senator, who is campaigning for governor this summer.

2 Proposals May Be Placed On November Ballot

Fri. 4-27-56

ENDORSED BY FAUBUS

Memphis, Tenn.

By KENNETH JOHNSON

From The Commercial Appeal Little Rock Bureau

P. 4

LITLE ROCK, April 26. — Two proposals aimed against integration and endorsed by Gov. Orval Faubus were handed to Atty. Gen. Tom Gentry Thursday for approval of ballot titles.

R. B. McCulloch Sr., Forrest City attorney who drafted them, delivered copies of the proposals to Mr. Gentry. The attorney general said it probably would be several days before he could issue a ruling on validity of the ballot titles. He said other requests were ahead of them.

Final Endorsement

Governor Faubus placed his final endorsement on the measures Wednesday night during a conference at the executive mansion with Mr. McCulloch and others of an East Arkansas committee opposing integration.

The Governor appointed the committee about two months ago, shortly after he had issued a policy statement saying Arkansas would not be pushed or "bullied" into an immediate end of segregated schools or other public facilities.

One of the proposals is a resolution of interposition, the other a proposed initiated act for a pupil assignment law.

Amendment Sought

The interposition measure, if adopted at the Nov. 6 general election, would place Arkansas on record as calling for an amendment to the Constitution of the United States against Federal authority over state schools or other "domestic institutions" within the state.

The measure endorses the idea of "racially separate but substantially equal public schools" within the various states.

The proposed pupil assignment law, the more lengthy of the two measures submitted to the attorney general, would give school districts sole authority to assign pupils to schools which they must attend.

The assignment of a pupil would be made upon a large number of factors, and to the end that each application for admission to a school would suffer "no detrimental effect" by reason of his being assigned to that particular school.

Signatures Needed

Available room and teaching capacity, the geographical location of the pupil's residence in relation to schools, the psychological qualification of the pupil for the type of teaching and associations involved, together with any and all other factors "except the factor of race" would be among criteria set up for a school board to follow in assigning a pupil.

Sponsors of the two measures will have to obtain 30,000 signatures on each to get them on the November ballot. Mr. Gentry has 15 days in which to approve their ballot titles, or substitute new titles.

SEGREGATION SESSION PLANNED AT CONWAY

Georgia Representative Will Be Speaker Friday

From The Commercial Appeal
Little Rock Bureau

LITTLE ROCK, March 25.—Arkansas pro-segregation leaders will hold a rally Friday night at Conway.

Sponsoring the meeting will be the Faulkner County Chapter of White America, Inc., it was announced here Saturday by Amis Guthridge, Little Rock attorney who is a state leader in the organization.

Mr. Guthridge said United States Representative James C. Davis of Decatur, Ga., a long-time exponent of segregated races in Georgia, will be one of the principal speakers.

The meeting will be under chairmanship of a member of the Arkansas Legislature, State Representative Russell Roberts of Conway.

Former Gov. Ben T. Laney, now of Altheimer, will serve as master of ceremonies. James D. Johnson of Crossett, former state senator and now heading the White Citizens Council of Arkansas, will be another speaker.

Mr. Guthridge, Mr. Laney and Mr. Johnson have appeared together in previous meeting opposing integration movements.

Mr. Johnson will again speak in behalf of a proposed constitutional amendment he is sponsoring for this year's general election ballot. The proposal would give the state Legislature full authority to oppose by every lawful means the Supreme Court's ruling against segregated facilities.

FAUBUS CHALLENGES TWO FOES' RECORDS

Governor Charges Johnson 'Preying On Emotions Of The People'

By WILLIAM BOOZER
Staff Writer

LITTLE ROCK, July 23. — Gov. Orval Faubus, defending his record as Arkansas' chief executive against attacks by two major opponents, Monday night renewed his challenge to his opponents to cite any public accomplishments of their own.

In an address carried over a five-station television network, the Governor charged Jim Johnson with "preying on the emotions of the people" in hammering on segregation issues.

Snoddy's Record Attacked

He said his other main opponents — Jim Snoddy of Alma — "hasn't told you the good things he did while in the Senate because there weren't any."

Both Mr. Johnson and Mr. Snoddy are former members of the state senate, and Mr. Snoddy has also served as secretary of the senate.

The Governor again urged a "realistic and practical" approach to segregation problems, and repeated his promise that no school district in the state will be forced to integrate so long as he is Governor.

Attended Funeral

The 30-minute speech was his first in the final full week of campaigning. The Governor is seeking nomination for a second two-year term in the July 31 Democratic primary.

Monday afternoon, the Governor attended the funeral of a great-uncle, Hiram Thornsberry of Combs, near the Governor's home at Huntsville. He returned here by plane from Fayetteville.

In his television appeal, Gov. ernor Faubus outlined accomplishments of his administration, including additional welfare aid, industrial development, more efficient tax collections and blockage of utility rate increases by the Public Service Commission.

The speech was carried on three Little Rock television stations and one each at Fort Smith and El Dorado. A film of the address will be shown Friday on Memphis, Texarkana and Monroe, La., stations.

The governor will be at Wilson, Osceola and Blytheville Tuesday.

New Integration Efforts Charged By Johnson

By KENNETH JOHNSON
Staff Writer

CONWAY, Ark., July 23. — Jim Johnson of Crossett charged Monday night Gov. Orval Faubus has allowed the state's new medical center to be integrated —"even to the staff."

It was the newest charge which the Crossett attorney and former state senator has hurled on his main campaign theme of this governor's race — segregation. He also accused the Governor of having brought in "outside" people to try to solve state problems.

Most Patients Colored

"The majority of patients at the new 10-million-dollar medical center are colored, and they are putting all patients into integrated wards. And not only the patients, but the staff and internes also are working on an integrated basis."

He also took the Governor to task for out-of-state appraisers being brought into Arkansas to study county assessments with a view to bringing about assessment equalization.

He recalled that Governor Faubus, when he was running two years ago, criticized then Gov. Francis Cherry for bringing in an out-of-state man (Herbert Eldridge of Texas) as state highway director.

"But now Governor Faubus is bringing in out-of-state so-called experts to solve the Trkansas tax problems."

Mr. Johnson's speech here Monday night was his only public appearance of the day for the most part, he was tied up in conferences with visitors to his Little Rock headquarters. Conway is the birthplace of Mrs. Johnson. She planned to campaign in Northwest Arkansas this week.

No Comment On Talk

Two of his visitors Monday were Amis Guthridge, Little Rock attorney and executive secretary of White America, Inc., in Arkansas, and former Gov. Ben T. Laney, ardent states' righter now living near Pine Bluff.

Mr. Johnson had about a 30-minute conference with Mr. Laney but later declined to say what was discussed.

His headquarters also announced that Mr. Guthridge will do some speaking for him this week. It wasn't explained, however, whether Mr. Guthridge will be speaking as an individual or as a representative of White America.

Visitors to Mr. Johnson's headquarters in Little Rock are greeted by a large Confederate flag on one wall, and a smaller flag of the United States on another wall.

Mr. Johnson plans a television speech Tuesday night in Fort Smith.

Snoddy Implies Faubus Approved Dog Racing

From The Commercial Appeal
Little Rock Bureau

LITTLE ROCK, July 24.—Jim Snoddy, stepping up his attack on the record of Gov. Orval Faubus, implied Monday night that the Arkansas Racing Commission had approval from the Governor through a "letter of assurance" for dog racing at West Memphis.

In a television address here, the gubernatorial candidate said the "whole racing franchise muddle into which the Faubus administration plunged Arkansas" can be described in a single word — "turmoil."

The criticism of Governor Faubus' handling of the dog racing controversy came as the Alma businessman blasted the Faubus record in detail.

Recorded excerpts from the Governor's opening campaign address were used in the half-hour telecast, as were reproductions of newspaper headlines documenting the Faubus program.

"In the controversy over dog racing and horse racing the Faubus record shows that he has decorated himself with the halo of insulted honesty," Mr. Snoddy said. "Does the halo fit? It looks ridiculous.

"The Governor says he was offered a bribe, making the statement months after he says it happened. And then he shut up, as if he had put his foot in his mouth.

"In the light of Faubus stated intention to control the actions of all commissions, would it be logical that the chairman of the state racing commission would act upon such an extremely important political matter as a franchise for a dog racing track in West Memphis without consulting the Governor?"

"And yet a group of East Arkansas men, including some prominent in the Governor's political family, were given a letter of assurance by the Faubus racing commission, declaring that a franchise would be granted for dog racing in West Memphis, when enough stock was sold to build the plant."

The "letter of assurance" obviously referred to a letter which Robert Roach of Little Rock, former chairman of the racing commission, wrote to Southland Racing Corp. months ago in connection with dog racing at West Memphis. Mr. Roach resigned after the letter was made public.

Mr. Snoddy promised that if he's elected, he will "lead, suggest, plan, recommend and administer — not pressure, rule, make deals or create turmoil."

He will speak Tuesday morning at Conway and shake hands in the afternoon at Tuckerman. A big four-county rally is planned for him Tuesday night at Newport starting at 7:30.

Mrs. James Johnson, wife of the Crossett attorney and former state senator who is campaigning on an anti-integration platform, filed them with Secretary of State C. G. Hall.

42,000 Signatures

Mrs. Johnson said they contained nearly 42,000 signatures and that additional names would be submitted before the Friday midnight deadline for filing proposals for the November general election ballot. About 33,000 names are required.

Mrs. Johnson said one petition she brought was circulated by an Ashley County Negro and contained all Negro signatures.

Mr. Johnson, who earlier had said he intended to obtain about 300,000 signatures for the measure, was campaigning in Paragould Tuesday.

The proposal he is sponsoring would, if adopted, direct the Legislature to take whatever steps considered necessary to oppose any encroachments of the Federal Government on states rights.

Against Court Ruling

Actually, the measure doesn't mention integration, but Mr. Johnson's campaigning and public statements in support of the measure have been directed against the Supreme Court's ruling and other moves threatening the segregated school system in Arkansas.

The proposal specifically directs that the Legislature should oppose all "dangerous invasions or encroachments" upon states' rights, with such opposition to include interposition and nullification."

Secretary Hall had not completed a count of the signatures. He said sponsors of other proposals had called indicating they would have their petitions in before the Friday midnight deadline.

Anti-Racing Move

Anti-racing forces have said they would file petitions Thursday, as well as the Arkansas Farm Bureau Federation on its proposal to "freeze" senatorial districts as they now exist, so that rural representation in the Senate would remain unchanged with population changes.

The two anti-integration measures backed by Governor Orval Faubus still were out Tuesday, but the Governor's office said it was expected petitions on those would also be filed Thursday.

All state offices will be closed Wednesday for July 4 holiday observances.

PAPERS ATTACK NEGRO, JEWISH ORGANIZATIONS

Daily Worker
Atlanta, Ga.
Sat. 6-2-39

CHARLOTTE, N. C.—Five men, believed to be key figures in the spreading of race hate literature, were arrested Friday in Charlotte on charges growing out of recent attacks on organizations designed to aid minority groups.

A police raid on the businesses and homes of the white suspects Thursday uncovered a quantity of unsigned literature attacking the Anti-Defamation League and the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People.

Police said they also found application blanks for membership in the Ku Klux Klan, a klan robe and mask, a printing press, dynamite, guns, a roster of members of the States' Rights League, nude photographs, and plates of photographic comic drawings.

SPECIFIC CHARGES

Specifically the five men are charged with distributing and mailing pamphlets attacking Alfred E. Smith, president of the Charlotte branch of the ADL, an arm of the B'nai B'rith Jewish order.

The charges were brought under state laws which make it a misdemeanor to mail or transmit threatening written or printed material which is not signed.

Leaflets seized by police said the Anti-Defamation League is "The American Jewish Gestapo of secret police and an offspring of B'nai B'rith, a so-called brotherhood of Jews."

This group of leaflets also contended that ADL "intimidated and coerced the Charlotte City Council to pass an ordinance banning what they called hate literature."

$1,000 BOND

Each of the five men, who live either in Charlotte or its suburbs, must post $1,000 each for release until trial.

Arresting officers said pamphlets were also found deriding the NAACP as "The National Association for the Agitation of Colored People."

Those under arrest were identified as: Arthur W. Bryant, 35, owner of the Art Stone Works; Percy Clarence Wyatt, 44, a stonemason, who said he was a native of Winston-Salem; Joe Bryant, owner of the Bryant Stone Co.; Albert Rogers and E. E. Rogers.

'PUSSYFOOTING' DENIED

Johnson Accuses Governor Of Ducking Issue, But State Executive Hits Back —Snoddy Also Appears

By KENNETH JOHNSON
Staff Writer

PORTIA, Ark., July 4. — Arkansas candidates for Governor fired their hottest political shots here Wednesday. Most ammunition was provided by the integration question.

Two candidates, James Johnson of Crossett and Jim Snoddy of Almyra, appeared Wednesday morning with Gov. Orval Faubus, the man they're gunning for, making an afternoon appearance.

The speeches and the hot weather lasted all day—since state and district candidates also appeared.

Mr. Johnson launched the integration question when he accused Governor Faubus of "pussyfooting" on segregation.

"If Jim Johnson hadn't stayed on him for over a year, he never would have mentioned the issue," said the former state senator.

Speaking in the area where the Hoxie school dispute is still a hot issue, Mr. Johnson drew heavy applause when he declared that if elected he will close school out at Hoxie, Charleston and Fayetteville—as well as in the University of Arkansas and state colleges—to preserve segregation.

Faubus Hits Back

Those three towns and the colleges have adopted integration. Referring to proposed pupil assignment laws which Governor Faubus is sponsoring for the November ballot, Mr. Johnson said that if elected he will be the state "assignment officer."

Governor Faubus hit back when he got to the speaker's stand in late afternoon.

The Governor derided Mr. Johnson's claim he had delayed a stand on integration. If anything, he said, he was far ahead of the former state senator. He said he had first brought up the issue two years ago when campaigning for governor, while Mr. Johnson was running for attorney general.

"He didn't mention it in his race," the Governor charged.

The Governor drew applause when he told a milling, perspiring crowd of several thousand that as long as he is Governor, "no school district will be forced to mix the races."

He also said he will recommend to the 1957 Legislature that a special fund be set up for the attorney general's office to pay for extra state legal help handling school integration matters for local districts.

In referring to two anti-integration proposals he is sponsoring for the November ballot, he said petitions and signatures to get them on the ballot will be filed Thursday in Little Rock.

Snoddy: 'Today And Always'

The third candidate, Mr. Snoddy, made only a brief appearance, and pledged himself to be "for segregation today, tomorrow and always."

"I will never be for gradual integration. I believe facilities should be separate but equal," he declared.

He also promised "there will be no increase in taxes while I am Governor."

The other two candidates for Governor, S. K. Prosser of Conway and Ben F. Pippin of Little Rock did not appear.

BILL-PROPOSED TO PAY NEGROES MOVING COSTS
OUT OF STATES WHERE RACIAL SEGREGATION IS PRACTICED

Bill Proposes Paying Negroes' Moving Costs

Courier Journal
Louisville Ky.
Thur 5-17-56

Washington, May 7 (AP)—Representative Andrews (D., Ala.) proposed today that Negroes wishing to move out of states where racial segregation is practiced be offered federal loans to cover the cost of resettlement.

Andrews introduced a bill that would create a three-member commission on human resettlement to carry out the proposal.

White House Racial Talks Urged by Agnes Meyer

Post + Times Herald P. 17

Thurs. 4-12-56

Washington, D.C.

Agnes E. Meyer last night called for a bi-racial White House Conference to seek a peaceful solution to the "grave Southern upheaval."

The wife of the chairman of the board of The Washington Post Co. declared this Nation must choose now "between freedom and slavery—not just for the Negro but for mankind."

Because, she emphasized, one of the gravest dangers inherent in the revolt of the deep South is the formation of a "Nation-wide party of revolt" which will thrive on hatred at a moment when calmness is needed.

"The art of Government is foresight—and never was it more needed if the President is to make the contribution which only he can make to quench the fires of wrath that threaten to sweep through the whole Nation," she said.

"Calls Conference at Once"

"A White House Conference should be called at once of the most reputable white and Negro leaders who could be counted upon to seek pragmatic and rational approaches to justice."

Ultimately, Mrs. Meyer said there should be bi-racial committees at State and community levels.

In the address prepared for delivery before the biennial convention of the American Jewish Congress in New York, Mrs. Meyer said that the mounting hostility between whites and Negroes in the South is not an isolated phenomenon but a "more acute form" of the disregard of law and justice which has plagued this Nation for several years.

Springing from the South's revolt, Mrs. Meyer warned, is a new organization, calling itself the Federation for Constitutional Government and planning to coordinate the activities of the White Citizens Councils.

This orzanization, Mrs. Meyer added, is looking beyond the South and hopes to appeal to extremists in both political parties.

"Menace to Prestige"

". . . Thus we have a double problem—to allay the growing intolerance of the White Citizens Councils and to keep them from using this intolerance as the fulcrum of a third party movement that would become a menace to our Nation's prestige abroad and to the peace, the social progress and the curtural development of our country here at home," she warned.

It is not enough, Mrs. Meyer declared, for President Eisenhower to make "paternal admonitions" to "curb the rising passions of the extremists and give encouragement to the silenced forces of moderation."

"Isn't it high time that we call upon our sociologists anthropoligists and political scientists to climb out of their ivory towers and apply their wisdom to the heated turmoil of life?," she asked in requesting the White House Conference.

Their knowledge, Mrs. Meyer continued, also should be used to help raise the status of the Negro in the North. The North, she pointed out, has segregated local schools in heavily populated Negro quarters such as Harlem. Therefore, Mrs. Meyer said, the North has no right to be critical because the South hesitates to desegregate its schools in heavily populated Negro counties.

"The only hope of carrying out the Supreme Court decision in such Southern counties, lies in gradualism," she said.

Mrs. Meyer also cautioned leaders of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People to practice patience, not to press for action in such counties.

"If, on the other hand, the NAACP will bring its court cases in Arlington, Va., and other counties that had already decided to proceed with carefully made plans to integrate their schools, the success of these pilot projects will gradually prove to the South that the world will not come to an end if white and Negro children go to school together," she said.

The Supreme Court ruling on segregation, Mrs. Meyer emphasized, has reforged "the most powerful weapon in our democratic arsenal."

But, she observed, the decision could not have come at a more difficult period in the Nation's history. This Nation, she said, is not threatened so much by the existence of a powerful totalitarian enemy but by the symptoms which made the rise of totalitarianism possible in other lands.

"The chief battle, therefore, is not with an external enemy," she said. "It lies within ourselves and our own institutions. It is a question of our own readiness to recognize that we are moral agents, directly responsible for our own actions."

GEN. FACES HEARING ON BIAS TALK

Daily World
Thurs, 2-2-56
Atlanta, Ga.

WASHINGTON, —(SNS)— Maj. Gen Eugene M Caffey, Army judge advocate, will return here Wednesday to explain full details on charges that he praised an attack by Rep. John J. Flynt, Jr. (D-Ga) on desegregated schols.

P. 1

Rep. Adam Clayton Powell (D-NY) made the charges against Caffey and demanded Tuesday in a letter to President Eisenhower that Caffey be dismissed as Army judge advocate general. The Negro Congressman from New York said Caffey had violated his oath to uphold the Constitution by lauding a speech that denounced the Supreme Court for its ruling against segregation in public schols.

38a

Maj. Gen. Caffey was quoted as praising the Georgia congressman's speech before the Georgia Legislature January 24. Caffey maintains that he was misinterpreted, and that he was praising Flynt's speaking ability and not the content of the speech.

He was quoted as saying to the Georgia Legislature Monday:

Daily World
P. 6

"If I were going to make a speech I would hope to make one like that."

In his communique with the president, Mr. Powell said:

"If such butterance had been made by any GI, Negro or white, against any law of our land, he would have immediately been subjected to court martial."

"The fact that Mr. Caffey is a major general and occupies the highly sensitive position as judge advocate of the Army makes his remarks the more heinous."

Alcatraz Has Baseball Racial Fight

Daily Worker
Atlanta, Ga.
Tues. 5-22-56

SAN FRANCISCO—(INS)—A first throwing riot between white and Negro inmates of Alcatraz Federal Prison was disclosed Monday by officials of the famed island institution in San Francisco Bay.

The fighting broke out yesterday in the recreation area of the "rock" after a Negro inmate, Leroy Fuller, stabbed and slightly wounded a white prisoner, Charles Schultz, during a baseball game.

A number of first battles between white and Negro ball players and spectators ensued but prison guards waded in and speedily halted the hostilities.

Paul J. Madigan, warden of the nation's "toughest" prison, announced there were no injuries, among guards or inmates, except for minor cuts suffered by Schultz who is serving an 18-year term for bank robbery.

Fuller, an army prisoner, is serving a sentence of 23 years for rape and murder.

Warden Madigan Saic both Fuller and Schultz face discipilinary action.

California Band Spurns Mardi Gras

Courier p. 7
Sat. 2-11-56
Pittsburgh, Pa.

(Special to The Courier)

LONG BEACH, Calif.—Die-hard Dixie "tradition" has prevented the Long Beach Youth Band from marching in the New Orleans Mardi Gras parade. The New Orleans Carnival Committee won't permit the band's two Negro musicians to participate, the band director said Thursday.

Director Gordon Carmen, after a conference with Mayor George M. Vermillion, said:

"If all our band members can't participate in the parade, then none of us will. It's a matter of American principle."

The thirty-piece band was one of several invited to take part in the parade Feb. 14.

"An official, who declined to fully identify himself over the telephone, said that the Negroes could attend the Mardi Gras if they wanted to and could participate in another parade sponsored by a Zulu organization."

IN NEW ORLEANS, Mayor deLesseps S. Morrison's public relations office said the city had no control over the Mardi Gras parades, which are sponsored by private organizations with secret memberships. The city only issues parade permits, the officials said.

Also in New Orleans, Zulu Club President Jim Russell told the Courier that no persons responsible for other carnival club parades could offer to place any musicians in the Zulu parade.

"Unless our club agrees, those bands we hire are the only ones to appear in the Zulu parade," Russell declared.

West Coast scribe raps musician bias

Calif.

SAN FRANCISCO—Ralph J. Gleason, columnist for a local daily, last week took a pointed swipe at Musicians Local 6, for its recent refusal to consolidate with Musicians Local 669.

The former is a lily-white aggregation. The latter is colored.

IN HIS morning column, Gleason noted that "mixed groups appear everywhere" and that "jazz clubs, theatres, recording studios accept musicians, by and large, on their ability and their drawing power and not on their color."

He pointed out there still "occasional" cases of discrimination, then went on to note contributions American musical ambassadors, such as Louis Armstrong, Lionel Hampton and Dizzy Gillespie have made to world understanding.

Pitt. 12-29-56

GLEASON continued: "That is why it is all the more depressing that last week, in a vote to amalgamate the colored and white locals of the American Federation of Musicians in San Francisco, the white local saw fit to reject the proposal.

It hardly seems necessary to point out how utterly out of step with history this action was, and that amalgamation is inevitable, if only when the CIO and AFL themselves amalgamated."

Pasadena Faces Pool Bias Suit

Defender Sat. 1-21-56

Chicago, Ill.

PASADENA, Calif. — A $1,000 damage suit has been filed against South Pasadena officials by Mrs. Mildred McClain Johnson charging that her nine-year-old adopted daughter was denied use of the city pool last August.

The complaint states that German-born Susan McClain went to the municipal pool with a neighbor, John Abbott, and his two daughters.

The Abbott girls were admitted, but the clerk and assistant manage told Abbott that Susan "wont be allowed in the pool because of a department rule barring Negroes," the suit states.

FROM ORPHANAGE

Mrs. Johnson, who adopted Susan from a German oprhanage in 1952, said she appealed to Don Dollkuson, assistant city manager, who said there was no written authority for the "rule", but refused to guarantee that the incident would not recur.

Named as defendants in the suit besides Dollison, were:

Frank Clough, city manager; Mayor Joseph Partsch; Robert Seiler, superintendent of the Department of Recreation; Neil Cornell, manager of the South Pasadena Swimming Plunge, and two pool employees.

Segregation Survey

Afro-American

A poll on the segregation issue just completed for the Catholic Digest offers some interesting figures. P. 4

Fifty-eight per cent of Northern whites and 17 per cent of Southern whites favor integration. The overall average shows 48 per cent for equality while 42 per cent are opposed.

The report indicates that generally younger people are less prejudiced than their elders. Sat. 6-9-56

Sixty-seven per cent of persons between the ages of 15 and 34 are ready to do away with segregation while only 45 per cent of persons 55 and older would end discrimination.

The report provides a rude awakening for those Southern spokesmen who are so certain that their colored neighbors are happy under the segregated way of life.

Baltimore, Md.

The survey proves that colored Americans, both literate and illiterate, both from North and from South by a whopping 95 per cent favor integration —and the sooner the better.

While the question of Constitutional rights is not one that can be decided by a show of hands, this survey performs a useful service if it does no more than show up the Dixie demagogues to be congenital liars.

'Gen. Clark has shifted his allegiance to Sen. Eastland'

Afro-American Baltimore, Md
Sat. 5-12-56

WASHINGTON

"Gen. Clark has shifted his allegiance from the support of the Constitution to the support of Sen. Eastland. . . .

"It's very strange that he never made these statements until he started on the payroll of South Carolina. It shows that some people will sell out if there's enough money. . ."

Rep. Adam Clayton Powell (D., N.Y.), was talking about Gen. Mark W. Clark, former Fifth Army commander and now president of the Citadel, South Carolina military college.

General Clark told the Southern Regional Conference of State Governments in Charleston, S.C., last week that he opposed integration in the armed forces. The integration program was adopted in 1950.

* * *

"I DID NOT feel that we should integrate then, and I don't think so now," General Clark said.

"The worst division I had was a colored division," he added, referring to the 92nd (Buffalo) Division. It was spread out over a third of the whole Fifth Army front in Italy.

The division was commanded by then Maj. Gen. Edward M. Almond, now retired. He said from his home in Anniston, Ala.:

"I endorse General Clark's statement 100 per cent."

* * *

MILITARY AND government officials say that neither General Clark nor General Almond made such statements while on active duty.

"Our position is that General Clark didn't say that while he was in uniform," said James E. Evans, civilian aide to the secretary of the Defense Department.

"Integration is working," Mr. Evans told the AFRO on Wednesday.

"Whatever was said about the Army during that period can be attributed to segregation, discrimination and illiteracy."

* * *

GENERAL ALMOND said to his division after victory in Europe:

"With deep reverence, I salute those officers and men who have died while performing their duties. . . .Those of us who remain are obligated to help insure the peace and understanding so needed for the future welfare of our country.

"And I urge that we make the same unselfish efforts which in the past have contributed so much in individual and unit actions."

POWELL TOLD the AFRO that as a result of General Clark's statement he has "asked the army to furnish me a record of the courage and heroism of colored troops."

He said he also requested information comparing the performance of colored soldiers in the jim-crow army and under integration.

"I happen to know that the army has this material," Representative Powell said, "It shows that the efficiency and morale of colored troops increased when they were integrated. The AWOL record is lower."

* * *

ROY WILKINS, executive secretary of the NAACP, said colored soldiers "were trained and used in World War II under the most humiliating segregation. All authorities recognize that this affected their morale."

Mr. Wilkins said General Clark "speaks with the voice of the past" in opposing integration.

Carey McWilliams sees end to legal segregation by '66

Tribune Fri. 5-4-56
Los Angeles, Calif. p.3

WASHINGTON, D. C. — End of legally-sanctioned race segregation during the next 10 years was predicted here last week by Carey McWilliams, author-editor of the Nation, who was final speaker on Howard university's three-day program, "The Impact of Desegregation upon American Life."

McWilliams said that the South is undergoing a drastic social change and has accomplished a century of progress in the past generation. "The South today is also on the threshold of a revolution in politics," he said, "one which will bring about dissolution of the entire political apparatus of segregation."

The author saw five factors precipitating the political revolution, (1) diversified agriculture, (2) industrialization, (3) social change, (4) financial change, and (5) mass migration of Negroes from the South.

The social change is being brought about by the introduction of three new groups on the southern scene, according to McWilliams. They are the "new southerner," the "transplanted Yankee," and the "transient."

The new southerner was described as the young businessman or industrialist who, although raised in the South, has been exposed to a more liberal education, and, consequently, does not share many of the old opinions. The transplanted Yankee is the young executive from the North, sent South to supervise operation of industries which are controlled by eastern capital. He defined the transient as the worker who seeks employment wherever it is available, and whose political and social beliefs are varied.

"These three groups have caused a split in the top power groupings of the South for the first time in its history," McWilliams claimed.

The writer also saw the emergence of a third party in the near future. "It will come not from the left, but from the right," he declared, "and will be made up of the conservatives of both the Democratic and Republican Parties."

McWilliams said that the conservative elements of both parties have three common traits; they are anti-labor, states righters, and racists. Southern conservative is anti-Negro; while the western conservative is anti-Jew, he said.

Gen. Clark's Segregation Stand Hit

Herald P.11-A
Fri. 5-4-56
Miami, Fla.

NEW YORK — (UP) — Rep. Adam Clayton Powell, New York Democrat, said it was "obvious" that Gen. Mark Clark had "sold out to the Eastland-Jimmy Byrnes fifth column against American democracy."

CLARK

The Negro congressman said he had asked the Army to give him "a complete breakdown" on charges made against Negro troops by Clark, who is now president of The Citadel, South Carolina military college.

Clark was quoted recently as saying he had been opposed to integration in the Army in 1951 and he was still so opposed.

He later said he meant that he still thought he was right in 1951 although he would not advocate reversing the policy at this time.

Powell lined Clark up with Sen. James O. Eastland, Mississippi Democrat, and James F. Byrnes, former governor of South Carolina.

"I have this day requested the Department of the Army to give me a complete breakdown on the charges made by Gen. Mark Clark against Negro troops; also previous quotations by Gen. Clark when he praised Negro troops, and lastly an analysis of the morale and efficiency of Negro groups after they were integrated as compared to when they were segregated," Powell's statement said.

"It is obvious that Gen. Mark Clark had his price and has sold out."

What to do about it

Afro-American P.5

(From a statement by George S. Mitchell, Director, Southern Regional Council.)

One blessed thing is that the corn pone curtain has turned to cellophane. . . . Now the United States as a whole worries about how things are in the South. That's healthy. . . .

As to what to do, one of the first things is to aim our efforts aright. In situations of what is called racial tension, nearly every vague well-wisher says to himself, "My, aren't the white people excited! I had better go and fan them down."

Whereas the real excitement is among the colored people, and the right thing to do is to help local communities answer the needs and hopes of the people climbing up.

Where that is done peace returns; where it is refused, excitement grows.

COLORED PEOPLE HAVE HAD a long, dusty march. And they are still trudging along in the dust.

They have heard that the Constitution of the United States promises them "equal protection of the laws," and they would like to get that.

They collected a lot of two-dollarses, and paid them in to the NAACP to get some brilliant colored lawyers to stand up in front of the nine judges of the U.S. Supreme Court and ask for that equal protection of the laws.

And the judges said that they were entitled to it.

Whereupon a great hope spread down the column of dusty marchers.

Whereupon some governors and law officers and politicians mostly in the South said, "Shucks. That don't mean a thing. You boys keep on like you were."

* * *

THE POINT IS THAT people are not going to keep on like they were. They wish and can pay for standing as regular Americans.

Paradoxically, the present situation has a built in feature of improvement. In the past, the colored people have not been organized and when some were offered employment on the old disrespectful terms, enough would take it so that all had to knuckle under.

On this go 'round unanimity of purpose reaches a stage quite like organization. . . .

The thing to do is for white and colored community leaders, being from each race respected and truly representative people, to sit down together and find the local facts, and agree on a course of action to meet the changes of the times.

And wherever that is honorably done the town will be surprised and pleased to find how reasonable, how careful, and how workable will be the proposals that will result. If there is what is called "trouble" it will end with some people around a table.

* * *

FAR BETTER if the people gather around the table before and do what can be agreed upon.

The innermost demand of the colored people is recognition of equal human dignity. Any community which will contrive to recognize that, publicly and privately, will be notably rewarded.

The colored people will put their shoulders to the wheel, which is a thing that three centuries of scorn taught them magnificently to avoid! And the towns where the colored population becomes a participating force will get ahead; in industry. business, and culture.

I expect that a few years from now emissaries will come to some of these better towns, from the ones that stuck with southern tradition, and will ask "What in the world did you do?" The answer:

"We just treated everybody human, And it worked."

Negro Community Urged To Take Lead In Fight For Race's Rights

World Birmingham Ala. Tues 2-21-56

Dr. Kenneth B. Clark, widely known social scientist, of New York, flatly dumped the responsibility in the lap of the "Negro community" to lead the way in working toward realization of full citizenship rights and freedom as human beings in these changing times.

Dr. Clark, in an one-hour and six-minute long address, issued this commission to the communities before a capacity 16th Street Baptist Church audience attending the 23rd annual forum last Friday night.

The forum, sponsored by the 23-year-old Periclean Club, is an annual climax of the Negro History Week celebration.

TWO YEARS FROM TODAY

Suggesting that the Negro cannot restreat, cannot postpone his rights as a citizen, the noted associate professor of Psychology at City College, New York, declared that "The Negro community which maintains racial segregation and discrimination without fighting against it is not worthy of the May 17, 1954 United States Supreme Court's decision."

COULD DIE IN A FEW NIGHTS

Dr. Clark pointed out that racial segregation was imposed on Southern states overnight. "Thus," he suggested, "that stigma can be eliminated in only a few nights."

Negroes are not afraid, he said. "They have been hardened because of years of oppression and false promises." He declared that the current movements taken by several Southern states to circumvent the Supreme Court's desegregation decisions, such as the economic squeeze, firing Negro teachers' threats, and maintenance of racial segregation in public schools by "police power," will not do and cannot be of any effect.

PRAISES MISS LUCY

Lauding Miss Autherine J. Lucy, University of Alabama's first Negro co-ed, for her "unswerving courage and conduct" during her recent almost life-taking ordeal with the bigots and race-hating rioters on the University's campus, February 6, Dr. Clark told the audience that "In all history human beings who have not demanded, worked, or sacrificed for their rights have become inferior and have been treated as such. Human beings who have accepted their stigmatized status without protest have become inferior people. There is no social tension when the oppressed group accepts inferiority."

The speaker thundered, "Conflict somes only when a group that knows that it is not inferior is being treated as if it were."

THERE IS HOPE

City these local forces which are doily fighting racial segregation, discrimination and infringement of human rights. Dr. Clark declared that "You have ushered in a glorious period of American history and a golden era of progress for the Negro. Take notice of this fact. Since 1954, over 200,000 Negro children who were previously relegated to segregated schools are now attend non-segregated schools in which they are learning to be free, equal and truly competent American citizens."

"This," the speaker observed, "is a time of hope, of challenge, and of excitement. We are on the threshold of substantial progress in human relations and full and equal rights, responsibilities and obligations as American citizens. No force or combination of forces can stop this for the Negroes. If it is denied the Negro, it will be denied to all. This is the irresistible logic of the contemporary world."

GRADUALISM A SMOKE SCREEN

He said, "Those men of good will who maintain that progress in race relations must be 'gradual' should be warned that they are unwittingly falling into the trap of racial fanatics. Gradualism becomes the 'reasonable' verbal smoke screen for those who would deny the Negro his rights forever. Essentially, the issue of gradualism is spurious. It has become an empty catchword designed to postpone indefinitely the coming to grips with an admittedly complex and disturbing social problem." World

Dr. Clark related further that "No student of social change or knowledgable layman expects significant changes in social patterns will occur 'overnight' or 'immediately.' All changes, including social changes, require time. To state that they must be gradual is to state the obvious in a way that affronts intelligence."

"Specifically," the speaker asserted, "the issue in the desegregation of American public schools is not whether time will be required for the transition from segregated to non-segregated schools, but how much time is necessary and will be required to complete this transition in a given school district."

In evaluating the meaning "gradualism," the crucial questions which reasonable men of goodwill must ask and answer, the speaker declared, are:

"1. What specific steps toward desegregation are being and will be taken within a given period of time?

"2. What specific administrative changes and procedures are essential to assure an effective transition from segregated to non-segregated schools?"

r. Clark was introduced by Mrs. Ruby Hurley, executive secretary, Southern Region NAACP.

General Mark Clark Says His Piece On States Rights

Daily World Atlanta Ga. Wed. 5-2-56 P. 6

At a luncheon given on the heels of a recent Memorial Day celebration, General Mark Clark took time out to launch what amounts to an attack on Negro soldiers from the angle of his disbelief in the integration of Negro soldiers. Said the general: "I did not feel that we should integrate then (in 1950) when the order was first placed in effect and I do not think so now."

He based his opinion on his experience while in Italy during World War II, and we quote him, "the worst division I had was a Negro division." He added that the troops (Negro) could not be relied on and that the unit bolted in the face of the enemy. However the general begs the question and loudly so when he says that he did not look at it from a sociological standpoint, when his contention is based on that very theory, human nature being the same among white as well as Negro troops and since fear is fear and bolting is bolting.

General Clark betrays the motive of his position when he would counter along with this serious indictment of the finest courage and the apex of bravery according to records, when he referred to current racial problems with: "I believe in states rights, I believe problems are best settled where they are best understood."

So there we have somewhat of an unheard of before indictment of the standard and stamina of Negro soldiers.

The late Theodore Roosevelt certainly would not agree with him when he left on record such a fine tribute to Negro soldiers during the Spanish-American War; of how their valor and fortitude saved many a day during that conflict. Not even the late President Woodrow Wilson left such an indictment on the courage of those brave veterans to whom he is reported to have referred to as dependable and worthy of guarding his own life.

General John J. Pershing's many references to Negro soldiers should give comfort to those brave boys who remained loyal throughout the trying ordeal of one of the greatest conflicts this country ever witnessed, when they fought like tigers and accepted quarters and services below that of German prisoners of war.

Now for General Clark to come along and make at this or any other time, such a blanket of serious indictments without one attempt at documentary proof is both unfortunate and unfair. It is not only that, but it is a contribution to the quarter and comfort of the enemies of our systems who strove to stir up in the Negro soldier just what General Clark would offer at this crucial time without an attempt to prove by army records and court-martial photostats what he would hurl in the faces of those millions of black boys who stood by the flag and died on the field of battle.

In the face of strict army regulations, with stern and certain penalties for what General Clark alleges, no person of army statue should throw out blanket remarks with no documentary proof to underwrite his contention.

That truly was something poured in the wounds of injury.

May 11 Issue Points Out What Is Bad About Life In Harlem, Giving Views Of Borough President Hulan Jack; Also Compliments Southern Progress In Handling Desegregation; Suggests Our Area Muzzle Its Hothead Politicians

Segregation is not confined to the South, alone, says COLLIER'S Magazine in its May 11 edition.

The magazine begins its editorial with a question from Bourough President Hulan Jack, a Negro, whose prominence as a Democrat politician has been widely heralded. The quotation is as follows:

"If our new buildings (in Harlem) are not to be the racial ghettos of the future, we must within the next five years make a start in desegregation in Harlem."

Thus decent housing in Harlem and other sections of the North, has become as serious a matter with Northern Negroes as desegregation in public school education is with Negroes Down South.

The Collier's editorial goes on to say:

"The (Borough President Jack's comment) is of course a backhanded concession that not very much of a start has yet been made toward desegregation in Harlem, where a third of a million Negroes live, some in incredible squalor, in an area rigidly and purposefully hemmed in by the white portions of the community.

". . . Negroes can go far in Manhattan: more often they are locked, by social circumstances into the dismal estate to which they were born.

The housing problem to which Mr. Jack refers, of course refers to housing for the homes of the people. But Harlem leaders do not know, probably, that a large number of Negroes from the South who regularly visit Harlem are amazed to find out that "housing" is especially bad as to the public schools. This causes these visitors to express doubt as to the quality of education that colored children can get in these run-down and uninspiring school buildings. And the kind of school integration characteristic of Harlem affords nothing like a fair proportion of the jobs for colored teachers and principals, nor is the fairness rule observed in the appointment of teachers to jobs in other sections of New York City.

Among comments and conclusions reached by COLLIERS in its editorial are the following:

"So there is no clear-cut cleavage, say, along the Mason-Dixon line, between prejudice and tolerance. The differences are of a degree and in some times these differences, as between north and south, are slight. For the South is making progress, in its own way. Integration, at the school level is proceeding in Kentucky, West Virginia, Tennssee Missouri, Oklahoma, Maryland and Delaware; Arkansas has desegredated its State University; more significantly still, Louisiana, North Carolina and Florida are all approaching with earnestness and responsibility the difficult task of compliance with the Supreme Court's decision.

"Those decisions themselves were more temperate themselves than some of the curbstone interpretations rendered by zealous laymen in their wake.

"They enunciated, so far as public schools are concerned, the simple American principles of equal rights.

"At the same time they acknowledged that no law can be written to compel a state of mind or heart. This was the wisdom prompting the doctrine of 'fllexibility' or gradualness, in application of the principle.

"Now if the attitude of the South's is gauged on the basis of the utterances of the more vocal politicians, a rabble-rouser and hotheads, a plausible case can be made for despair in the matter of noncompliance.

"But if the 'attitude of the North' is assumed to be indicated by the sporadic muggings and window smashings and race riots in these areas, one can as readily leap to conclusions there is no hope, anywhere, for integration.

"We do not agree certainly with the often-voiced theory that desegregation inthe South is exclusively the South's own business: injustice anywhere in the United States has inevitable impact upon the whole nation's reputation and welfare.

"Still, we have little patience with some of our smug brethren in the North who point the finger of shame at the South and ignore bigotry in the next block. In fact we sometimes wonder if there's anything wrong with the South that the muzzling of a few score Southern politicians wouldn't cure.

"At any rate the solution of segregation will never be found in indignant carping and angry recriminations.'"

COLLIERS thus quite intelligently deals with what to do about the problem of desegregation in school matters. But the great magazine leaves much to be desired when it infers that desegregation of "trolleys or restaurants" should also be given the gradualism treatment.

That, of course is ridiculous and is far out of line with what the Supreme Court has ruled and recommended.

Editor Sees Political Revolt As Result Of Racial Turmoil

Times 6-7-56

NEW YORK, June 6 (AP) — A leading Southern editor said today the solution to racial turmoil in the South "lies in the moderates," but that they are fast being silenced by pressure from extremists.

C. A. McKnight, editor of the Charlotte, N.C. Observer, said that without more support, the present "retreat of Southern moderates may become a rout, at incalculable cost to the entire nation."

In an article in the current issue of Collier's magazine on the "Troubled South," he said the Southerner accustomed to standing on middle ground is finding it "fast shrinking from beneath him."

"Strong pressure from the extremes is forcing him to shut up, or join the resistance movement," McKnight said, and he cited examples of publications and individuals he said had ceased advocating constructive steps.

SERIOUS ERROR

McKnight said it would be "a serious error to underestimate the strength and the sincerity of the resistance movement that has swept across the South in the last two years" against racial integration.

Despite the coolness of responsible Southern political leaders to a third-party movement in 1956, he said "the ingredients are now present" for a major political revolt.

It could be of such proportions, he said, that it would deny either major party a constitutional electoral majority, and throw the 1956 presidential election into Congress, "with results beyond calculation."

VOICES FADING

"If there is hope for the South," McKnight said, "it lies in the moderates who know that the elevation of the American Negro to full equality must be an evolutionary and not a revolutionary process."

But besides the fading out of voices of moderation, and the building up of the "resistance camp" to any school desegregation whatever, McKnight noted this tense new factor:

"The disappointment, resentment and bitterness the Negro Southerner feels because of the dashing of his hopes for full legal equality and full human dignity.

"At the moment, no one can say whether this resentment will express itself on a region - wide basis in terms of the solidarity of the Montgomery, Ala., bus boycott. But it is a possibility.

McKnight said the situation "can get worse, and that "thoughtless or deliberate acts by all-or-nothing advocates of either viewpoint could provoke grave cicil strife."

NEW YORK—"It would be a serious error to underestimate the strength and the sincerity of the resistance movement that has swept across the South in the last two years," a leading Southern newspaper editor warns in the current Collier's.

A. C. McKnight, of the Charlotte Observer, reports that one of the tragic developments of the last six months has been the "quiet exodus of Southern moderates from the public debate forum."

"The Southern moderate," he says, "is finding out that the middle ground upon which he has been accustomed to stand is fast shrinking from beneath him.

"I SEE NO solution in the approach of the militant colored American, however much I may sympathize with his burning desire for equality in fact as well as equality by law," the Southern editor writes.

"In fact, I suggest that the NAACP, having won a significant legal victory, should take off the pressure for a while in sensitive areas and turn its talents to the improving of human relations in areas where desegregation is currently feasible," he writes.

McKnight points out that he sees no solution, either, in the extreme resistance movement exemplified by the White Citizens' Councils.

"The trouble with a resistance movement of this kind is," he says, "that responsible leaders cannot hold in check the thugs and hotheads in the lower echelons who take matters in their own hands."

Moderates Only Hope of South, Says Editor

"If there is hope for the South, it lies in the moderates who know that the elevation of the American Negro to full equality must be an evolutionary and NOT a revolutionary process."

McKNIGHT

These are the words of a distinguished Southern newspaperman who searched his soul and his mind to do justice to the paramount problem of our time: desegregation.

He did so for Collier's Magazine which will publish his thorough and brilliantly written analysis Thursday.

At present, editor of the Charlotte Observer, a Knight newspaper, C. A. McKnight lived and worked in the South most of his life.

Prior to his association with The Observer, he was executive director of the Southern Education Reporting Service. That agency was set up to report to Southern newspapers on developments following the Supreme Court's segregation rulings in 1954.

McKnight, who delves deeply into the extreme of emotions which have sprung up on both sides of the conflict, says:

"The thoughtful man cannot but be deeply disturbed as he looks across the Southern region today and compares what he sees with what he saw two short years ago."

And he explains why.

"In the spring of 1954," McKnight says, "the South was moving with assurance and excitement into the most promising, most fascinating stage of a regional history that had been long on fascination and short on promise.

"Industry was expanding and spreading from the cities to the countrysides. Agriculture was growing out of the bondage of single cash crops and hand labor. Automobiles and airplanes were breaking down the barriers of transportation. Southerners were leaving the stage of historical backwardness. They were on the move economically, politically and even in race relations.

"Slowly but surely, the Negro was getting a chance at decent employment. He was moving into better housing. He was voting in ever larger numbers."

The region was booming in every respect, McKnight recalls.

"The day was in sight when the South would win its long, uphill struggle to full economic partnership with the rest of the nation," he writes.

Then came the Supreme Court decisions of 1954 and 1955 on the desegregation of schools.

And with them, McKnight points out, came a new "ugly race tension, stirred by hatred, bitterness and fear; individual and mob violence, and political demagoguery of the shabbiest kind."

Consequently, he adds, life in the South today is one of bewilderment and dismay about such a great change in so abrupt a period of time.

While whites and Negroes continue to go about their business as usual, the race issue is again always beneath the surface.

Up to that point, McKnight explains, the pattern of desegregation had been clear. It had been accomplished or was in the process of being accomplished in the border states.

"A 17-state area had thus been fragmentized and there no longer was a Solid South but many Souths," he says.

From the outset, "a hard core of Deep South states—Georgia, South Carolina, Alabama, Mississippi and Louisiana—had made it clear that they would evade" and fight the Supreme Court decision.

But Oklahoma, Kentucky, Arkansas and Texas were well on the road to desegregation. Virginia, North Carolina, Florida and Tennessee were following a wait-and-see policy.

Since then, McKnight writes, Virginia, North Carolina and Florida have moved into the resistance camp. Arkansas and Texas are headed in the same direction. And what will happen in Tennessee, no one knows. And, he adds, it would be a serious error to underestimate the grim determination behind the resistance movement.

He explains that there are four basic reasons for this fact:

Politics; the class, social and cultural cleavages between Southern whites and Negroes; the arithmetic of numbers and finally the sex angle.

But more tragic yet, to McKnight, has been "the quiet exodus from the public debate forum of Southern moderates."

They have found out that "the middle ground" on which they have been standing is shrinking from beneath them. Extremism has become the pass word of the hour.

What is the solution?

McKnight says: "A wise and experienced newspaperman suggested to me that we may be making a mistake assuming that there IS an answer to the race problem. Some problems, he said, have no answer save time."

However, "the American democracy has never relied on time alone to solve its problems," replies McKnight. Somehow, it has always produced also the leadership and the machinery to help time along.

"The leadership is here, though latent," McKnight says. "The machinery is faulty, but it can be improved."

But, he adds, "I can see no solution in the approach of the militant Negro. Nor do I find any solution in the extreme resistance movement."

The only hope for the South, he concludes, lies "in the moderates." Let us give them the support they need, the understanding they deserve and the forbearance which makes for patience.

That and that alone can help the South.

U.S. NEGRO HELD NEGLECTED ASSET

Columbia Study Finds Both Races Could Profit Vastly Through Integration

A study just finished at Columbia University describes the 15,000,000 Negroes of the United States as "the single most underdeveloped human resource in the country."

The study cites enormous benefits that would result from full and equal integration of Negroes into the national life. It estimates that the total number of Negro high school students graduated annually could be more than doubled to reach 158,000 at this time of critical manpower shortages if the education of Negroes was raised to the same level as whites.

On the same basis, the report finds that Negro college graduates could be increased from 9,000 to 23,000 annually. The study notes that only three young Negroes out of a hundred are graduated from college.

The report characterizes the gains in the Negro's economic position in the last fifteen years as "spectacular," but it notes the severe discriminations both in the South and the North that still hamper Negro potentialities.

Progress in recent years is attributed primarily to prosperity rather than to changes in attitudes.

The study foresees further advancement in the status of Negroes as depending to a large extent on continued prosperity and improved utilization by Negroes of the new opportunities now open to them.

Project Started in 1950

The findings of the study are published in a 144-page book entitled "The Negro Potential" by the Columbia University Press. The report was written by Dr. Eli Ginzberg, director of the Conservation of Human Resources Project at the university. He was assisted by James K. Anderson, Dr. Douglas W. Bray and Robert W. Smuts.

The Human Resources project was established by President Eisenhower in 1950, soon after he became President of Columbia, and reflected his concern with manpower wastage in World War II. The project has published the results of several other studies and is continuing its researches in other phases of manpower utilization.

Fifteen of the country's major business and industrial companies supported the project, along with foundations, trade unions and the Federal Government. Dr. Ginzberg is professor of economics in the Graduate School of Business at Columbia.

The assessment of Negro potentialities is predicated on the scientific theory that there are no differences in the basic intelligence or capacities of different racial groups.

The report rebuts the view of General Mark Clark that Negroes are inferior to whites as soldiers. The study affirms that the record of Negroes was "less good" than that of white troops in World War II but says that this is to be explained by the handicaps Negroes brought from civilian life and the segregated pattern of their utilization.

The survey notes the "amazing rapidity" with which desegregation occurred in the armed forces in the Korean war. It cites evidence that this integration made a difference and that Negro combatants did well in Korea.

Armed Forces Aid Integration

Integration in the armed forces is credited with being a major contribution toward general progress in integration.

"The armed forces have not only strengthened the nation by strengthening themselves," the report says, "but have taken leadership in showing the nation what good will and determination can accomplish."

"The Negro Potential" includes findings on studies of Negro soldiers not heretofore published. The Department of the Army made special material available for the report.

Inferior schooling, segregated living and all other forms of discrimination against the Negro are described in the report as having produced lowered capabilities and psychological handicaps for Negroes. The study holds that Negroes will not be able to display capabilities at a level with whites until they are fully integrated into the society of their country.

The report emphasizes that changes must come not only in schools but also within the Negro community itself in terms of family life and child upbringing. This is regarded as necessary if Negroes are to be prepared adequately to take advantage of new opportunities.

If prosperity continues, the authors believe, the developing Southern counter-action to integration will not be successful. They believe pressures from every side "will induce the South to steer away from a self-destructive recalcitrance."

The study maintains that the present wastage of human resources in the United States can result only in a more vulnerable security position. The study says that failure in this country to provide true equality for Negroes will weaken the free world in its struggle with Soviet Russia and the minds and hearts of millions of men not yet committed to either side.

Study Describes Negroes In U. S. As Most Wasted Human Resource

Only Then Can Negro Reach Full Usefulness to Nation, Report Says

Columbia University Study Calls for Thorough Integration

Herald

NEW YORK — (UP) — The nation's 15 million Negroes are its "single most underdeveloped human resource" and they cannot reach their full potential usefulness until they are thoroughly integrated with the white population, a Columbia University study said Monday. 7-3-54

The study is a part of a project inaugurated by President Eisenhower in 1950, when he was president of the university, to explore manpower wastage, a problem which seriously troubled him as a result of his World War II experience.

Ocala, Fla.

It is published in a 144-page book entitled "The Negro Potential" and written by Dr. Eli Ginzberg, director of the project and professor of economics in Columbia's graduate school of business.

Aug. 3-4-5-54

The project is financed by contributions from 15 industrial firms, foundations, labor unions and the federal government.

The report said that if education for Negroes were raised to the level of that now available for whites, the annual rate of Negro high school and college graduates would be more than doubled.

It said the Negro's economic position improved spectacularly in the last 15 years but attributed this more to general prosperity than to any change in the Negro's position.

The report, written before Gen. Mark Clark's recent attack on integration in the armed forces, contradicts Clark's estimate of its effect.

It said that records of Negro troops in World War II was "less good" than that of white troops, but attributed the difference to the handicaps brought from civilian life by the Negro soldiers and the fact that they were segregated.

It said that records of Korea, where Negroes were integrated, showed a marked improvement.

"The armed forces have not only strengthened the nation by strengthening themselves," the report said, "but have taken leadership in showing the nation what good will and determination can accomplish."

The report said there must also be changes in the Negro's community and family life if the race is to take advantage of new opportunities.

"Only when Negro and white families can live together as neighbors, when Negro children and white children can play together, study together, go to the same church—only then will the Negro grow up properly prepared for his place in the world of work," the report said.

Segregationists Hope to Win Politically Without 3rd Party

ATLANTA, Ga. — Southern leaders who oppose the Supreme Court on school segregation hope to win their fight on the political level.

But they intend to do battle within the established two-party system.

There is little sentiment for a third party in the deep South states.

COLLIER

Governors and other political leaders say they have their best chance go get their points across as Democrats.

Segregationists believe their strength in the Democratic party is decisive. They point out that signers of the South's manifesto in Congress included chairmen of 9 of the 15 Senate standing committees, and 8 of the 19 in the House.

In the four states most likely to breed a third party on the race issue — South Carolina, Georgia, Alabama and Mississippi — the political leaders hope to remain Democrats — if they can.

A Georgia political leader said:

"There is no grass roots movement for a third party here. There is no sentiment for such a step except as a last resort.

"Our aim is to get what we want at the national convention. We believe we are in a strategic bargaining position."

GOV. JAMES E. Folsom of Alabama is in the battle of his political career for national Democratic Executive committeemen. The sole issue is segregation.

A close aide said Folsom would welcome a third party as the ideal forum for settling the race issue. But he sees no prospect of such a movement.

South Carolina's Sen. J. Strom Thurmond, presidential nominee of the Dixiecrats in 1948, said he knows of no third party movement at this time.

Mississippi is deeply involved in its local solution of the race issue. Associates of Gov. J. P. Coleman said there is little likelihood third party sentiment will develop unless the South is rebuffed on states rights and civil rights at the convention.

In that case there may be a disastrous walkout.

THE THIRD PARTY, problem is only one of the hot political questions facing the segregation states. The upsurge of Sen. Estes Kefauver of Tennessee for the Democratic presidential nomination is a worry.

Kefauver's stand on segregation is not acceptable to the defiant states. He did not sign the manifesto and is on record for compliance with the Supreme Court ruling.

While campaigning in Florida, he was peppered on all sides by questions on segregation. He defended his position as "just, sound and right."

"Since I have taken what some refer to as the national viewpoint, I frequently hear I am not acceptable to the South," he said.

"That is political propaganda."

ADLAI STEVENSON, who had the support of most of the state political organizations, has lost ground. With an eye on his Southern supporters, he urged "moderation" on the race issue.

This has not been enough for some of the Southern states. The pressure is on for a stronger position in line with Southern views. This would weaken Stevenson's position with the Northern wing.

Integration War Baffles Both Sides

Miami, Fla.

Mon. 4-9-56

By BERT COLLIER

ATLANTA, Ga.—People are confused in the Southern states which insist on keeping their segregated schools.

White citizens are worried by demands of their Negro neighbors for immediate full equality in the use of all public facilities.

COLLIER

They are confused by politicians who say means can be found to circumvent the Supreme Court decisions.

Negro citizens are also confused since their ancient hope for better education, legal equality and civic responsibility was brought closer to realization by a series of court decrees.

There is great pressure that they insist on immediate action.

Both races are astonished by the heat that has been generated. Neither side realized the issues were so important to the other.

They see the destruction of a working relationship, tolerable if not satisfactory which had grown up through the years, between whites and Negroes in most Southern communities.

Nothing has been found yet to replace it.

Over and over again, hundreds of persons in seven defiant states made the point that relations have worsened.

There is no channel of communication between persons of good will in the two groups.

THE VOICES heard are usually those of extremists.

A Negro college professor in Georgia said:

"This is a tremendous ordeal for our people.

"They must forsake an established relationship with the white community. They sense the anger and hurt of their white neighbors, and are inclined not to push too hard, trusting that time will bring social justice.

"But pressures in the Negro community are almost beyond belief. Anyone who does not go along with the demand for quick action is a renegade.

"But make no mistake about it. Negroes have been sold on the idea that the future and well-being of their families lie along the road of swift desegregation of schools, recreation and transportation.

"They are organizing. The law is on their side. They are now discovering for the first time that they have economic power.

"They will get what they are fighting for."

WHITE CITIZENS in the defiant states are frightened by that point of view. They fear it may be correct. They are afraid because the white South, they say, actually has much to lose from integration.

This is the way one Atlanta man put it:

"The South is the domain of public education and recreation. Private schools and clubs don't exist outside a few large cities.

"All classes, from governors' sons to workmen's daughters, attend the segregated public schools, parks, swimming

For those who have lived and benefited by this system for years, escape from an unpleasant integrated situation by recourse to private facilities, as so often happens in the North, is impossible.

The South is the historic domain of churches in which religion is an emotional rather than an intellectual experience.

"Though churches generally have accepted integration as a legal and moral principle, the practical application is not easy in small town local churches.

"THE NEGRO, too, has much to lose through integration.

"Negro schools have Negro teachers and principals. In most Southern communities, these educators are the foundation of a well-trained, professional group generally aloof from racial tensions. They raise standards throughout the Negro community.

"They have been proud and secure, until now. They see that in schools which have integrated, Negro teachers and principals lose jobs, and they are worried."

Average citizens who are in the middle of this segregation struggle are not allowed to stay there.

"At the outset, a large number of men and women are willing to accept the Supreme Court decisions and try to work them out gradually," said the head of a fact-gathering agency here.

"When the Supreme Court decision was announced, they made up their minds to slow, reluctant compliance.

"EXTREMISTS who talk of immediate court suits, with enforcement of decrees by armed federal marshals, are driving them to the die-hard segregationists.

"Activity of White Citizens Councils, who set out to get jobs and hurt businesses of Negroes who sign school petitions, is solidifying the Negroes.

"People of good will of both races are gravely troubled.

"Most Southerners — even some of the extreme racists— want to do the right thing. They want to be good Americans first, and after that to keep segregation if they can.

"But pressures are destroying reason. The people of the middle Southern states are getting angry.

"The situation will get worse before it gets better."

Both Sides Use Boycott in Segregation Dispute

ATLANTA, Ga. — The two-edged sword of economic boycott has been discovered by both sides in the dispute over segregation.

COLLIER

Several defiant states are deeply troubled by the attacks and counter-attacks on the pocketbooks of merchants and individual citizens.

Citizens councils in several areas have urged reprisals against national firms reportedly making gifts to the National Assn. for the Advancement of Colored People.

Negroes boycott firms supporting the Citizens Councils. In at least one place, Orangeburg, S.C., a blacklist of merchants was placed in the mailboxes of Negro homes.

Sometimes this campaign penalizes merchants from both sides or borders on the ridiculous. Herald P.27-A

In Memphis, a segregationist group known as Pro-Southerners threatened to boycott a bakery for sponsorship of a TV program. It was the re-run of an ancient movie series, the "Our Gang" comedies which had a Negro child in a leading role. Sun. 4-8-56

The bakery withdrew sponsorship when sales fell off. The TV station continued the film as a sustaining program. Fla.

Rumor, which psychiatrists recognize as a symptom of tension and unrest, is widespread. Many of the economic boycotts are based on misinformation.

Ford Motor Co. has been hard hit because of reported grants made by the Ford Foundation's, Fund for the Republic, over which it has no control, to pro-integration groups.

A Mississippi dealer said his salesmen were ordered out of some business houses. A dealer in Charleston, S. C., complained to the local newspaper of loss of sales. A Selma, Ala., dealer, said sales were off in February. He blamed criticism of the Ford Foundation.

At least two companies, the makers of Philip Morris cigarettes and Falstaff Beer, have sent executives into the South to deny reports they made donations to the fight on segregation.

Sometimes these reports almost get out of hand.

Howard Hill, American Automobile Assn. representative at Jackson, Miss., said he had received letters from affiliates asking about reported violence to drivers of out-of-state cars. Hill said the reports were absurd.

A report spread in several states that drivers of Fords were denied service in some Mississippi filling stations.

Admitting he had heard the reports "many times," and had taken the trouble to run them down, Bagby Hall, of Jackson, one of the South's largest Mercury dealers, said he found them "vicious lies."

Sen. W. B. Alexander charged on the floor of the Mississippi legislature that the economic boycotts and the rumors on which many were based "are pushed and peddled by an admitted ex-Communist from St. Louis."

"It is unfortunate," said Alexander, "that these economic reprisals have been injected at the very time when we are engaged in a death struggle in maintaining a way and philosophy of life."

Another aspect to the boycotts is fear.

Merchants in a Mississippi town discovered loss of business was due almost entirely to a drop-off in sales of heavy goods to Negro customers.

Alarmed, they asked a Negro leader for the reason.

"They are afraid to buy," said the spokesman.

"Why should they obligate themselves for refrigerators, stoves, automobiles, televisions, if racial tensions might result in forcing them out of the state?"

This trend is increasing, according to George L. Mitchell, executive director of the Southern Regional Council, an interracial fact-gathering agency here.

"More and more business leaders are beginning to say openly that tensions and violence of racial controversy are bad for business in the growing industrial society we are developing," said Mitchell.

His organization sent out a special bulletin on the subject to chambers of commerce in Alabama, Georgia, Louisiana, Mississippi, North and South Carolina.

The spread of boycotts, the agency said, "threaten the moral and economic well-being of the South."

"Reasonable men and women are disturbed by the extremist views which now dominate the public life of our region.

"Not only the gains we have made are imperiled by today's secessionist policies.

"Will the new industries sought by the southern states be eager to build expensive plants in areas where the existence of public schools is in doubt?

"Can we hope to attract and hold the talent we need to develop our resources — the ablest teachers, scientists, professional people, executives in business and industry?"

Mitchell said the use of economic pressure will continue to spread, particularly in the form of the bus boycott still in effect in Montgomery.

"The idea is alive throughout the whole Negro community of the South," he said. "There will be more and more of it."

Big Convention Here Is Opened With a Message From Eisenhower

By Marie Smith
Staff Reporter

Daughters of the American Revolution opened their 65th Continental Congress last night at Constitution Hall, planning to observe a hands-off policy on the segregation issue, although several southern delegations have requested adoption of a resolution favoring segregation.

Mrs. T. B. Throckmorton of Des Moines, Iowa, chairman of the Resolutions Committee, said its 53 members voted unanimously to reject the requests from the southern states for resolutions opposing integration in public schools.

May Try on the Floor

"We don't believe we should handle anything on which the Supreme Court has handed down a decision," she explained. No requests for resolutions upholding the decision were received, she added.

It is possible, Mrs. Throckmorton said, for a delegate to bring the subject up on the floor today after the reading of resolutions offered by her Committee. But, she added, such a resolution from the floor could be considered only after a two-thirds vote of permission.

"After our experience with Marian Anderson, we wouldn't think of doing anything along those lines," Mrs. Throcmorton said.

In 1939 the DAR refused to rent Constitution Hall for an Easter Sunday concert by Marian Anderson, and she sang instead on the steps of Lincoln Memorial.

Eisenhower Message

Greetings from President Eisenhower were read to the Congress by President General Gertrude S. Carraway at the opening last night. The President's message said:

"Mrs. Eisenhower and I extend to you warm greetings. All of you, and your fellow members throughout the country, have my best wishes for the successful continuance of your efforts to increase our people's awareness of the events which led to our Nation's independence, to strengthen their devotion to liberty and justice, and to uphold a high ideal of citizenship. I know you will have an inspiring meeting."

D.A.R. Ducks Taking Stand On Integration

Courier-Journal
Louisville, Ky.
Wed. 4-18-56

Southern Members Had Asked Resolution

Washington, April 17 (U.P.) — The Daughters of the American Revolution today backed away from Southern members' requests for a resolution opposing the Supreme Court's desegregation ruling.

Mrs. T. B. Throckmorton, Des Moines, Iowa, chairman of the resolutions committee, said its members unanimously decided that the explosive issue "is not D.A.R. business."

"After our experience with Marian Anderson, the committee decided to steer clear of the issue," she said.

The D.A.R. became the center of a national furor in 1939 when it refused to rent Constitution Hall for an Easter concert by the Negro singer. She sang from the steps of the Lincoln Memorial.

Resolution On U.N.

Mrs. Throckmorton said the 4,000 delegates attending the sixty-fifth annual Continental Congress definitely will consider a resolution clarifying their position on the United Nations. They will vote tomorrow on resolutions presented today.

The D.A.R.'s position is "misinterpreted" as opposition to the United Nations and "even our own members are foggy on our stand," Mrs. Throckmorton said.

The organization does not oppose the United Nations as a "parliament of sovereign nations," but it does oppose any loss of United States sovereignty to world government organizations, she explained.

Message From Ike

The congress opened last night at Constitution Hall.

President Eisenhower sent his best wishes and said he hopes for the D.A.R.'s continued success in increasing Americans' "awareness of the events which led to our nation's independence."

President General Gertrude S. Carraway urged delegates to help spread "the fire of freedom through America" to combat "insidious ideologies."

Exchange Of Courtesies Causes Women Voters Ouster From Capitol

Daily World Atlanta, Ga.

BY GEORGE M. COLEMAN

Segregationists plead for separation of races, but a group of Negro women were left wondering yesterday if the so-called rule really means flee whenever a white persons comes near you.

The question came after the League of Negro Women Voters was asked to move from a segregated spot in the balcony of the state capitol when an usher noticed a group of white women had joined them with coffee and friendly conversation.

"They asked us to leave our seats," Mrs. Ruby Blackburn, president of the voters group said, "We left the building."

HAD BEEN SEATED BY USHERS

Mrs. Blackburn said an usher had first placed them in the segregated balcony. A short time later, she said, members of the League of Women Voters (white) joined them, exchanged literature and chatted during the session. The white women also offered them coffee.

Upon seeing the Negro and white women together, Mrs. Blackburn said, a second usher came up and "informed us that colored people couldn't sit on that side by the white women."

The president, however, asserted that they would continue to attend legislative hearings.

"We're going to observe the sessions as long as they are there," she said.

Bowling alley loses appeal against discrimination count

Afro-American p. 6 Sat. 1-14-56 Baltimore, Md.

WASHINGTON

The Central Amusement Company, convicted of discriminating against the minority race, lost an appeal to the Municipal Court of Appeals, Tuesday, in which they alleged they were themselves the victims of discrimination.

38a

The company was found guilty last December on two counts of violating an 1870 ruling prohibiting any place of public amusement from barring facilities to members of the colored race.

OPERATORS of the Lucky Strike Bowling Alley, 1700 block 14th St., NW, where the refusal allegedly occurred, the Corporation was given a suspended $55 fine on each count.

The corporation charged in their appeal that the 1870 law is discriminatory.

They stated that the Board of Aldermen and Board of Common Council, of he City of Washington, only had legislative authority over the old city boundaries, which now constitute a part of the District. The Lucky Strike Bowling Alley is located within those boundaries.

38 * * *

THE corporation alleged that the law was never extended to include territory formerly composing the County of Washington, in which several competing bowling alleys are located.

The court responded that the company made no claim that the regulation if applied to it, would cause any loss of business or would operate to the advantage of its competitors to whom the regulation is inapplicable.

"Appellant's complaint is not with the regulation itself but with its failure to operate in all parts of the District," the opinion observes.

THE COURT further notes that the regulation operates uniformly on all those engaged in the same business within a certain portion of the District.

Although the opinion admits that the general laws governing old Washington were never extended by Congress to include the County of Washington, it concludes:

"We are unable to say that the regulation, under consideration because restricted to a part of the District, is so unjustifiable as to be a violation of due process."

The corporation also contended that the ruling applied only to "any person or persons" and not to corporations. It was further alleged by the appellant that the alley was not licensed as a place of amusement, because bowling is a recreation and is not therefore affected by the amusement laws.

The Appeals Court over-ruled both contentions.

'Washington isn't becoming integrated—it's changing'

Afro-American Sat. 11-24-56 P. 18

Baltimore, Md.

WASHINGTON

"Washington isn't becoming integrated— its changing."

Sterling Tucker, 32, newly appointed executive secretary of the D. C. Urban League, thus stated one of the major problems facing the social welfare organization in the nation's capitol.

Mr. Tucker did not say directly, but he indicated later that he mean the city's neighborhoods are changing from white to colored families. His scholarly boyish face took on a determined expression as he continued:

"We have to stop this great exodus.

"White property owners must be made to understand that presence of a colored family in their neighborhood does not mean the lost property values. It is the exodus of the surburbs which causes the drop in values."

The Urban League executive said he thinks the civic associations can do a great deal to stop this changing pattern.

* * * *

THE NEW secretary was speaking at a press conference Friday at the League headquarters, 612 K St., NW.

Following the conference Mr. Tucker was introduced to community leaders at a tea at Howard University School of Social Work. He assumed his duties Oct. 15.

In addition to the flight to the suburbs, other problems listed by Mr. Tucker as confronting the local League are pregnant girls in schools, vocational guidance for school pupils, the adoption program in the District, and employment.

Mr. Tucker said the Urban League needs to recognize there is a problem in the unwed mothers reported in the schools.

"We can help with strengthening the family life conditions which would prevent such situations."

In regard to vocational guidance, Mr. Tucker also stated:

"The Davis Hearing pointed up the need for a fresh, hard look at the problems in our schools.

He said:

"The problem in the adoption program is that there are a lot of babies available for whom there are not enough parents.".... ....

The executive secretary said he did not list employment among the priority problems, because the placement of colored persons in pioneer jobs is a basic function with the League. Mr. Tucker said most of his experience has been in industrical areas.

"The reasons for a colored person not being accepted in a government position, are the same as those for private industry.

"I think the problem here is not one of getting colored persons into jobs but of getting them upgraded—."

Mr. Tucker said he became familiar with the problems of Washington through previous trips to the city and through an interchange of ideas with other secretaries during his 12 years of Urban League work.

He began his career in the League in his home town of Akron, Ohio, where he worked in the industrial relations department while getting his B. A and M. A. degrees at the University of Akron.

Mr. Tucker also worked in the national headquarters of the League in New York on a six-month research project and was loaned to the state with the International Educational Organization in India for six months.

* * *

"BEFORE I went abroad I thought race relations was the number one domestic problem. Now I am convinced it is the number one international problem," he stated.

Mr. Tucker came to Washington from his post as executive secretary of the Canton, Ohio Urban League.

"We had a difficult time persuading them to let him go—but he was the man we wanted out of 15 applicants, Dr. R. Frank Jones, president of the League, stated.

"We are very fortunate in having a man like Mr. Tucker to keep the momentum going," stated Dr. Caroline Ware, president of the board.

The new secretarl succeeds Lisle S. Carter, attorney, who resigned in August to return to private law practice in New York.

Dr. Ware, a member of the faculty of the School of Social Work, Dr. Jones and Miss Pearl Watson, secretary to Mr. Tucker, attended the press conference.

One other member of the Washington staff is Mrs. Margery Ware, director of community organizations. Mr. Tucker said there are no immediate plans to add to the administrative staff. His salary is $8,000 per year.

"Our main job now is to convince the community that by supporting the programs of the League, the organization can become self sustaining through savings to the community in reduced crime, health problem solutions and housing improvement," Dr. Jones said.

Commissioners Extend 1869 Law Against Segregation To Entire District

By Grace Bassett
Staff Reporter

The Commissioners yesterday banned segregation in places of amusement throughout the District of Columbia.

Their decision extended to the whole city an 1869 law against such segregation in the "old city," bounded roughly by Rock Creek, Florida ave., and the Anacostia River.

The action was a second major step in the desegregation of the city's licensed establishments, comparing in import with the Supreme Court's ruling in the Thompson Restaurant case, against race discrimination in eating places here in June, 1953.

It killed the major question in a court case testing the 1869 Act—whether the ban could be applied to one part of the District and not to another.

Attorneys Charles E. Ford and H. Clifford Allder contended in a United States Court of Appeals brief that a city law must apply equally throughout the city. Otherwise, discrimination would be legal in one theater and not at another, Ford contended.

Alley Barred Negroes

He represented the Central Amusement Co., Inc., owner of a bowling alley at 1729 14th st. nw., in the "old city." Negroes were refused admission there in 1955, following public announcement by the Commissioners that the old law would be enforced.

The District initiated court action to make the alley conform and, so far, Municipal Courts have upheld the old law's validity and forbade discrimination at the alley. Alley managers petitioned the Appeals Court for review.

City briefs due Monday will argue that the Commissioners' action yesterday rendered the major question of the case "moot," Hubert Pair, assistant corporation counsel, said.

Ford, however, said the defense is studying whether city heads legally could extend the old law. If they lack such power, only Congress could properly take the action the Commissioners took yesterday, he explained, and such is the composition of Congress now that passage of race-angled laws appears unlikely. His studies of the question will determine his future course in the case, Ford said.

Called Police Regulation

Pair said defense investigation of the city's regulatory power will determine only that the commissioners are on firm ground. They have explicit power to promulgate police regulations and the regulation in question comes under that heading, Pair said.

Extension of the segregation ban has been urged for two years by the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People.

Robert E. McLaughlin, President of the Board of Commissioners, said the city heads' action was unanimous. They passed the regulation within two weeks of a visit from NAACP representatives, who again urged Commissioners to heed President Eisenhower's call for a nend to vestige of segregation in the Nation's capital.

The only other major question in the bowling alley case is whether an alley is, in the meaning of the old Act, a place of amusement. Lectures, concerts, exhibitions, circuses and theatrical entertainments are specifically cited. Although bowling alleys were operating in 1869, the law did not list them, Ford said. He maintained bowling alleys did not hold amusement licenses, paid no amusement taxes and charged no admission.

Head of NAACP Charges Bias By Pentagon

Star P. 22-A
Fri. 5-4-56
Washington, D.C.

The president of the District branch of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People last night charged the Defense Department with condoning segregation because it will not prevent Police Boys' Club solicitations in its buildings.

The charge, made by Eugene Davidson, was based on a letter from Assistant Secretary of Defense Carter L. Burgess to Mr. Davidson. The letter was a reply to Mr. Davidson's letter pointing to segregation in the Police Boys' Clubs in Washington.

The Defense Department will not prevent Washington police from asking money for the Police Boys' Club in the department's buildings, Mr. Burgess' letter said.

Mr. Davidson described as "doubletalk" a letter on the same subject from Maxwell Rabb, special assistant to President Eisenhower for minority problems.

No Law Violated

The letter from Mr. Burgess, dated April 23 and released by Mr. Davidson, said:

"The Department of Defense has not been apprised of any violation of law on the part of the Metropolitan Police Boys' Club. Accordingly, there is no valid basis for denying the Police Department the privilege they have had for a number of years to solicit funds in a public building such as the Pentagon.

"The issue you raised is between your association and the Metropolitan Police Department."

The letter also said "I do not believe it would be in the best interest of either your group or the department to use the authority of the Secretary of Defense in a manner which may be construed as an unwarranted exercise of the enforcement authority of other agencies of the Government."

New Hope Seen

On the action of the District Commissioners yesterday banning segregation in amusement places throughout the District, Mr. Davidson said:

"This action by the Commissioners gives us new hope that the new Board of Commissioners will do more than the last one to follow President Eisenhower's order to strike down every vestige of discrimination in Washington."

The local NAACP branch also announced yesterday that on May 17, the second anniversary of the Supreme Court ruling on school segregation, a drive will be held to supplement the regular $35,000 NAACP membership campaign.

George Fleming, chairman of the "Dollar - Day - for - Defense" drive, announced that the goal is $25,000—to be reached by individual contributions of $1.

About 100,000 addressed and stamped envelopes will be distributed to homes, churches and businesses.

Segregated Boys

Post + Times Herald
P. 26
Wed. 3-7-56

Big Brothers Club of Washington, which calls itself the alumni of the Boys' Club of Washington, is promoting a basketball game between an all-star team from the public high schools and a similar team from the Catholic League. Because of the ascendancy of the teams in the public high schools with predominantly Negro enrollment, many colored players have been chosen for the public school group.

Many colored children from the Washington area will buy tickets and journey to Ft. Myer to see the game. When the game is over, the colored players will be handed a shiny bauble, patted on the back, and told to return again next year to be exploited. The money raised from the game will be used to improve the services of the Boys' Club of Washington, but whenever a dusky face appears at the Boys' Club, the door will be slammed shut. And thus it is that the colored boy serves the purpose of his manipulators and then is told that he is unfit to join the youth of Washington in its daily life.

Little tragedies are enacted each day because of this policy of exclusion by the Washington Boys' Club. Stories are told of little white boys in the southeast area who have tried to take their colored companions to the Eastern branch of the club with them, only to have the latter halted at the door.

There is no scale to measure the depth of hurt in the heart of a boy who is denied his right to love, security, and the full measure of acceptance pledged in the Constitution of the United States and basic to our intrinsic moral beliefs. Likewise, there is no way to measure the harm that is done to those of the privileged group in warped values and a turning away from brotherhood.

In ancient Rome, Spartan slaves were pitted against each other and against beasts at the pleasure of the noblemen. They gave their lives to please the barbaric fancies of their captors. Poetic literature tells of the incident when Spartacus was denied, with cruel contempt, the privilege of burying his friend whom he had killed in the arena. They told him "there are no noblemen but Romans."

In this supposedly enlightened age, in this supposedly democratic country, we see a parallel to this tragic scene. The Board of Education of the District of Columbia saw fit to give its approval to this contest, placing its blessing upon the participation of the public school players and coaches, as well as posting of placards and the sale of tickets in our high schools. When the question of moral values was raised by one member of the board, another blandly commented that the boys did not have to participate if they did not want to. This kind of easy virtue conveniently shifts the responsibility from the shoulders of those who should be most concerned to the shoulders of the trusting young people whom they are pledged to serve and protect.

It is inconceivable how the Board of Education of the District of Columbia could be so unconcerned over a matter of basic morality, supposedly established in the board's high-sounding statement of principles in reference to integration and democratization. The board, nevertheless, sees fit not only to have traffic with undemocratic agencies in our community, but even to plan with them to restage the ancient tragedy of the Roman arena.

The Boys' Club of Washington apparently feels no obligation for the social growth or the general welfare of the colored children of the community. It is almost as if its program deliberately seeks to widen the gap between children in the community. So far as the Boys' Club is concerned the colored child either does not exist or, if existing, is not worthy of notice. This is ethical nihilism.

Rather than face insult on public vehicles, the people of Montgomery, Ala., trudge daily over miles of city streets to assert their belief in the dignity of man. Will the boys of this community give their hearts in this modern Roman arena to fatten the ancient dragons of intolerance?

Group Backs Integration Of Citizen Associations

Star Tues. 5-22-56 P. 26-A

Washington, D.C.

Members of the Shepherd Park Citizens' Association last night supported in part Comissioner Robert E. McLaughlin's suggestion calling for the integration of Washington's civic and citizens' associations.

The citizens' motion asked that the Federation of Citizens' Association delete the word "white" as a criterion of membership. The group also asked that that the word "white," in reference to membership in local citizens' associations, not be a mandatory requirement for association with Federation.

Permissive Move

The group made it clear it is not calling for mass integration in the various associations but that those who wish to integrate should be allowed to do so.

In other business, the citizens amended their by laws, changing the meetings from monthly to four times a year and giving the executive board power to act for the association in an emergency.

The group also voted to support a neighborhood baseball team for the summer and appointed a committee to study the school situation and boundary change at Paul Junior High School after hearing a talk by the principal, Thomas Ferry. The citizens also heard a talk by Milo F. Christiansen, District superintendent of recreation.

President Re-elected

Mrs. Samuel Bigio was re-elected president of the association. Other officers elected were Stanley Hayman, vice president; Frederick Umhau, secretary; Louis Baskin, treasurer; Walter D. Newrath and Comdr. Morton Neely, members of the executive board, and A. L. Villano and Dr. Joseph Manley, delegates to the Federation of Citizens' Association.

Mrs. Bigio conducted the meeting in Shepherd Park School Fourteenth street and Kalmia road N.W.

Seize Photo At Rights Bill Hearing

Defender P. 1 Sat. 5-26-56

Chicago, Ill.

By ROSE McKEE

WASHINGTON — (INS) — Sen. Olin D. Johnston (D) S. C., confiscated last week the film of a cameraman who snapped a picture of the Senator with an attorney for the NAACP.

Johnston, who was presiding at a hearing on civil rights, ordered a guard to take away the film of Theodore Gaffney, a photographer for the NAACP magazine, "Crisis," and the Chicago Defender.

Gaffney had taken a picture of Johnston and NAACP Atty. Clarence Mitchell.

The incident occured just after Atty. Gen. Herbert Brownell, jr., testified in support of President Eisenhower's four-point civil-rights program.

Johnston told newsmen he was acting under authority of judiciary committee chairman James O. Eastland (D) Miss., who announced at the outset that no pictures would be allowed after the hearing got under way.

Eastland left before Brownell completed his testimony and Johnston recessed the hearing so that Senators could go to the floor for votes that were about due.

Mitchell came forward to protest that he had no chance to be heard.

Gaffney said that when he snapped the picture of the Senator and Mitchell, the hearing was already recessed. He charged the incident was an invasion of freedom of the press.

Photographers who regularly cover the senate hearings snapped their pictures of Brownell at the outset and left after Eastland announced no pictures could be taken during the proceedings.

Brownell in his testimony opposed extension of criminal penalties to current "extraordinary sensitive and delicate area of civil rights."

Senator Thomas C. Hennings (D) Mo., referred to the fact that the administration's civil rights program was unveiled only last month.

Brownell reported that the Justice Department in the last three years has had the "most vigorous" civil rights record in its history.

He listed among other things the two-year litigation which led to the Supreme Court's decision against racial segregation in the schools.

But Brownell agreed with Hennings that "these things" were initiated by previous Democratic administrations.

Snapped With Negro, Senator Seizes Film

At Civil Rights Hearing, Johnston Of S.C. Balks Negro Photographer

New York, N.Y.

By The United Press

WASHINGTON, May 16.—Sen. Olin D. Johnston, D., S. C., presiding at a civil rights hearing, today confiscated the film of a Negro photographer who snapped a picture of him with an attorney for the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People. Sen. Johnston said he acted under the authority of Sen. James O. Eastland, D., Miss., chairman of the Senate Judiciary Committee. He said Senator Eastland had directed that no pictures be taken after the committee hearing started.

Herald Tribune—United Press

Sen. Olin D. Johnston

The incident came after the committee heard a plea from Attorney General Herbert Brownell jr. for approval of President Eisenhower's civil rights program, including protection of the Negro's right to vote in both primary and general elections involving Federal offices.

Guard Takes Film

A guard took away two film holders from Theodore Gaffney, a photographer for the N. A. A. C. P. magazine, "Crisis," after Mr. Gaffney had photographed Senator Johnson and N. A. A. C. P. attorney Clarence Mitchell.

Mr. Gaffney contended the hearing had recessed when he took the picture.

The guard who seized the film said Senate Sergeant-at-Arms Joseph C. Duke would decide what to do with it. Senator Johnston told reporters it should be destroyed. Mr. Mitchell insisted the incident was an invasion of freedom of the press and occurred only because Mr. Gaffney is a Negro.

Mr. Duke told reporters later that it was up to Senator Johnston, as acting chairman, to decide what to do with the film. He said the chairman had authority to forbid pictures in the committee room.

Hummon's Clague

Say what you will about Georgia's Herman Talmadge, his impending arrival in Washington as the state's junior senator (he is unopposed in the Nov. 6 general election) has already made him the prime villain-to-be.

For instance, reading The New York Times' editorial analysis of the 35 Senate races, it seems that The Times seeds Hummon the No. 1 nogoodnik ranking over such contenders as McCarthy and Eastland. Discussing the voting theory which argues that you should vote for one candidate or the other merely to insure that the respective party will achieve a majority for organization purposes, The Times says:

. . . According to this reasoning the individual voter would have to decide whether it is better to vote for a Democratic senatorial candidate, and thereby help retain Senator Eastland's chairmanship of the judiciary committee, or to vote for a Republican candidate, and thereby help restore the government operations committee to Senator McCarthy. It seems to us that the sensible thing for the independent voter to do is to weigh each of the candidates on his merits, and not worry about whether the selection would help put Democrats or Republicans in a position to organize Congress.

This is sound advice, but you get the idea that The Times, which has been outspoken in its criticism of both senators, is not as concerned about their future roles in the Senate as, reading on you find, it is distressed over the arrival of Talmadge. Hummon's prospective membership in the Senate The Times dismisses as just plain "horrifying," too terrible to discuss.

Thus Talmadge will go to Washington with a ready-made following, the likes of which few new senators have been able to claim. His every word will be reported and scrutinized for a hint of plans to bomb the U.S. Supreme Court, make off with the hermetically sealed Bill of Rights, or organize a special committee for the rejuvenation of the Confederacy.

Cook Assails 'Do-Nothings' on Segregation

ROME, Ga., Oct. 25 (AP)—The South needs to "evaluate the sincerity of public officials and the press with circumspection" if it wishes to maintain segregation of the races, Atty. Gen. Eugene Cook declared Thursday.

In an address prepared for a luncheon meeting of the Rome Exchange Club, Cook said "moderates" on the segregation issue too often adopt a "do-nothing approach." Such inaction, he added, can "lead to guns, bayonets, tanks and violence" as it did in Tennessee and Kentucky.

He said that the Supreme Court's school desegregation decision "may and can be circumvented honorably and within the law."

"Each new revelation of the serious social problems that are always provoked when the two races are mixed in the school rooms shows conclusively," Cook said, "that we simply cannot afford to comply with the court's decision."

'Do nothing' policy on segregation is called mistake

ROME, Ga., Oct. 25—(AP)—The South needs to "evaluate the sincerity of public officials and the press with circumspection" if it wishes to maintain segregation of the races, Atty. Gen. Eugene Cook declared today.

In an address prepared for a luncheon meeting of the Rome Exchange Club, Cook said "moderates" on the segregation issue too often adopt a "do-nothing approach." Such action, he added, can "lead to guns, bayonets, tanks and violence" as it did in Tennessee and Kentucky.

Cook, an outspoken foe of integration and a leader in the fight to keep the South's traditional segregated schools, charged that Govs. Frank Clement of Tennessee and A. B. Chandler of Kentucky followed an "ostrich doctrine" in dealing with school segregation.

"THE GOOD PEOPLE of those states were lulled to sleep until they felt the sharp and cold points of bayonets in their backs, because they, in their constitutional right, publicly assembled and protested the admission of Negroes to their public white schools," Cook said.

"Those bayonets," he added, "were not thrust . . . on orders from the President of the United States, but rather by the two governors who said, 'We believe in the practice segregation, but there is no concern—let nature take its course—do nothing and say nothing and all will be well.'"

"HOW LONG," Cook asked, "will we tolerate such irresponsible leadership in the South?"

He said that the Supreme Court's school desegregation decision "may and can be circumvented honorably and within the law."

"Each new revelation of the serious social problems that are always provoked when the two races are mixed in the school rooms shows conclusively," Cook said, "that we simply cannot afford to comply with the court's decision."

Segregation Test Hearing Delayed

An Arlington white woman arrested for sitting in the Negro section at a segregated political meeting was granted a continuance yesterday to Nov. 15 by Arlington County Court Judge Paul D. Brown, so she can seek counsel.

Faith Bissell, 43, of 3007 N. 3d st., a librarian, is charged with failing to heed a police order to move from the Negro to the white section at a political meeting at Thomas Jefferson Junior High School.

Her case will test a recent ruling by Attorney General J. Lindsay Almond Jr., on segregated public meetings.

Negro Nike Crew Housing Hard to Find in D. C. Area

Sat 3-24-56

Washington, D. C.

The Army is running into difficulty in securing housing for Negro members of its Nike guided missile bases in nearby Maryland and Virginia.

An Army source said yesterday that owners of homes near the sites have refused to lease housing to the Army without a provision barring Negroes. The Army cannot legally sign such agreements.

The Army said it was conforming to local feeling and was solving the problem by turning over the search for Negro housing to company and battery commanders. These officers seek out housing for the Negroes in their particular unit, taking the customs and feeling of the community into consideration.

Many Negro technicians have been assigned to the Nike defenses ringing Washington. The Army wants housing for their men near the Nike sites so that off duty men can respond in a hurry.

The Army is authorized to lease 125 housing units near the sites in this area for up to $150 a month each. So far, it has only been able to get about 40 per cent of the authorization.

This causes a problem because many of the Negro skilled technicians are reluctant to re-enlist if housing is not available.

An Army spokesman said yesterday that the service does not "recognize this housing difficulty as a problem."

"We aren't going into a neighborhood and force any of our men where they aren't wanted.

"So we are conforming to the neighborhood wishes. We have given the job of getting housing for the Negroes to the company commanders, who live in the community and know the feeling. He can find suitable quarters usually and no one is upset.

"In time, the problem will resolve itself."

In the Philadelphia area, the Nike housing was leased quickly. But in Norfolk, the Army did not try to lease quarters under the same authorization. Instead, it is proceeding under another law under which private builders sell housing to the Government.

Despite distorted published reports, no knives were found at the scene of the disorder in Fort DuPont Park, Monday, according to Chief Harold F. Stewart of the U.S. Park Police.

Chief Stewart said none of the reports from his men mentioned finding any knife, although one youth had been charged after police grabbed him for allegedly throwing a sharp instrument.

The chief park officer said none of the sticks and stones allegedly used as weapons in the battle with park officers were gathered as evidence either, because they are "all part of the natural terrain."

* * *

"IT WAS NOTHING unusual. Our men had been expecting trouble for sometime. We have been luckier than most cities which have much more teen-gang trouble. I think Washington is far better off than other cities its size."

The officer made the statement, Wednesday, correcting sensational and erroneous published accounts of the disturbances by egg-rolling youths who became involved in the altercation with a mounted park policeman.

Approximately 300-500 youths were directly involved in the melee instead of 2,000 originally reported. A total of 17 youths were picked up by park police and turned over to District officers. Only one 17-year-old boy was charged with disorderly conduct.

* * *

"OUR MEN WENT into the park looking for trouble," Chief Stewart admitted in explaining circumstances that led up to wild melee about 1 p.m.

"We had expected it every since we had a similar situation out there last year. That's why we doubled the guard and told our men to be on the lookout for the first sign of any trouble.

"Officer J. J. Conlin was the first man to notice these gangs over in the shrubbery throwing stones at a car. He rushed up to them on his horse. But, they didn't break and run as they have in the past. They turned on him," Chief Stewart stated.

"Pvt. James O. Nelson had to drive up to the crowd with his patrol car or he might have been killed—our men exercised great restraint in not using their clubs or guns," the chief added.

The park police chieftain said he did not think his men used the wrong tactics in rushing upon the teen-age crowd. "That is the usual procedure in handling public disturbances," he stated.

OFFICER CONLIN, a rangy mounted policeman with the park service, was involved last summer in an altercation with the Rev. James H. Mayo of Ward Memorial AME Church at the time the minister accused the officer of assaulting him.

The park policeman arrested the minister on Minnesota Ave. near Benning Rd., NE, after the Rev. Mayo passed Private Conlin and his horse in a trailer. Private Conlin had the clergyman booked at Precinct 14 for disorderly conduct.

* * *

PRIVATE CONLIN was treated Monday at Casualty hospital for abrasions of the shoulder but was not admitted. "He hasn't made out a complete report of what happened yet. He has been off on sick leave," Chief Stewart stated.

D.C.

Park policeman Pvt. Cornelius Vermillion was also reported injured but refused treatment at Casualty Hospital. Private Conlin's horse which was also reported cut by one of the missing knives did not require treatment, either. No District police were reported injured.

Chief Stewart issued a statement earlier in the week stating that the underlying cause of the current teen-gang trouble is the lack of adequate treatment of juvenile cases in the District. "I did not criticise Judge Edith Cockrill," (Juvenile Court), the office emphasized.

The chief said he thinks the real problem is the lack of adequate facilities in the District for the "Rehabilitation or punishment" of known juvenile problems who have not realized the consequence of their actions.

'Get that film', senator orders

Afro-American P. 2

WASHINGTON

"Get that film!"

This is what Theodore Gaffney, local photographer, said he heard Senator Olin D. Johnston (Dem., S. C.) tell a Capitol guard Wednesday, seconds after he had shot a picture of the southern senator with Clarence Mitchell, director, Washington NAACP Bureau.

"I have been taking pictures at Senate hearings before and no one ever stopped me. I had already taken several shots before Johnston said anything. Other photographers had been taking pictures all morning.

"JUST BEFORE I snapped the picture of Johnston and Mitchell, a white photographer took a picture of Attorney-General Herbert Brownell less than six feet away.

"No one said anything. But, when I took my picture, I saw Senator Johnston turn to the guard. The only reason he did it was because I was colored and got a picture of him with an NAACP representative."

This is the way Mr. Gaffney explained the incident Thursday. The photographer said the Capitol guard seized two film holders from him from among several shots he had taken.

"I don't know what pictures I got, because they haven't been developed yet. I am still trying to get my other film back."

Sat. 5-26-56

The guard who seized the holders said Senate Sgt. at Arms Joseph C. Duke would decide what to do with the confiscated film.

P. 2

Mr. Mitchell, said the incident was an invasion of freedom of the press and an official protest has been filed. Mr. Gaffney had not gotten his film back at press time Thursday.

photographer. P. 2

Mr. Gaffney snapped a picture of the Senator talking with Clarence Mitchell, executive director, Washington Bureau, NAACP.

The Senator said he acted under authority of Senator James O. Eastland, Judiciary Committee chairman, who directed that no pictures be taken during committee hearing.

Senator Johnston did not tell the whole truth.

A few seconds before Mr. Gaffney snapped the picture of the Senator and Mr. Mitchell, a white photographer also shot a picture. He was within six feet of Attorney General Herbert Brownell. No confiscation was ordered.

Sat. 5-26-56

Senator Johnston ordered the confiscation of Mr. Gaffney's films because he is afraid of political repercussions back home. He obviously believes he can get away with it, since Mr. Gaffney is colored.

In doing this, the Senator resorted to police state tactics. Apparently such is the practice in South Carolina, particularly where colored people are concerned.

But of all the places in the world, this type of dictatorial discrimination should not be permitted in the nation's capital.

RIGHTS' HEARING ENDS IN FLARE-UP

Times P. 24-C

Senator Johnston and Negro Photographer in Clash—Brownell Pushes Plan

Thurs. 5-17-56

By ANTHONY LEWIS

Special to The New York Times.

New York N.Y.

WASHINGTON, May 16—A calm Senate hearing on civil rights proposals ended today in a flare-up between Senator Olin D. Johnston, Democrat of South Carolina, and Theodore Gaffney, a Negro photographer.

Senator Johnston ordered a guard to seize Mr. Gaffney's film after he had taken a picture of the Senator in conversation with Clarence Mitchell, Washington representative of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People. Mr. Mitchell is a Negro.

Mr. Mitchell called the incident a violation of freedom of the press and said it happened because Mr. Gaffney was a Negro. Senator Johnston denied any intention to be discriminatory. He said Mr. Gaffney had violated rules against picture-taking, and he said he would order the confiscated film destroyed.

Tonight, however, it was learned that the guard had seized the wrong film. Mr. Gaffney kept the plate showing the Senator and Mr. Mitchell talking. This fact seemed to put the issues of discrimination and press freedom into some confusion.

Foe of Rights Plan

Senator Johnston, like most other members of Congress from the South, is a vigorous opponent of civil rights legislation. He is up for re-election this year, has no opponent in the Democratic primary and is therefore virtually assured of winning.

The hearing today, before the Senate Judiciary Committee, was devoted otherwise to testimony by Herbert Brownell Jr., the Attorney General, in behalf of the Administration's civil rights proposals. They were submitted by Mr. Brownell on April 9 and call on Congress to:

¶Set up a bipartisan commission to investigate civil rights violations.

¶Establish a Civil Rights Division in the Justice Department.

¶Give the Justice Department new power to bring civil actions against attempts to deprive citizens of the right to vote or otherwise interfere with their civil rights.

The Adminstraton plan has been approved intact by the House Judiciary Committee. Its chances do not look bright in the Senate committee. If the bills should reach the Senate floor, a southern filibuster is regarded as almost certain to bury them.

Hennings in Protest

Most of the hearing was spent in a protest by Senator Thomas C. Hennings Jr., Democrat of Missouri, against what he called Mr. Brownell's delay on the civil rights issue. He said he had asked the Attorney General's views on the question for more than a year, but had never got an answer until today.

"I came up here today in a frame of mind to be all the help I could," Mr. Brownell said finally, "and if I've made errors in the past I'm sorry." He added that, whatever the delay on legislative proposals, the Justice Department had been more active than ever in recent years on civil rights matters in the courts and in administrative actions.

Senators Everett M. Dirksen, Illinois Republican, and Joseph C. O'Mahoney, Wyoming Democrat, got into a brief discussion of political credit for civil rights action. Senator John L. McClellan, Democrat of Arkansas, observed in a low voice: "I'm sure no one ever suspicioned that this issue was tainted in the least degree with politics."

Senator Johnston presided through most of the hearing in place of the chairman, Senator James O. Eastland, Democrat of Mississippi, who was absent. At the start, Senator Johnston made an announcement that is routine in Congressional hearings—that photographers should get their pictures before testimony began, because no pictures would be allowed afterward.

Most of the cameramen took their shots immediately and left. One did snap some pictures during the hearing, but Senator Johnston said afterward he had not noticed the man.

Mr. Gaffney, a free lance photographer, was taking pictures for Jet magazine. He said he went ahead and shot one of Senator Johnston and Mr. Mitchell because he thought the hearing was over.

Whether Jet magazine would print the picture Mr. Gaffney saved was not yet decided tonight by the editors of Jet.

PHOTOS OF JOHNSTON TALKING TO NEGRO SEIZED AT HEARING

Evening Star P. 2-A
Washington, D. C.

By the Associated Press

Senator Olin Johnston, Democrat of South Carolina, yesterday had a Capitol policeman seize the plates of a Negro photographer who snapped pictures of Senator Johnston talking to Clarence Mitchell, Washington representative of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People.

Thurs. 5-17-56

Mr. Mitchell had gone forward to protest to Senator Johnston against adjourning a Senate judiciary committee hearing on civil rights legislation before Roy Wilkins, executive secretary of the NAACP, testified.

Senator Johnston, presiding in place of Chairman Eastland, Democrat of Mississippi, had banged his gavel and announced he was going to have to recess the hearing because committee members had to go to the Senate floor to vote.

Theodore Gaffney, a photographer for Crisis, publication of the NAACP, snapped pictures of the two men talking.

Senator Johnston, who had told photographers that they were to take no pictures after the hearing started, directed a Capitol policeman to seize Mr. Gaffney's plates. Mr. Gaffney, protesting that the hearing had ended, handed over two plates.

The policeman told Mr. Gaffney that he would preserve the plates and let him know, after checking with the Senate sergeant-at-arms, Joseph Duke, whether he could have them back.

Senator Johnson said the hearing was not closed at the time. "I could have gone on with it," he said.

District Heads Assailed on Integration

Post P. 25

Fire Department, Police Boy's Club Cited by NAACP

Wash., D. C.

A delegation from the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People charged the District Commissioners yesterday with "staging a sit-down strike" on President Eisenhower's integration program.

Eugene Davidson, local NAACP president, called for realistic integration on three fronts: Fire Department, Police Boys' club, and amusement places.

Only token integration exists in the fire department, the NAACP leader argued, with only eight Negro firemen on duty around the clock in otherwise white companies and no white officiers serving on Negro crews.

Under the "silent treatment" of their white coworkers, Davidson charges, the eight integrated Negro firemen have become virtual "martyrs."

He recommended at least 50-50 integration in each of the five fire companies.

Fire Chief Millard Sutton, responding to Davidson's comments, said 117 of the 1056 men in the department are Negro. Four companies have white officers, he said, and one (Engine 4) has Negro officers.

"If the department were left alone," he added, "the problem could be worked out without friction."

Davidson also scored the Commissioners for failing to lead an integration move in the Police Boys' Club. He suggested Commissioners set up a two-week plan to integrate the 14,000 Negro and 8000 white boys in the clubs.

City fathers were also urged to issue a District-wide regulation forbidding discrimination

Davidson praised progress toward integration made during the first two years of the Eisenhower Administration. But, he added, city fathers have buckled under criticism that the city is moving too fast.

Speaking for the board, Commissioner Robert E. McLaughlin promised "close attention" to all three of these items.

He said he already had been assured by Thomas G. Carney, president of the boys' clubs, that club officers plan to discuss eventual integration with Negro leaders within a few weeks.

White Residents Leaving Negro Neighborhoods

Mon. 9-24-56

By EDMOND LE BRETON

WASHINGTON, Sept. 23 (AP)—Rep. James C. Davis (D-Ga) said that the trend in Washington is toward a school system in effect resegregated, as white residents leave neighborhoods with large Negro school enrollments.

Meanwhile a group of capital residents, organized as the Washington Committee for the Public Schools, declared that members of the school investigating subcommittee Davis heads "have little or no interest in determining the full facts respecting the District of Columbia schools."

A spokesman for the Washington committee said it will begin early this week issuing "factual information" about Washington's integrated educational system "to bring some balance" to the picture of integration and its effects being built up in testimony before the House investigators.

Mostly Southerners

The House District of Columbia subcommittee investigating public schools here, with special attention to integration, is made up predominantly of Southerners, and only Southern members so far have attended its hearings, which began last Wednesday.

Preliminary investigations were conducted by a largely Southern staff headed by William Gerber of Memphis, Tenn., subcommittee counsel, who does most of the questioning of witnesses.

Davis referred, in an interview, to testimony by several principals and teachers of formerly all-white schools that Negro enrollment has increased from year to year under integration, now beginning its third year.

Davis said the testimony convinced him that integration has hastened the change of some Washington neighborhoods from white to Negro and has stepped up the movement of white families to the suburbs. He noted, however, that not all Washington neighborhoods are so affected.

Members Listed

"What it seems to show," he said, "is segregation coming again in effect as people keep moving out."

Formation of the Washington Committee for the Public Schools was announced by its chairman, Gerhard Van Arkel, Washington attorney.

Listed as members were a number of business, professional, labor, religious and political figures of various faiths and parties. Among them were former District Commissioner F. Joseph Donohue, Mrs. J. Borden Harriman, Mrs. Eugene Meyer, wife of the chairman of the board of the Washington Post and Times-Herald and an active participant in a number of educational undertakings; Joseph L. Rauh, national director of Americans for Democratic Action, and Victor G. Reuther, Washington representative of the United Auto Workers.

School, Seashore Park, Bus Boycott Case To Be Aired

By FRANK B. ALLEN

WASHINGTON — (INS) — The Supreme Court reconvened Monday after a four-month vacation and faced a docket heavy with subversion cases and appeals from school integration decisions.

For Justice Sherman Minton, there will be just three sessions before his retirement Oct. 15 for health reasons. He will join in two conferences in which the justices decide whether to hear arguments on cases but will not sit in on the arguments themselves.

The court's work will really begin on Oct. 8, when it rules on whether to review a long list of pending appeals and then proceed to hear arguments the rest of the week.

Norfolk, Va.

THE WORKLOAD is heavy, indicating that the previous records in the number of cases filed will be broken. The number this year is nearly 470, as compared to 437 on Sept. 30, 1955.

Pilot 10-6-56

Arguments on three subversion cases are scheduled for the week of Oct. 8. The first is on 14 West Coast communists sentenced to five years each for conspiracy to advocate overthrow of the government by force and violence.

* * *

THE NET involves Pittsburgh Communist Steve Nelson and four others similar sentenced in Federal court. Last year, Nelson won a Supreme Court decision that the federal government has exclusive jurisdiction in such cases.

Also pending for argument during the week of Oct. 8 is the question of whether communists can be convicted solely on the basis of membership in the party. The test is in the case of Irving Junius Scales, a North Carolina red leader, and Claude Lightfoot of Chicago.

* * *

THE FIRST appeal in an expected new crop resulting from efforts to integrate southern schools is already on file from Mansfield, Tex., and a ruling on whether to review it is expected within a few weeks.

There is another from Sumter county, South Carolina, brought by several residents of Turkish descent. Although they are regarded as white people, they have separate schools and are seeking integration.

Other pending racial cases, not yet accepted for review, involve whether Virginia may lease a Seashore Park to a private operator who might impose segregation, and the Montgomery, Ala., bus case.

Theaters' Boycott Is Urged

NAACP Calls For Action in Delaware

DOVER, Del. —(AP)— The Dover chapter of the National Assn. for the Advancement of Colored People has called for a Negro boycott of five Delaware movie theaters.

The boycott against segregated theaters in three towns was announced Wednesday night by Bernard Frisby, a member of the chapter's committee on integration.

"The NAACP feels its members, as well as all Negroes, are degraded, humiliated and unjustly treated by this existing situation," Frisby said.

The boycott is against two theaters at Dover, the state capital, one at Smyrna and one at Middletown. It also was called against a drive-in theater south of Dover. Frisby said Negroes are required to park on one side at the drive-in.

Segregation at the drive-in was denied by Miss Muriel Schwartz, who said her family owns all five theaters. Negroes are not sold tickets for downstairs at the four regular theaters but are allowed to use wash rooms and make purchases at the candy counters.

Delaware Political Parties Eye Segregation Issue

Daily World Lux. 7-24-56
Atlanta, Ga.

DOVER, Del. — (ANP) — To mention or not to mention the segregation issue in their respective platforms is easily the most perplexing problem confronting the two major parties as they begin preparing for their state conventions here next month.

Both the Republican and Democratic parties will select candidates for the statewide tickets in the November election and adopt the platforms for their campaigns. Up for bids are the offices of governor, lieutenant-governor, U. S. representative at large, auditor and treasurer.

Opposing GOP incumbent Gov. J. Caleb Boggs for the gubernatorial post are two Democratic candidates, J. Tylor McConnell, Wilmington industrialist, who has the backing of the Democrats; and State Sen. Walter J. Hoey of Milford, who is being strongly supported by the anti-segregation forces in the state.

It is this latter bloc which is causing all the worry among the political parties. Neither party has said whether it will mention the segregation issue at all in its platform.

The way the Democrats look at it, if the issue is not mention, it will cause trouble within the ranks; and if it is, and not handled properly, there will still be trouble.

Back of all this anxiety lies the record of the present legislative session on matters of segregation. The legislature has, for instance, refused to take any action toward integrating public schools. Instead, it appropriated about $10,000,000 to improve Negro schools.

Failure of a federal court to take political leaders off the hook several months ago by issuing orders compelling some school districts to integrate classes has both parties jittery. The court, in all but one case, told the districts that their areas were not ready for integration. In the one district excepted, a program leading to integration brought a citizens mass meeting to protest the plan.

Integration successful at Wilmington's 3 pools

Afro-American P. 3
Sat. 9-22-56

WILMINGTON, Dela. — Wilmington's city swimming pools operated on an integrated basis this past summer for the first time in the city's history.

"Not a single objectionable incident" was reported, Maurice duPont Lee, president of the Board of Park Commissioners, said.

Baltimore

He noted, however, that attendance was down somewhat but pointed out that the slight decrease in attendance at the three pools probably was caused by the weather.

Md.

THE "SATISFACTORY results," Mr. Lee said, "can be attributed, at least in part, to not publicizing the integration of the pools in advance of the opening date."

The integration policy went into effect on June 16 at Kruse, Price Runn, and Canby Park pools. The pools closed on Labor Day. Kruse pool formerly was all colored.

He did say, however, that several telephone calls were received from whites objecting to the new policy.

Mr. Lee said the board decided against announcing the new policy so there would be no time for argument before the desegregation was in effect.

ON ONE OCCASION, a white man came to purchase a ticket to swim at one of the pools and became disgusted after the attendant told him the pools were integrated following his inquiry.

Mr. Lee said the attendant asked whether the man had ever been in the Army. The man said yes. The attendant asked why he objected to swimming with colored persons since he had participated in the Army integration program.

The man then purchased his ticket and went to the pool without further conversation.

DuBois Urges Negroes To Study Achievements

Daily Worker N.Y.

Atlanta, Ga. Wed. 12-12-56

NEW YORK — (ANP) — W.E.B. DuBois, noted Negro author and lecturer, has urged Negro ~~organizations~~ such as newspapers, colleges and organizations to take cognizance that the year 1957 will usher in a series of centenaries important to the history of the Negro.

38a

DuBois pointed out that 1957 marks the 100th anniversary of the Dred Scott decision; 1959 brings the 100th anniversary of the death of John Brown; 1963, the anniversary of the Emancipation Proclamation; 1961-65, the 100th anniversary of the participation of American Negroes in the Civil War, 1968, the 100th anniversary of the death of Thaddeus Stevens, of the enfranchisement of the Freedmen and the Freedmen's Bureau; 1972, the 100th anniversary of the birth of Paul Laurence Dunbar; and 1976, the 100th anniversary of the Bargan of 1876.

The noted Negro leader suggested that these dates should be marked and celebrated in history by Negroes, "but not as occasions for controversies or exacerbation of race hate."

Said DuBois: "There are many other significant anniversaries which recall Negro history and the cultural tie of the black man with American history. If we neglect to mark this history, it may be distorted or forgotten. Already repeated efforts are being made to prove that slavery was not the cause of the Civil War; to minimize the part of Negroes in the slavery controversy and the war; to slander friends of the Negro, and to represent his enfranchisement as a serious mistake."

He said these occasions should be celebrater and dedicated to calm and scientific inquiry into the past, participated in by persons of authority, white and black, northern and southern.

"I suggest that these celebrations be varied in character, place and sponsorship; we have only to be sure that no important event or person is forgotten in these centenaries of the first participation in the civilization of the U. S., of the Negro masses as free citizens," DuBois said.

Integration In The North

Negro's Lot In New York Is Better—By Comparison

This is the first of a series of articles dealing with racial integration in thickly populated areas in the North.

Courier-Journal

By TILLMAN DURDIN
New York Times Service

New York, April 23.—A Negro migrant to New York from the Deep South recently observed: "I'd rather be a lamppost in New York than the mayor of a city in Alabama."

His remark summed up the state of Negro-white relations in New York City.

The consensus of experts is that conditions for the Negro here are the best among the major cities of the country. Certainly they are better than in Alabama.

Louisville, Ky.

Only Comparatively

Yet New York is only comparatively better. There is gross discrimination against Negroes here, and in many respects they are the oppressed class of the city.

Negroes are barred from most private housing. As a consequence, the low-income majority must live in the racial ghettos of Harlem, the East Bronx, Brooklyn, Jamaica, Queens, and Morrisania in the Bronx.

Many fields of employment are closed to Negroes. In many enterprises Negroes get the lower-pay, lower-grade jobs. Elementary- and junior-high-school education for Negroes is inferior.

In some instances, the zoning of school districts prevents Negroes from attending higher-standard integrated schools or all-white schools. The result is de facto school segregation.

Legally Equal

The Negro in New York lives in a community that, in principle at least, has set its face against racial discrimination. There are no White Citizens' Councils here.

Indeed, no public figure or organization and no newspaper openly advocates legalized segregation or similar measures of unequal treatment for the Negro. On the contrary, public pronouncements regularly condemn discrimination.

The City Administration from Mayor Robert Wagner on down is commited to a policy of non-discrimination and racial equality.

In theory, then, the Negro in New York lives in a climate of freedom. State laws and City ordinances forbidding discrimination because of race, color, or creed support his right to equal status and treatment.

Here the Negro can ride without restriction on any public conveyance. He has the legal right to go on an equal basis to any hotel, restaurant, park, beach, swimming pool, or theater.

By subterfuge, attempts are sometimes made to exclude Negroes from hotels, restaurants, and other places of public accommodation or amusement. But if the Negro chooses to take up the issue, the law is on his side.

In a number of cases in recent years Negroes have won damages for instances of exclusion, and attempts at discrimination are now infrequent. On the other hand, Negroes tend to shun places where they know they would not be welcome.

Many Live Side by Side

Many whites, on their own and in association with Negroes, work constantly for a fair deal for the Negro. Despite the virtually all-colored ghettos, in many parts of the city Negroes and whites live harmoniously together, go to school together, play together, work together, and visit together.

Wide World Photo

HULEN E. JACK
Borough president

Negroes vote and thus wield increasing political power as their number grows. Education and job opportunities expand yearly, enhancing the economic status of Negroes.

Negro income has more than trebled in the last two decades, and the number of well-to-do and even wealthy Negroes increases steadily.

Many Are Successful

New York City has a high proportion of the nation's outstandingly successful Negroes.

Manhattan's Borough president, Hulen E. Jack, is a Negro.

Among other Negroes in important posts in the City Government are Arthur C. Ford, commissioner of water, gas, and electricity supply; Robert J. Mangum, deputy commissioner of police; Ann Hedgeman, special assistant to the Mayor, and Robert C. Weaver, State rent-control commissioner.

Dr. Thomas Matthews, a Negro, recently was made chief neurosurgeon at the Coney Island Hospital. Dr. John Hope Franklin was appointed a short time ago to head of the history department of Brooklyn College.

Many Have Good Jobs

Thousands of other Negroes in the city hold important positions in the professions, in entertainment, and in industry. The nine-member Board of Education includes a Negro, the Rev. John M. Coleman.

An era of marked improvement in the city's treatment of Negroes began with the 1945 enactment of the State law against discrimination in employment. The State Commission Against Discrimination was set up.

It was empowered to hear complaints, hold hearings, and issue orders to obtain enforcement of the law.

New York's pioneer law inspired similar legislation in many other states. In this state, it has been broadened from time to time.

Authority Enlarged

The discrimination commission's authority has been enlarged during the Harriman Administration to include public and public-assisted housing.

Separate legislation has come into being during the last decade to deal with discrimination in education and insurance. The Supreme Court's decision in 1954 forbidding segregation in public schools added the weight of federal judicial opinion to State policies in education.

In New York City the decision was greeted with the official promises of an intensified effort to achieve integration in the City schools.

New Unit Being Formed

A new 15-member commission on intergroup relations for the city is now being formed to reinforce and supplement work being done by other agencies in the race-relations field. A new commission on integration is formulating recommendations for further integration of the City's public schools.

Thus the enabling agencies and a framework of laws and policies exist for the promotion of racial equality and harmony here.

Experts agree that progress is being made. No serious violence between racial elements in the city has occurred for more than a decade.

Prejudices Still Evident

However, the Negroes are far from satisfied with things as they are. Racial prejudices are still evident. In some cases legal provisions are evaded.

Negroes believe that improvement is not nearly as fast as it could be if all official and unofficial agencies pushed with full energy and determination.

The root of most evils, it is generally agreed, lies in the housing problems.

Negroes are refused tenancy in most of the private housing in the city outside the predominantly Negro areas. Even Negroes with good incomes often cannot get accomodations they can afford.

The majority of Negroes have low incomes and can afford only cheap housing. New York has a serious shortage of low-income housing.

Housing Responsible

To a great extent the housing situation is responsible for the educational inequalities in the city. Because Negro and white citizens live apart, school zoning results in separate schools.

Children in elementary and junior-high schools are required to attend the school in their zone. Thus about 70 per cent of the city's schools are segregated, and only in 30 per cent of the schools do appreciable numbers of Negro and Puerto Rican children have contact in classrooms with white children.

In the high schools the situation is better because students often attend high schools at a considerable distance from their homes.

Employment A Paradox

In the city's colleges and universities there is, by and large, no discrimination against Negroes.

Employment is one of the paradoxes in race relations in New York. Thousands of new jobs in department stores, banks, insurance companies, communications, industry, and transportation have been opened to Negroes with the decline of prejudices and enforcement of fair-employment laws.

At the same time Negroes still meet formidable obstacles against getting skilled and managerial positions. The resultant frustrations frequently cause resentment.

The city's Negro population of 855,000 (1,200,000 for the metropolitan area) is now 100,000 higher than in 1950. This indicates an influx of thousands of new migrants a year. Negroes now make up 11 per cent of the population. They are expected to comprise 15 per cent by 1960.

Ministers Answer 'Manifesto'

Draft 'Negro Declaration Of Intentions'

New Orleans, La.

Chicago (ANP). — Declaring that Negroes support the U. S. Constitution fully and intend to "obey the laws of the land," a group of Negro church leaders from 11 states went on record here last week as opposed to "gradualism" in the application of the nation's anti-segregation laws.

"The Negro's Declaration of Intention" was issued Tuesday as a reply to the southern "manifesto" signed March 12 by 18 southern senators and 81 representatives denouncing the U. S. Supreme Court's decision outlawing school segregation.

The reply state the Negroes' intention to obey laws but at the same time "to fight against the false doctrine which claims that some men are by origin, birth and nature, superior to others."

It rejected "gradualism" and stated that Negroes would "take every legal step . . . to overcome every economic, political and cultural stumbling block that hinders the further progress of this great republic."

The declaration of intention was written by the Rev. Dr. Joseph H. Jackson of Chicago, president of the 5,000,000—member National Baptist Convention of the U. S. A., Inc. His words were endorsed by a special committee of 16 Negro religious leaders from both the north and south.

Copies of the document were sent to President Eisenhower, Atty. Gen. Brownell and all members of Congress.

The 700—word statement is generally moderate in tone, but it recognizes that opposition may be severe.

"And if we are slain," the declaration concludes, "by the forces of oppression before our high—purpose is achieved; we pray that we shall sleep under the shadows of the flag that we love; and that our flowing blood shall help to wash from the nation's life every blot of shame . . . and our sacred dust shall be a silent testimony and a lasting memorial to our eternal quest for justice, peace and good will."

Commenting on what they termed "the doctrine of the segregationists," the clergymen declared.

Baltimore, Md.

CHICAGO—(NNPA) — Sixteen colored religious leaders from the South and North, Tuesday, endorsed a "Declaration of Intention," which was issued here as a reply to the manifesto of 101 members of Congress from the South against the Supreme Court decision outlawing racial segregation in the public schools.

The "Declaration of Intention" was written by Dr. Joseph H. Jackson, president of the National Baptist Convention of the U.S.A., Inc., representing more than 4,500,000 communicants, or nearly one-third of the colored people in the United States.

It stated the intention of colored people to "obey the laws of the land" and at the same time "to fight against the false doctrine which claims that some men are by origin, birth and nature superio rto others."

* * *

IT REJECTED gradualism and stated that colored leaders would "take every legal step. . . to overcome every economic, political and cultural stumbling block that hinders the further progress of this great republic."

The 700-word statement was sent to President Eisenhower, members of his Cabinet, members of Congress and governors of all the states.

In rejecting gradualism, the declaration stated:

"While we shall recognize a need for the patience that accompanies growth, we intend at all times to reject that doctrine of gradualism which implies that the established laws of the land should be gradually applied and gradually obeyed in order to respect the unust traditions of men and to give free reign and honor to destructive prejudices."

THE STATEMENT is generally moderate in tone, but it recognizes that opposition may be severe.

"And if we are slain," the declaration concludes, "by the forces of oppression before our high purpose is achieved, we pray that we shall sleep under the shadows of the flag that we love, and that our flowing blood shall help to wash from the nation's life every blot of shame . . . and our sacred dust shall be a silent testimony and a lasting memorial to our eternal quest for justice, peace and good will."

Commenting on what they termed "the doctrine of the segregationists," the clergymen declared:

"We shall always believe that the basic quality of real distinction is character, not color, and the stature of a person is determined by the power of his mind, the purity of his heart and the highest possible dedication of his life."

THE REV. MR. Jackson was one of four Baptist ministers who visited the Soviet Union in August at the invitation of Baptist leaders there.

He said he composed the Declaration of Intention, after conferring with colored people in all walks of life and in all parts of the country, as an attempt to get across the basic attitude of colored citizens.

The special committee which endorsed the declaration is also planning to budget a sizeable part of the National Baptist Convention's missionary fund for use in helping pay legal expenses for civil rights defense.

The committee also announced that May 17 — the date the Supreme Court handed down the historic school desegregation ruling two years ago — will be observed as a national "day of mourning, fasting and prayer, for the unity, preservation and security of this republic under God and for peace of the world."

Declaration Of Intention

Sat. 4-14-56

In Chicago last week, Negro Baptist leaders met to issue an historic document. Called a "Declaration of Negro Intentions," it is a forthright, sound, and timely answer to the notorious and treasonous Southern Manifesto released last March 12.

Dr. J. H. Jackson, president of the National Baptist Convention, USA, wrote the 10-point statement in language so eloquent and moving, it may well be worth printing and handed down to posterity along with the Gettysburg address.

The most impressive thing about the document is that it is properly a review and summing up of the Negro's position in America today — where he stands and what he proposes to do to meet the crisis imposed upon this nation by willful bigots who would destroy the very foundations of democracy in their selfish desire to perpetuate outmoded notions which deny the basic rights of all men to life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness.

It's a long road from the slave compounds to Independence Street. And it's a still longer way from expediency and submission to militant aggressiveness. What we are seeing today is the new Negro, proud of his role in making this country safe for democracy. Now he wants a full share of his earnings and what is more, he is entitled to it.

These are trying times, but they are also glorious times in which we should count our blessings that at long last the day has come when we can lift our heads and our voices to make earth and heaven ring with our resounding intentions that we will never falter in the fight for full citizenship, even at the price of death, itself.

Here we stand. We can do no other. God help us!

Leaders Hail Manifesto On Negro Intentions

EDITOR'S NOTE: This is the second in a series of articles on the "Declaration of Negro Intentions." The report comes out of an interview with Dr. J. H. Jackson, president of the National Baptist Convention U. S. A., who drew up the historic document. This one deals with the reactions to the publication of the manifesto.

In the Congressional Record of April 18, Sen. Frank Carlson of Kansas had inserted the full text of the Declaration and in a letter to Rev. E. B. Hicks of Topeka, Kans., the senator said he was using excerpts of the statement for his weekly radio transcriptions carried to his constituents over 20 radio stations throughout the state.

In Chicago, Lawrence Wagner, an associate of the Francis I. DuPont and Co. wrote Dr. Jackson a letter in which he said. . ."It strikes me that paragraph eight is the best statement I have yet read on how to conciliate those apparently diametrically opposite forces so much now in the news. Here is a recognition of growth, that is inherently gradual, but a rejection of stalling and time consuming procrastination, that is frequently a gossamer web designed to obstruct and prevent."

Among the college presidents who hailed the Declaration were Dr. Samuel Proctor, Virginia Union university, and Dr. Benjamin Mays, Morehouse college. In Washington on April 24 at the State of the Race Conference called by A. Philip Randolph, president of the Brotherhood of Sleeping Car Porters, the delegates from all over the country unanimously endorsed the document as the official statement of their expressions and gave Dr. Jackson a standing ovation.

Randolph, himself, personally said, "I believe this states in forthright terms the hopes and aspirations of millions of your countrymen who seek urgently full citizenship status in our time.

"I want to commend you for your work."

The labor union chief long experienced in leading the battle for full equality and often referred to as the "Father of FEPC," joined in with the religious leader in the Day of Prayer and Fasting climaxing in a mass rally at Chicago's Orchestra Hall on May 17.

MASONIC HEAD

Commendations were also received from John R. Lawrence, Grand Master of the Masons of the Minnesota Jurisdiction; Mrs. Irene McCoy Gaines, president of the National Association of Colored Womens' clubs; Dr. Andrew Hargett, minister of Savannah State college, Ga. and from scores of ministers of all denominations as well as people in all walks of life.

Many organizations have asked for reprints of the Declaration as it appeared in full page form in the newspapers in the Defender Publications.

Gradualism Rejected By Negro Clergymen

CHICAGO, April 3.—"The Negro's declaration of intention" was issued here today as a reply to the Southern "manifesto," which had spelled out three weeks ago the pledge of most of the South's representatives in Congress to "use all lawful means" to reverse the Supreme Court ban on segregation in public schools.

The reply stated the Negroes' intention to "obey the laws of the land" but at the same time "to fight against the false doctrine which claims that some men are by origin, birth and nature, superior to others."

REJECT "GRADUALISM"

It rejected "gradualism" and stated that Negro leaders would "take every legal step . . . to overcome every economic, political and cultural stumbling block that hinders the further progress of this great Republic."

The declaration of intention was written by the Rev. Joseph H. Jackson, president of the National Baptist Convention of the U.S.A., Inc., a denomination representing more than 4,500,000 Negroes, nearly one-third of all in the United States. His words were indorsed by a special committee of 16 religious leaders from both the South and the North.

The 700-word statement is being sent to President Eisenhower, his Cabinet, all members of Congress and Governors of all the States.

It is generally moderate in tone, but it recognizes that opposition may be severe.

"And if we are slain," the declaration concludes, "by the forces of oppression before our high purpose is achieved; we pray that . . . our flowing blood shall help to wash from the Nation's life every blot of shame . . . and our sacred dust shall be a silent testimony and a lasting memorial to our eternal quest for peace, peace and good-will."

The Southern manifesto, signed March 12 by 19 Senators and 81 Representatives, denounced the Supreme Court segregation decision as "a clear abuse of judicial power." It concluded, "We pledge ourselves to use all lawful means to bring about a reversal of this decision," but the Southern Congressmen did not propose "interposition" or nullification.

HIT AT COMPROMISE

In rejecting "gradualism," the approach to integration proposed by many moderates in both South and North, the Negro declaration stated:

"While we shall recognize a need for the patience that accompanies growth, we intend at all times to reject that doctrine of gradualism which implies that the established laws of the land should be gradually applied and gradually obeyed in order to respect the injust traditions of men and to give free reign and honor to destructive prejudices."

SCHOOL BARS 16 NEGROES

HILLSBORO, O., April 3 (UP).—A predominantly white school today refused to enroll 16 Negro children despite a U. S. Supreme Court ruling yesterday that there should be no delay in integration.

The children, accompanied by four mothers, arrived at the school when it opened. They hoped to be admitted under terms of the Supreme Court decision calling for an immediate end to segregation here.

The principal, Harold Henry, told the group that they could not enroll today. He said the school board had not changed a policy it adopted two years ago when it rearranged the community's school attendance zones. Officials said any further change would overcrowd the school.

The four women and 16 children remained in the school principal's office for about three hours. There was no disturbance.

NEGRO PASTORS HIT 'GRADUAL' DESEGREGATION

20 Meet Here to Form Intention Declaration

"Gradualism" in the application of the nation's anti-segregation laws was rejected yesterday by 20 Negro clergymen from 11 states who met in Olivet Baptist church to draw up a "Negroes Declaration of Intention."

The Rev. Dr. Joseph H. Jackson, minister of the host church and president of the National Baptist convention, said the declaration was designed to show that Negroes will support the Constitution fully and uphold obedience to the "laws of the land."

Answer to "Manifesto"

The statement the clergymen adopted is an answer to the "manifesto" issued recently by some southern congressmen, Dr. Jackson said. The manifesto denounced the Supreme court's decision outlawing school segregation.

"While we recognize a need for the patience that accompanies growth," the declaration states, "we intend at all times to reject that doctrine of gradualism which implies that the established laws of the land should be gradually applied and gradually obeyed in order to respect the unjust traditions of men and give free reign and honor to destructive prejudices."

Commenting on what they termed "the doctrine of the segregationists," the clergymen declared, "we shall always believe that the basic quality of real distinction is character ,not color, and the stature of a person is determined by the power of his mind, the purity of his heart, and the highest possible dedication of his life."

Against "False Doctrine"

They added a pledge to crusade against "the false doctrine which claims some men are by origin, birth, and nature superior to others."

Copies of the document were sent to President Eisenhower, Atty. General Brownell, and all members of Congress. Other Chicago ministers beside Dr. Jackson who took part in the meeting were the Rev. W. A. Johnson of Greater St. John Baptist church, the Rev. J. L. Horace of Gethsemane temple, and the Rev. T. L. White of Mount Moriah Baptist church.

Ministers from Alabama, Louisiana, Georgia, Texas, Mississippi, Kentucky, Pennsylvania, Minnesota, Wisconsin, Indiana, and other cities in Illinois attended the meeting.

Push integration, Ike urges South

Afro-American p.20 Sat. 3-31-56

Baltimore, Md.

By LOUIS LAUTIER

WASHINGTON, D.C. (NNPA) — Discussion of racial segregation played a big part in President Eisenhower's press conference, Wednesday.

The questions ranged from United States policy on African movements for national independence to whether Mr. Eisenhower intends to mobilize religious and other leaders for a program of moderation and progress in the fight over desegregation.

* * *

BASICALLY, the President's positions in a nutshell were:

1. Wherever there are local antagonisms and troubles, the United States seeks mediation rather than conflict.

2. With regard to the Montgomery, Ala., bus boycott trials, he believes it is incumbent on all people in the South to show some progress.

3. If colored voters are switching from the Democratic to the Republican party, he welcomes them with open arms.

4. The pulpits have a very great responsibility in a program of moderation and progress in school desegregation.

5. The Constitution, as interpreted by the Supreme Court, is the basic law.

* * *

ON THE ISSUE of colonialism, Mr. Eisenhower referred to a speech made in Paris Tuesday by C. Douglas Dillon, United States Ambassador to France, whom the President said spoke with his approval.

Mr. Dillon announced in his speech "whole - hearted support" by the United States, of France in her search for "liberal solutions" of her North African problems.

As Mr. Dillon was speaking, France and Tunisia signed a diplomatic document ending the 75-year protectorate over the North African territory and recognizing the independence of Tunisia.

The ambassador's speech brought bitter reaction from an Algerian nationalist leader, Messali Hadj, who is now under forced residence in Angouleme, France. He charged that Mr. Dillon's speech constituted support of 'colonialist policy in Algeria" and is "contrary to the principles of American democracy."

* * *

LINCOLN WHITE, State Department spokesman, said Mr. Dillon stressed "our traditional anti - colonial policy."

The question concerning a return of colored voters to the Republican party was based on information from the Republican National Committee.

Letters to the Republican National Committee show that:

1. L. E. Austin, editor of The Carolina Times, Durham, N.C., who has supported the Democratic party since the administration of President Franklin D. Roosevelt, wrote:

* * *

"THE TRUTH is I have never wholeheartedly been connected with the Democratic party because I could not swallow a man like Sen. (James O.) Eastland, Miss. in the Democratic party."

Austin is said to have changed his registration and is now "a full - fledged Republican, lock, stock and barrel."

2. George Vaughns of Oakland, Calif., a registered Democrat for the past 25 years, publicly switched to Republican last month and was put on the county planning board by the Republicans.

3. Grant Reynolds, a New York lawyer, has informed the National Committee that he plans a "very active" campaign for President Eisenhower. He toured the West for Adlai Stevenson in 1952 in company with Joe Louis.

* * *

MR. REYNOLDS was a Republican until the late 1940s. He broke with former Governor Thomas E. Dewey.

The texts of reporters' questions and the President's answers concerning colonialism and segregation follow:

Q. In the light of renewed Arab accusation that the U.S. is reverting to a support of colonialism in the Middle East, would you clarify United States policy on the African movements for national independence?

A. Well, first of all, with my approval Ambassador Dillon made a speech yesterday (Tuesday) in France that expresses our hope that there can be equitable and fair, just settlements of these great problems that effect these countries.

NOW, THESE two areas have a very definite measure of independence between them. We know that talking now about France and Algeria, and therefore it seems to us in the best interest of both sides that we arrive at one side but, at the same time does not completely disrupt a relationship that probably should exist.

This is our idea in all of these areas that have their local antagonisms and troubles, whether it is Mid - East, whether it is Africa or whatever the area, to try to help these countries see on either side of the quarrel that their best interests lie in some composition, in mediation rather than in conflict, because today the world, as never before, needs the help, the several nations need the help of each other in advancing their own economies and in increasing trade, so that there can be advancing standards of living, and that the proper aspirations of the people can be gradually achieved.

NOW, THIS IS, I recognize this is an easy approach to make. It is a hard thing to bring about because you have got age - old antagonisms; you have all sorts of fanatical thoughts brought to these problems that has no place rightfully in it, except as it is always there, and you have, of course, the Communists interfering when they can.

Nevertheless, it remains our sincere effort in all of these areas to try to retain friendships with both sides and, therefore, use our good offices to bring about a decent solution.

* * *

AFTER SEVERAL questions intervened:

Q. Mr. President, with regard to the situation in Alabama, Mr. President, how do you feel about colored persons being brought to trial for refusing to ride the Montgomery buses?

(Laughter)

A. Well, you are asking me, I think, to be more of a lawyer than I certainly am.

But, as I understand it, there is a state law about boycotts, and it is under that kind of thing that these people are being brought to trial.

I think that the statement I made last week on this whole subject represents the views that I now — all the views that I now have to make; and I do believe, that it is incumbent on all in the South to show some progress.

THAT IS what the Supreme Court asked for. And they turned it over to local district courts.

I believe that we should not stagnate, but again I plead for understanding, for real sympathetic consideration of a problem that is far larger, both in its emotion and even in its physical aspects, than most of us realize.

Q. Mr. President, your school construction bill is on dead center, as you have said, mainly because of the controversy over whether it should be used as an instrument of desegregation.

I wonder if you have any ideas of positive approach that could be taken to get it off dead center and get some legislation this year?

A. I HAVE expressed myself on that subject several times. I don't have anything further to add to that.

Race Policy By Ike Stirs Senate Fire

Advertiser Montgomery, Ala. Sat 3-17-56

WASHINGTON, March 16 (AP) — Sen. Lehman (D-NY) suggested today that President Eisenhower is a "neutralist" standing above the segregation battle. This brought retort of "unwarranted and unfounded" from Sen. Clifford P. Case (R-NJ).

In a brief Senate flurry, Case contended Lehman was injecting politics into the segregation question. This was countered by a claim from Sen. Neuberger (D-Ore) that it was Vice President Nixon "who put politics into this vital issue."

The exchange began when Lehman called upon Eisenhower to "assume the responsibility" for enforcing the Supreme Court order outlawing racial segregation in the public schools.

SHOW RESTRAINT

"I cannot stand above the battle, like President Eisenhower, and say with fine impartiality that both sides must show restraint," Lehman declared. He quoted Eisenhower as having warned against "the extremists" on both sides, and asked if the President pictured himself as a "mediator" or a "neutralist."

Case replied:

"Any suggestion that the President is a neutralist or is standing above this quarrel is unwarranted and unfounded.

"And I hope that there will be, from no side, even an implied injection of this question into politics, because such a tone, I regret to say, did arise in the remarks of my colleague from New York."

Case said the President agrees the Supreme Court decision "is based upon right and conscience." He added that the only question is as to the speed with which it can be put into effect.

Neuberger then arose to say that it was Nixon who brought the issue into politics. Neuberger quoted Nixon as having said, in a New York speech, that "a Republican chief justice," Earl Warren, delivered the Supreme Court's unanimous verdict against school segregation.

Case said he regarded that remark by Nixon as "unfortunate" and said he believes Nixon "feels the same way."

Other senators, including Southern Democrats who have joined in a "manifesto" calling for a reversal of the Supreme Court ruling, remained silent when Lehman said the manifesto "would be absurd, if it were not so deadly serious and highly dangerous."

CITES MANIFESTS

While he said "the statement of principles" in which 101 Southern senators and representatives advocated "lawful" resistance to the decree was not inflammatory in tone, "its effect was to support the doctrine of nullification." This doctrine, he said, has been "enunciated in one form or another" by the legislatures of Alabama, Georgia, Mississippi, South Carolina and Virginia.

"I only ask that the law be enforced in a lawful manner, and in such a graduated fashion as the courts themselves shall find feasible and practical," Lehman added.

Neuberger renewed his suggestion that Eisenhower call a White House conference on racial problems. He said the President should set up his own commission, which could move "promptly," rather than continue to urge a congressional commission.

Ike segregation attitude is both criticized, defended

News Fri. 3-16-56

WASHINGTON, March 16—(AP) —President Eisenhower's attitude toward segregation was both criticized and defended as debate over the controversial issue flared again today in the Senate.

Sen. Lehman (D., N. Y.) quoted the president as having advocated moderation and as having warned against "the extremists" in the segregation dispute. He asked whether Eisenhower is "a neutralist."

B'ham, Ala.

SEN CASE (R., N. J.) described this an an "unwarranted and unfair" suggestion and pleaded that there be no more "suggestion of politics" in debate over the school integration issue.

Sen. Neuberger (D., Ore.) told the Senate that it was Vice President Nixon who first injected politics into the issue. He said this was in a New York speech asserting that a "Republican chief justice," Earl Warren, delivered the Supreme Court's unanimous ruling against school segregation.

Case said he regards that reference by Nixon as "unfortunate" and believes the vice president feels the same way.

THE FLURRY of debate was touched off by a speech in which Lehman called upon the president to "assume the responsibility" for enforcement of the Supreme Court school integration decree. He said he could not "stand above the battle, like President Eisenhower, and say with fine impartiality that both sides must show restraint."

Case said in reply that "any suggestion that the President of the United States is a neutralist or stands above this quarrel (segregation) is unwarranted and unfair."

WHITE HOUSE BARS INTEGRATION ROLE

Times P. 13-C

WASHINGTON, March 19 — School desegregation is still a matter for the judicial branch to put into effect, the White House said today.

Reply. 3-20-56

Replying to eight Democratic Representatives who had urged delay in granting school funds to defiant states, a Presidential aide wrote:

New York

"Your question seems to involve an assumption that the judicial branch of the Government is incapable of implementing the Supreme Court's decision. The President will not make such an assumption and * * * views the use of extra-judicial remedies, such as suggested by you, as inconsistent with the philosophy of the Supreme Court decree which set forth the manner in which the court's decision was to be implemented."

The President "will not assume," the letter further stated, that "it is essential" to withhold school funds from states to insure compliance with the integration directives.

Gerald D. Morgan, special counsel to the President, signed the letter. It was a reply to the second inquiry by the group of eight Democrats.

Conditionally, the group favors not tying an anti-segregation amendment to legislation for school construction. They would stipuate, however, that the Executive Branch put funds for defiant states into a reserve and invite, or initiate, court tests to determine whether these states were complying with the Supreme Court decision.

Orderly Way to Lessen Tension Sought; Many Legal Questions Yet to Be Solved

Washington

President Eisenhower is deeply concerned — in fact, very much worried—about the emotional disturbance in America today over the problem of racial segregation in the public schools.

He talks a good deal about it to some of his visitors. He tries in an unspectacular and earnest way to encourage a public understanding of the issues involved, in the hope that there will be no outbursts of passion or violence.

He believes the churches can do a great deal toward this end. He is well aware of the complexities of the issue and doesn't believe the solution is simple or easy to achieve.

There's something innately conciliatory about Mr. Eisenhower's whole personality. It is his nature to search for ways to unite human beings who hold conflicting views or who nurture deep-seated prejudices against one another. P. 11-A

All his life that's been dominant in his makeup because he maintains an abiding faith in the power of human love in the world to reconcile differences between groups within a single nation as well as between nations.

Mr. Eisenhower has always been convinced that, where there are extremes in a controversy, there is a middle way. Sometimes this is called "moderation," but even that word sounds like "compromise" to those who are sincerely convinced of the absolute correctness of their own legal or moral position.

The President, however, is more inclined to approach questions of a highly controversial nature with the thought that it is a condition and not a theory which often confronts the Government. Thus, he realizes that as President he is charged with upholding the Constitution, but this does not necessarily mean that the only way available to him to uphold it is to use force.

The mere mention of coercion only serves to inflame many citizens who believe that a law which rests on force alone can never be accepted as morally right. There must be acceptance by the majority of the principle involved and, if it takes time to secure that acceptance, then the necessary time must be taken to accomplish that purpose.

What can the President do? He has conferred with Chief Justice Warren about the question of gradual application of the court decree on desegregation in order to explore what is the best way for the executive branch of the Government, which must present the matter constantly to the courts, to find a way to chart its course of action.

Thus, it may be that the South, by majority vote of the people of each State, will choose to separate the sexes in the schools so as to meet to some extent the fears about social mixing and intermarriage.

It may be that the Southern States will consider leasing some of their public-school buildings to private organizations and let the people decide whether to send their children to mixed public schools or to segregated private schools.

There are lots and lots of legal questions which have yet to be settled, and the important factor is time—to avoid precipitating emotional clashes while the American method of rational and nonviolent solution of difficult questions is in process.

Many Americans in the North have forgotten what "force" meant before. Mention of the possible use of "force" brings up bitter memories to the South. Arthur Krock, writing in the New York Times the other day, said:

"A common impression is that slavery was abolished after Appomattox without difficulty. Actually, slavery was made unconstitutional, not by a Supreme Court decision with this effect, but by a constitutional amendment submitted, after the House once declined to approve it, in January, 1865.

"Even then only 23 States of the required 25 ratified, Kentucky and Delaware rejecting, and the amendment became effective only through the action of provisional governments, put and held in office by the Union Army, in disenfranchised States of the beaten Confederacy."

For many decades the Supreme Court of the United States had held that, as long as equal facilities for education were provided by the States, they could be separate. But now nine men in the Supreme Court say the other judges in the past were wrong, and that segregation by race in public schools violates the Fourteenth Amendment which guarantees "equal protection of the laws" to everybody.

Has "equal protection" been achieved by separate but equal educational facilities or does it mean only compulsory integration? Merely to state the problem is to show how far from simple it is.

It is easy enough to say that the Supreme Court now has decided it and that all must obey. But obey what? How shall "integration" be carried out? What are its limitations? That's why the Supreme Court left all questions to be worked out in individual cases in the lower courts. This will take time.

Meanwhile, Mr. Eisenhower's role will not be to use or to threaten force but to try to bring about in an orderly way an adaptation of the school question to the circumstances which are faced in the South.

His whole concern now is how to lessen the tension between the races that has risen as never before to plague the people who for generations have lived amicably together.

Firm desegregation steps demanded

NEW YORK — "Firm and forceful steps to avert hostility and extremism" in school and transit segregation disputes were asked of President Eisenhower this week. P. 6

The plea was made by Dr. Maurice N. Eisendrath, president of the Union of American Hebrew Congregations.

He asked the President to issue a "call to conscience" to "All Americans to repair to the moral standards of the Republic in the resolution of these vexing problems."

HE ALSO recommended: The mobilization of a White House conference on civil rights "with participation by leaders of all religious and racial groups and every section of America";

Will Defend Constitution If Direct Challenge Comes

B'ham, Ala.

WASHINGTON, March 14 (UP)—President Eisenhower appealed today for "patience and understanding" in the bitter school segregation dispute to avoid a further increase in racial tensions.

He urged forces demanding immediate compliance with the Supreme Court's integration order to be "patient without being complacent." It will "take time," he said, for Southerners to "adjust their thinking" to this doctrine.

But he also made clear he will not shirk his duty "to defend and uphold the Constitution" if a direct challenge to that authority ever arises from persons seeking to defy the anti-segregation edict.

The President delivered a long and earnest discourse on the need for moderation when asked at his news conference about the "manifesto" signed this week by 101 Southern senators and congressmen.

This document, in which the signers pledged themselves to use "every legal means" to overturn the Supreme Court decision, has been attacked by civil rights advocates in Congress.

Sen. Pat McNamara (D., Mich.) told the Senate today the declaration "will forever be a dark page in American history." He said it "may not be outright sedition, but it certainly is subversive in its intent to undermine the integrity of this nation."

There was some talk among Northern senators of issuing their own manifesto expressing their approval of the court's ruling that assigning Negroes and whites to separate schools because of race is unconstitutional.

Mr. Eisenhower said that "extremists on either side are not going to help the situation." He said he is confident "the American people will approach the problem with intelligence, patience and understanding."

Noting that the Southern lawmakers specifically spoke of using legal means, he said that "no one in any responsible position has talked of nullification"—a direct effort by a state to challenge federal authority.

Any such move, he added, would create a "very bad" situation. But the President said he is not thinking in terms of "coercion . . . using force" in dealing with the problem. He said he is relying on the "good common sense" of the people to bring about the gradual integration envisioned by the Supreme Court.

The President also was asked about the possibility that Southern senators might block Senate confirmation of his appointees to the federal courts if they regarded them as anti-segregation advocates.

He replied that he probably would make a public issue of such a situation "if I thought there were unnecessary blocks." But he said he didn't want to get into a discussion of the Senate's "right to confirm or not confirm."

The President was asked if he thought it would be "useful" for him to call a bi-racial White House conference as proposed by Adlai E. Stevenson, his 1952 opponent and a contender for the 1956 Democratic presidential nomination.

Such a step was endorsed today by Sen. Richard L. Neuberger (D., Ore.) as a means of dealing with "this growing crisis before incalculable damage has been done."

Mr. Eisenhower agreed the proposal might be of some value. But he said he would prefer that Congress comply with his request to create a special bi-partisan commission to look into the whole field of racial rights.

Calls for Probe, With Subpoenas

New York, N.Y.
P. 1

By Rowland Evans Jr.

WASHINGTON, Mar. 14.—President Eisenhower, with unusual warmth of feeling, today appealed to South and North alike to be "understanding of other people's deep emotions" in the controversy over public school integration.

The President told his news conference: "extremists on neither side are going to help this situation and we can only believe that the good sense, the common sense, of Americans will bring this thing along."

Mr. Eisenhower took no direct issue with 100 Southern members of Congress, including several Republicans, who have signed a declaration pledging to use "all legal means to bring about a reversal" of the Supreme Court's Public School integration decree of May, 1954.

Calls for Inquiry

But he again asked Congress to set up a bi-partisan commission which "can subpoena witnesses and bring people in and compel them to testify" on the progress of integrating schools in the South.

The Justice Department is preparing a special message to Congress on this subject. It is understood the proposal will go beyond President Eisenhower's request in his State-of-the-Union message for a commission to investigate whether Negroes are being deprived of the right to vote or are undergoing "unwarranted economic pressures."

In response to questions, the President rejected Democratic demands that he call a White House conference of regional leaders in an effort to relieve the emotional tensions and bitterness growing out of the court's integration order.

Little Chance of Adoption

The commission proposal, which Sen. Hubert H. Humphrey, D., Minn., sponsored two years ago in the Senate, stands virtually no chance of adoption today. Southerners are wholly opposed to any semblance of force, as suggested by the President's use of the word "subpoena," in a search for solutions to the inflammatory question of civil rights.

But viewed as a whole, the President's appeal for moderation and restraint found a responsive and warm reception among powerful Congressional Democrats from the Deep South.

They found comfort, too in a statement by Mr. Eisenhower.

"Now, let us remember this one thing, and it is very important," he said, with heavy emphasis and some emotion. "The people who have this emotional reaction on the other side (the South) were not acting over these past three generations in defiance of law (in maintaining segregated schools). They were acting in compliance with the law as interpreted by the Supreme Court of the United States under the decision of 1896." That decision came in the case of Plessy vs. Ferguson and established the separate-but-equal doctrine overturned in 1954.

Herald P. 15

The President's careful phraseology and his refusal to be drawn into direct conflict with the Southern manifesto led some Southerners to conclude that he is well aware that four Southern states gave him their electoral votes in 1952. Others said his general position was the only sensible one he could take.

Won't Talk of Force

Mr. Eisenhower said he would not talk about coercion or the use of force in implementing the integration decree. It will take time for the South "to adjust their thinking and their progress to that," he said. "We are simply going to uphold the Constitution of the United States (and) see that the progress made as ordered by them is carried out."

But on Capitol Hill, Sen. Pat McNamara, D., Mich., hurled the bitterest accusation at signers of the Southern manifesto yet heard in the Senate.

"The declaration of nineteen members of the United States Senate presented in this chamber Monday is a matter so shameful, that it will forever be a dark page in American history," he said. "This declaration may not be outright sedition, but it certainly is subversive in its intent to undermine the integrity of the judicial system of this nation."

There was no rebuttal, although Sen. McNamara handed a copy of his brief speech to Sen. J. Strom Thurmond, D., S. C., a leader of the pro-segregationists, just before making it.

"Legal Means"

In his remarks today, President Eisenhower noted, as Adlai E. Stevenson did yesterday, that "the first thing about the manifesto" is its insistence on the use of "legal means" to overturn the decision. The President said: "No one in any responsible position anywhere has talked nullification." He did not mention several states that have overwhelmingly adopted resolutions of interposition, declaring the integration decision illegal.

He admonished the nation, too, not to forget that "there has been some progress." He said 250,000 Negro children in Southern and border states have already been integrated in the public schools and, "except for a certain area in which the difficulties are greatest, there has been progress."

"So let us remember," the President said, "that there are people who are ready to approach this thing with the moderation, but with the determination to make progress, that the Supreme Court asked for."

Americans for Democratic Action charged that what it called "inaction" by President Eisenhower has let civil disorder in the South "approach a level of conflict unknown in America since the Civil War."

In a letter to the President, the group urged him to "move immediately to use all the power and influence of the Presidency to restore law, order and sanity," and specifically asked him to convene a conference of Governors to obtain a pledge to "use the powers of the states to maintain law and guarantee constitutional rights." It also urged Mr. Eisenhower to call a conference of "responsible" white and Negro leaders to rebuild "bridges of communications" between Southern whites and Negroes.

SEES PROGRESS IN SOUTH

But Says He Will Call Parley if Necessary — Hennings Charges Rights Delay

By CHARLES E. EGAN

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, March 31—President Eisenhower indicated today he would take a stronger hand in the problem of race relations if Congress failed to adopt his proposal for a bipartisan commission to study the issue.

He made his intention clear today in a letter to Gov. LeRoy Collins of Florida. Governor Collins had urged the White House to call a conference of Governors of Southern states and their Attorneys General to discuss controversial issues in the whole field of racial relations.

The President, in his reply, declared he was "still hopeful" that Congress would act favorably on his plan for a commission, with subpoena powers, to investigate racial relations. He added:

PATIENCE URGED BY EISENHOWER ON INTEGRATION

BY ROBERT YOUNG

[Chicago Tribune Press Service]

Washington, March 14—President Eisenhower today called for patience and moderation on both sides in approaching the problem of racial integration in the nation's public schools.

The President told his weekly news conference:

"I have never yet given up my belief that the American people, faced with a great problem like this, will approach it intelligently and with patience and with understanding and we will get somewhere. And I do deplore any great extreme action on either side."

Quizzed on Conference

Mr. Eisenhower was asked if he believed it would be useful to use his influence to call white and Negro leaders from the southern states together in Washington to discuss "ways of relieving tensions," as suggested by Adlai E. Stevenson, candidate for the Democrat Presidential nomination.

The Chief Executive replied such a conference would be useful, but he does not favor it. He observed that in his State of the Union message of last January he proposed a joint commission authorized by Congress.

"The reason I want it authorized by Congress is a simple one." Mr. Eisenhower explained. "Because then, they can subpena witnesses and bring people in and compel them to testify.

Could Air Views

"Now, if I merely appoint, call in a party, and let everybody air their views, that would be one thing to do. But it is not thet hing I want done.

"This decision [the Supreme court decision banning public school segregation] was made, as I recall, in 1954 and we are getting along now to where some real investigative body ought t obe watching it and looking at it all the time.

"I would like to have that body organized, bi-partisan and with every point of view represented on it and as quickly as possible."

McNamara Assails Manifesto

Meanwhile today, Sen. McNamara [D., Mich.] assailed the anti-school integration manifesto issued last Sunday by most southern congressmen as "a matter so shameful that it will forever be a dark page in American history." The manifesto denounced the Supreme court ruling.

McNamara said in a senate speech that "this declaration may not be outright sedition, but it certainly is subversive in its intent to undermine the inegrity of this nation."

No Nullification Talk

Asked to comment on the manifesto at his news conference, the President remarked that the congressmen signing it spoke of using every legal means to overturn the court decision, that "no one in any responsible position anywhere has talked nullification." As to nullification, the overriding of constitutional federal authority, the chief executive continued:

"There would be a place where we get to a very bad spot for the simple reason I am sworn to defend and uphold the Constitution of the United States and, of course, I can never abandon or refuse to carry out my own duty."

The President asserted that extremists on either side are not going to help the integration situation. He said only the "good sense, the common sense of Americans will bring this thing along" and could not predict how long it will take to bring about integration in southern schools.

"However, should they decline, I will have to consider other types of conferences, including the kind you suggest."

The President conceded the "difficult adjustments confronting some localities in complying with the school decision of the Supreme Court," but asserted that considerable progress had been made in adjusting race relations in certain areas of the South.

President Sees Gains

The President's letter said that the advance already made "is a clear indication that we can look forward to even greater progress if we can look to moderate and responsible leadership supported by a spirit of patience on the part of all our people."

In his State of the Union Message last January, the President said he would recommend setting up a bipartisan study commission to investigate complaints of infringements of civil rights.

The question of racial relations has pushed steadily to the forefront of controversial domestic problems since the decision by the Supreme Court in May, 1954, outlawing segregation in public schools.

The commission suggested by the President would have the power to subpoena witnesses and to go thoroughly into its assigned subject.

So far the Administration has not given Congress its specific recommendations in the civil rights field. However, Justice Department officials reportedly are redrafting parts of the program, which presumably would emphasize the need to create the bipartisan group. The department's suggestions are expected to be advanced formally by Attorney General Herbert Brownell Jr.

Hennings Scores Brownell

Senator Thomas C. Hennings Jr., Democrat of Missouri, meantime charged that Mr. Brownell had delayed the civil rights proposals.

Senator Hennings issued a statement today commenting on press reports that the Attorney General soon would send to Congress an Administration civil rights program. The Missouri Democrat said he was "very glad" if Mr. Brownell was interested in civil rights "at last."

In the meantime, Senator Hennings said, the Administration should throw its full support behind four civil rights bills. They were favorably reported by the Senate subcommittee on constitutional rights, of which he is chairman, last Feb. 9. The civil rights program expected from Mr. Brownell is "more than covered" by the measures, which his subcommittee submitted to the Senate's Judiciary Committee, Mr. Hennings said.

The measures on which his subcommittee reported favorably were enumerated by Senator Hennings as bills:

¶To establish a civil rights division in the Department of Justice.

¶To protect the voting rights of all citizens in Federal elections and primaries.

¶An anti-lynching bill.

All four measures, the Missouri Senator said, are now on the agenda of the Judiciary Committee.

Times
P. 46-2

"What is required in this session," Senator Hennings said, "is full Republican, as well as Democratic support for these bills to get them on the Senate calendar, debated and enacted into law."

President Eisenhower's letter to Governor Collins today was in response to a telegram he received on March 22. In that telegram the Florida official suggested a review of "the South's present problems in the whole field of racial relations."

Fulbright Gives View

On Capitol Hill, the President's letter to Governor Collins brought varied responses.

Senator J. William Fulbright, Democrat of Arkansas, and one of the 101 signers of a manifesto issued by Southern lawmakers against the Supreme Court's decision, said it was "too bad" that the President "didn't set up a commission to study the problem before the Supreme Court went off on its tangent."

The Senator said that "it would be far better to have a conference than to send troops."

"I don't mean that a conference will do any good," Mr. Fulbright added, "but I do not oppose the idea. We are in a very serious position. Picking up the pieces after the Supreme Court has done the damage."

Senator Alexander Wiley, Republican of Wisconsin, said that "the President has hit it on the head." He said that if Congress did not act to set up a study commission "we then should have a conference."

Senator Price Daniel, Democrat of Texas, another signer of the manifesto, said he wanted to study the President's letter before commenting.

Senator Olin D. Johnston, Democrat of South Carolina, said he could not see "anything wrong" with the President's meeting with Governors of the Southern states.

"It might be helpful," he said. "He'd get their views in the matter and they could get his."

Senator Spessard L. Holland, Democrat of Florida, said the President's letter to Governor Collins "surely indicates that we are moving toward high-level discussions of these serious problems at an early date."

Collins Praises Letter

TALLAHASSEE, Fla., March 31 (UP)—Governor Collins praised as "cooperative and helpful" President Eisenhower's letter on the critical segregation issue. He said "the President obviously has given careful consideration to our problems. He has indicated a willingness to be cooperative and helpful. I appreciate this attitude."

THE PRESIDENT'S LETTER

WASHINGTON, March 31 (AP)—Following is the text of President Eisenhower's letter on segregation to Gov. LeRoy Collins of Florida today:

Your telegram of March 22 in which you suggest that a conference of Southern Governors and Attorneys General be called by me to review "the South's present problems in the whole field of racial relations" has had my thoughtful attention.

I am deeply cognizant of the difficult adjustments confronting some localities in complying with the school decision of the Supreme Court. It seems to me, however, that the progress already made in certain regions of the South before and since this decision is a clear indication that we can look forward to even greater progress if we can look to moderate and responsible leadership supported by a spirit of patience on the part of all our people.

As you and your associates are well aware, the recommendation I have already made to the Congress requesting the creation of a bipartisan commission to study and make recommendations in this area has not yet been accepted. It is my belief that this commission could provide the means for helpful discussion, and the restoration of a clearer understanding on the part of all our people of the real nature of the problems you mention.

I am still hopeful that the conference will act favorably upon my suggestion. However, should they decline, I will have to consider other types of conferences, including the kind you suggest. I trust that the responsibilities that lie primarily with state and local governments, as indeed the responsibilities of the Federal Government, may continue to be accepted, understood, and discharged by every official with an understanding of the deep human values which underlie this problem.

DESEGREGATION PROGRESS URGED BY EISENHOWER

Warns Against Getting Into 'Nasty Mess'

Thurs. 3-22-56

By J. W. DAVIS

WASHINGTON, March 21 (AP) — President Eisenhower declared today that "all the South" should show some progress toward racial desegregation.

P. 1

"I am for moderation, but I am for progress," he told his news conference.

He raised this plea:

"Let's don't try to think of this as a tremendous fight that is going to separate Americans and get ourselves in a nasty mess.

"Let's try to think of how we can make progress."

Eisenhower discussed racial matters four times in a half-hour of questions and answers which also produced various other presidential comments.

In Chilly Weather

Eisenhower walked from the White House to the conference room in the old State Department building in bright, but rather chilly weather.

He wore a three-piece gray suit, and kept the coat buttoned at the middle of its three buttons. His necktie was a quiet blue. He stood throughout the conference, as usual, and from time to time rested or tapped his fingers on a yellow desk blotter.

Eisenhower opened the conference by remarking that the Defense Department is making much progress in adopting recommendations of the Hoover Commission on government reorganization.

He also noted that Secretary of State Dulles is returning from his Asian tour, and said that such international visits are valuable. He said the same holds true of his meeting with Mexico's President Adolfo Ruiz Cortines and Canada's Prime Minister Louis St. Laurent, scheduled for White Sulphur Springs, W. Va., next week.

Senators Hit, Defend Ike on Segregation

World-Telegram + Sun P.3 Fri. 3-16-56

By The Associated Press.

WASHINGTON, March 16.—President Eisenhower's attitude toward segregation was both criticized and defended as debate over the controversial issue flared again today in the Senate. New York,

Sen. Herbert H. Lehman (D., N. Y.) quoted the President as having advocated moderation and as having warned against "the extremists" in the segregation dispute. He asked whether Gen. Eisenhower is "a neutralist." N. Y.

Sen. Clifford P. Case (R., N. J.) described this as an "unwaranted and unfair" suggestion and pleaded that there be no more "suggestion of politics" in debate over the school integration issue.

Assails Nixon.

Sen. Richard L. Neuberger (D., Oreg.) told the Senate it was Vice President Richard M. Nixon who first injected politics into the issue. He said this was in a New York speech asserting that a "Republican chief justice," Earl Warren, delivered the Supreme Court's unanimous ruling against school segregation.

Sen. Case said he regards that reference by Mr. Nixon as "unfortunate" and believes the Vice President feels the same way.

The flurry of debate was touched off by a speech in which Sen. Lehman called upon the President to "assume the responsibility" for enforcement of the Supreme Court school integration decree. He said he could not "stand above the battle, like President Eisenhower, and say with fine impartiality that both sides must show restraint."

Sen Neuberger renewed his suggestion that Gen. Eisenhower call a White House conference on racial problems.

He said it was "inconsistent" for the President to call for patience and moderation while asking for a Congressional commission which the Senator said would have "powers of compulsion."

Gen. Eisenhower suggested Jan. 5 the creation of a Congressional commission to make a continuing study of racial tensions. He has said such a body could be given Congressional authority to subpoena witnesses.

Fears Publicity on It Might Be Harmful—Says Brownell Consulted South's Leaders

Times, 5-24-56

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, May 23—President Eisenhower threw cold water today on a proposal that he call a conference of Southern Governors to discuss racial integration of the public schools.

The President indicated that he believed such a conference might inflame racial feelings rather than moderate tension. He implied that in a formal meeting, requiring a communiqué to be issued at its conclusion, the participants probably would feel compelled to stand by long-established positions.

General Eisenhower told his news conference, however, that Herbert Brownell Jr., Attorney General, had invited Governors and state Attorneys General in to see him about racial problems. The President did not amplify this statement, and it left officials of the Justice Department somewhat mystified.

Mr. Brownell was en route across the country and could not be reached for comment. Two of his top aides said he might have issued a personal invitation to Southern Governors or Attorneys General to discuss racial matters, but they knew nothing about any actual meetings.

Last February Adlai E. Stevenson proposed that the President call a meeting of Southern white and Negro leaders "to explore ways and means of allaying * * * rising tensions' over racial integration in the South. Last week, in convention here, the Textile Workers Union of America called on the President to summon the Southern Governors for a specific discussion of ways to bring about integration of the schools.

At the news conference today the President was asked whether he had any plans for a convocation of the Governors.

General Eisenhower said he had no such plans. Possibly in a reference to Mr. Stevenson's proposal, he said the thought had been advanced some months ago and explored "thoroughly" at the time. He then added:

"I am not sure that we want, at any time, a conference that would exacerbate this situation."

The questioner asked whether the President thought such a conference would exacerbate the situation.

"It would depend entirely on the way it was called * * ," the President said. "You certainly would have to look at the publicity that might come out of it * *. I am not so certain that is the way to approach it at this time.

"Make no mistake," he continued, "I am ready to confer with anybody on this problem who wants to come in and see me, but a formal conference, always there must be a communiqué—you people insist on it. Well, what are they going to say? And that could be very significant."

As to Mr. Brownell, the President's statement was:

"The Attorney General invited each Governor and his attorney general in to see him, either individually or if they wanted to, some of them came together."

PRESIDENT GIVES KEY TO BIAS FIGHT

Courageous Action by Heads of 3 Religions Is Needed, He Tells Interfaith Group

Wed. 6-6-56

President Eisenhower has expressed the hope that American religious and racial conflicts might be dealt with most effectively "on the moral and spiritual plane."

In a message to the National Conference of Christians and Jews, released yesterday, the President called for "courageous action by the leaders of the three great religious traditions of our country." He called such action basic to all other steps "that must be taken."

General Eisenhower's message was addressed to the Rev. Dr. John Sutherland Bonnell, minister of the Fifth Avenue Presbyterian Church; Dr. Maurice N. Eisendrath, president of the Union of American Hebrew Congregations; and the Rev. Dr. John A. O'Brien of the University of Notre Dame.

The three are national co-chairmen of the conference's Commission on Religious Organizations.

The White House statement was in reply to "A Message to the American People" prepared by the commission on the "growing religious and racial conflicts which are dividing our people." The commission had asked ministers, priests and rabbis to bring together religiously motivated, thoughtful people in building brotherhood and taking common action in lessening tensions and promoting goodwill.

The President hailed the commission's statement as "a ringing call for action by those best fitted to act." The commission had voiced alarm that the "crisis" in human relations would worsen "unless moderating moral leadership is more in evidence."

Following is the President's reply:

"The message to the American people, released by the Commission on Religious Organizations of the National Conference of Christians and Jews, is creative and constructive in its proposal that our religious leaders take the initiative in calling together concerned citizens on a local basis, to treat social and group tensions as they arise.

"Problems of such magnitude as American race relations and intercultural goodwill and cooperation can be dealt with most effectively on the moral and spiritual plane. Courageous action by the leaders of the three great religious traditions of our country is besic to all other steps that must be taken.

"A free people, in voluntary association, can unite their talents for the solution of all problems. Self-reliant minds recognizing moral responsibilities that conscience dictates will reach righteous solutions. But the struggle must be led by those with strong moral motivation and spiritual resources.

"The message to the American people is a ringing call for action by those fitted to act."

Ike Criticized On Segregation

Post + Times Herald P.21 Sat. 3-17-56

Washington

Two Democratic senators accused President Eisenhower yesterday of taking an "inadequate" stand in the bitter school segregation dispute. They called on him to "exercise leadership."

Sen. Herbert H. Lehman (D-N. Y.) told the Senate Mr. Eisenhower has tried to "stand above the battle" with his appeal for "moderation." He said everybody is for "moderation," but "who does (Mr. Eisenhower) identify as the extremists?"

Sen. Richard L. Neuberger (D-Ore.), like Lehman a member of the Senate civil rights bloc, said it is "incumbent on the President to exercise leadership in a national crisis as far reaching as this one." He called for action "as soon as possible."

Mr. Eisenhower promptly was defended by Sen. Clifford P. Case (R-N. J.). He said any suggestion that the President is "a neutralist" in the struggle is "unwarranted and unjustified." He urged that the segregation issue be kept out of politics.

Neuberger told Case that Vice President Richard M. Nixon first injected politics into the segregation disputs when he boasted that the Supreme Court decision was written by a Republican Chief Justice, Earl Warren.

At his Wednesday news conference, Mr. Eisenhower urged forces demanding immediate compliance with the Supreme Court's school integration order to be "patient without being complacent." He said it will take time for Southerners to adjust their thinking to the court's order.

SOLONS CLASH OVER RACIAL SEGREGATION

Daily World Sat. 3-17-56

Atlanta, Ga.

BY ROBERT E. THOMPSON

WASHINGTON—(INS)— Northern Democrats and a Republican clashed in the Senate Friday over President Eisenhower's attitude toward the bitter dispute over racial segregation. P. 1 28a

Two Democrats, Sens. Herbert H. Lehman of N. Y., and Richard L. Neuberger of Ore., attacked Mr. Eisenhower's call for patience and restraint on the issue, and urged immediate presidential action.

They were sharply rebuked by Sen. Clifford Case (R) N. J., who defended the Chief Executive and charged that the Democrats were "injecting politics" into the civil rights controversy.

The Senate flareup came as a House member disclosed that the Eisenhower administration may unveil its civil rights proposals next week.

Rep. Thomas J. Lane (D) Mass., chairman of a civil rights subcommittee, said he is certain a Justice Department spokesman will testify before his group Wednesday with the new recommendations.

Lane indicated that his subcommittee may vote out a civil rights bill on the same day although he noted that there are more than 50 such proposals now pending.

Rep. Emanuel Celler (D) N. Y., said he believes the Lane group will approve his bill which would protect all persons in exercise of their constitutional freedoms.

Celler, chairman of the House Judiciary Committee, also advocates establishment of civil rights commissions and reorganization of the Justice Department to set up a civil rights division.

Lehman touched off the Senate debate by questioning whether the President was trying to be a "neutralist" in the fight over segregation. He declared:

"I do not want violence. No serious person advocates violence. It must be avoided. But the law must be enforced and I call upon the President of the United States, and the Executive Branch of the government, to assume the responsibility to see that the laws are faithfully executed."

Case immediately retorted that "any suggestion" Mr. Eisenhower is neutral in the segregation fight is "uwarranted and unfounded." He declared that "the President's belief that the Supreme Court must be obeyed is clear."

Daily World

When Case charged that the Democrats were "injecting politics," Neuberger countered with the assertion that it was Vice President Richard M. Nixon who "put this into politics" when he referred to Chief Justice Earl Warren as a "Republican." P.4

Case replied that he regarded Nixon's remark in a Lincoln Day speech in New York as "unfortunate" and said he believes the Vice President "feels the same way about it."

Neuberger accused the President of offering "inadequate" and "inconsistent" reasons for rejecting his proposal that a White House conference be called on racial problems.

The Oregon Democrat declared: "...the situation calls for action as soon as possible. It is incumbent on the President, whose office represents the acme of national leadership, to exercise that leadership in a national crisis as grave and far-reaching as this one."

President Urges Racial Parley

He Will Call Talks If Congress Doesn't

Washington

By JAMES Y. NEWTON

President Eisenhower said yesterday he will consider calling a conference on racial problems if Congress fails to act on his suggestion for creation of a bipartisan commission "to study and make recommendations" on ways and means of easing tensions in the South. 38a

The President expressed his views on the race situation in a letter to Gov. Leroy Collins of Florida. The Governor had asked Mr. Eisenhower to call a conference of Southern Governors and Attorneys General to review "the South's present problems in the whole field of racial relations."

In Tallahassee, Fla., Gov. Collins said he appreciated the attention the President had given his conference suggestion.

Co-operation Cited

"The President obviously has given careful consideration to our problems," he said. "He has indicated a willingness to be cooperative and helpful. I appreciate this attitude."

Senator Hennings, Democrat, of Missouri, meantime, urged the Eisenhower administration to give full support to four civil rights bills reported favorably in February by the Senate subcommittee on constitutional rights. Senator Hennings is chairman of the group.

"The time has passed when the American Negro needs to have his constitutional rights studied," the Missouri Democrat said in a statement.

Text of Letter

In his letter to Gov. Collins, the President said:

"Your telegram of March twenty-second in which you suggest that a conference of Southern Governors and Attorneys General be called by me to review "the South's present problems in the whole field of racial relations," has had my thoughtful attention.

"I am deeply cognizant of the difficult adjustments confronting some localities in complying with the school decision of the Supreme Court. It seems to me, however, that the progress already made in certain regions of the South before and since this decision is a clear indication that we can look forward to even greater progress if we can look to moderate and responsible leadership supported by a spirit of patience on the part of all of our people.

"As you and your associates are well aware, the recommendation I have already made to the Congress requesting the creation of a bipartisan commission to study and make recommendations in this area has not yet been accepted. It is my belief that this commission could provide the means for helpful discussion, and the restoration of a clearer understanding on the part of all our people of the real nature of the problems you mention. Star P.5-B

"I am still hopeful that the Congress will act favorably upon my suggestion. However, should they decline, I will have to consider other types of conferences, including the kind you suggest. I trust that the responsibilities that lie primarily with State and local governments, as indeed the responsibilities of the Federal Government, may continue to be accepted, understood, and discharged by every official with an understanding of the deep human values which underlie this problem."

4 Bills Face Action.

The four bills mentioned by Senator Hennings are now before the full Senate Judiciary Committee. One is an anti-lynching measure, and the others would establish a civil rights division in the Justice Department, protect the voting rights of all citizens in Federal elections and primaries, and protect members of the armed forces against bodily attack.

White House Press Secretary James C. Hagerty said Attorney General Brownell would present the administration's civil rights legislative program shortly after Congress returns from its Easter recess.

Senator Hennings said the proposed administration program, as described in news stories, is "more than covered" by the four bills and other legislation already before his subcommittee.

"It seems evident to me," Senator Hennings added, "that to hold hearings on the measures the Attorney General intends to propose would not only delay congressional action on the subcommittee bills, but might endanger passage of civil rights legislation during this session of Congress."

Will Act If Congress Fails to Set Up Commission

Jun. 4-1-56

By JACK BELL

WASHINGTON, March 31 (AP) — President Eisenhower, calling anew for "moderate and responsible" leadership to solve racial problems, said Saturday he may set up conferences on the subject if Congress doesn't act.

He said he was still hopeful Congress will follow his recommendation that it set up a bipartisan commission. As outlined in his state of the union message Jan. 5 this commission would investigate charges that Negroes are being deprived of the vote in some localities and are "being subjected to unwarranted economic pressures."

New Orleans

Eisenhower made his remarks Saturday in a letter to Gov. Leroy Collins of Florida, who had called on the President to convene a conference of Southern governors and attorneys general for a discussion of racial relations.

La.

Collins, in a wire on March 22, had told the President that as a result of the supreme court's school integration decision and of activities of extremists on both sides "we are experiencing what well may be a deterioration of racial relations. We are fearful that progress we have made over many years may be dissipated."

'Thoughtful Attention'

Eisenhower replied that Collins' wire "has had my thoughtful attention" and added:

"I am deeply cognizant of the difficult adjustments confronting some localities in complying with the school decision of the supreme court. It seems to me, however, that the progress already made in certain regions of the South before and since this decision is a clear indication that we can look forward to even greater progress if we can look to moderate and responsible leadership supported by a spirit of patience on the part of all of our people.

"As you and your associates are well aware, the recommendation I have already made to the Congress requesting the creation of a bipartisan commission to study and make recommendations in this area has not yet been accepted. It is my belief that this commission could provide the means for helpful discussion, and the restoration of a clearer understanding on the part of all of our people of the real nature of the problems you mention.

Hopeful of Action

"I am still hopeful that the Congress will act favorably upon my suggestion. However, should they decline, I will have to consider other types of conference, including the kind you suggest. I trust that the responsibilities that lie primarily with state and local governments, as indeed the responsibilities of the federal government, may continue to be accepted, understood, and discharged by every official with an understanding of the deep human values which underlie this problem."

The President's indication that he might consider calling such a conference as Gov. Collins' suggested was hailed by some Southern Democrats in Congress as "encouraging" but the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People declared that a conference "should include representatives of both races."

Several of the governors who would be involved in a conference such as was proposed by Collins already have sponsored or joined in moves aimed at thwarting the supreme court's school decision.

Meantime presidential press secretary James C. Hagerty told reporters Saturday, in response to questions, that the administration's proposals for civil rights legislation will go to Congress in the near future, through the attorney general.

Filibusters Killed

Eisenhower said in his State of the Union message Jan. 5 that these recommendations would be made soon but they have been delayed, reportedly to permit officials to re-word them. It has been indicated they would include legislation to set up a bipartisan commission, and to establish a civil rights division in the justice department.

For years all civil rights proposals have been killed by Southern filibusters in the Senate. Most lawmakers assume this stalemate will continue. Some professed to see the bipartisan commission proposal as an effort to put the onus on a Democratic Congress for any failure to act on civil rights.

Sen. Holland (D-Fla.) endorsed Gov. Collins' suggestion for a conference as "an excellent one." He said he was encouraged that the President seemed to be "moving toward high level discussion of these serious problems at an early date."

"I think the sort of conference Gov. Collins has proposed should come before any attempt is made to set up a special commission," Holland said. "The conference could discuss law enforcement, comity with the federal government and the different conditions that prevail in different states.

'Might Be Helpful'

"From an exchange of views there is bound to come a better understanding of the problems which I believe have got to be solved on the local level in the states."

Sen. Olin D. Johnston (D- S. C.) said that if Eisenhower met with the governors and attorney generals of the Southern states "it might be helpful."

"He would get their views and he could give his," Johnston said. "I've always thought that it's not a bad idea for people to sit down and discuss matters."

Asked if he thought the proposal implied any new step toward federal intervention, Johnston replied he doesn't think it would "bring about any more than we already have."

The South Carolina senator said he is opposed to the establishment of a bipartisan race relations commission.

"I don't see where any good would come of it," he said. "The federal government ought to stay out of these matters and leave them to the states. I believe in states' rights.'

Roy Wilkins, executive secretary of the NAACP, said in New York his organization "hopes very much that the President will call a conference on de-segregation. But he said such a conference should include representatives of both races from the areas where the problem must be solved.

'Would Open Channels'

"A conference limited to elected state officials cannot present fairly the views of substantial minorities of Negro citizens in the affected states, nor can it reflect the opinion of moderates among the Southern whites," Wilkins said. He added:

"A White House conference, at the very least, would open the presently clogged channels of communication between races in the South."

Sen. Wiley (R-Wis.) said he hopes Congress will act on the President's proposal to set up a bipartisan commission. But if it doesn't, he said he would favor such a conference as Collins proposed.

"We Americans are in the habit of sitting around the table and reasoning out our problems," he said. "I am satisfied that we can keep our heads and find a way out of these difficulties."

Sen. Barrett (R-Wyo.) said he hopes a concrete White House proposal for establishment of the bipartisan commission will be forthcoming soon. He said that even if Congress doesn't act favorably on it, the proposal might prompt hearings at which "all the people who have a direct interest in this matter" could testify

Ways of Meeting 'Tough' Problem of Integration Aired At Press Conference

By Chalmers M. Roberts
Staff Reporter

President Eisenhower yesterday spelled out the way he believes Americans should meet what he called the 'very tough' recial segregation issue in the wake of the Supreme Court's decisions.

He told his news conference he believes that:

- Americans should not "think of this as a tremendous fight that is going to separate Americans and get ourselves into a nasty mess."
- Instead, "people have to search their own hearts if we are going to get a decent answer and keep going ahead."
- Americans should "try to think of it" in terms of "how can we make progress and keep going and not stop it."
- "It is incumbent on all the South to show some progress" since "that is what the Supreme Court asked for."
- There must, however, be both "understanding" in the Nation as a whole and "really sympathetic consideration of a problem that is far larger, both in its emotional and even in its physical aspects, than most of us realize."
- The "pulpits" of the Nation "do have a very great responsibility" in helping to solve the problem.
- In the last analysis, "the Constitution, as interpreted by the Supreme Court, is our basic law" even though the Court's views on racial segregation in the schools "was one thing in 1896" and "a very greatly different thing now."

The President summed up his own views by saying that "I am for moderation, but I am for progress." His views, in reply to several questions yesterday, amounted to a further spelling out of those he had given newsmen a week ago.

Yesterday, however, the political aspects of the President's "moderation" but "progress" approach also figured in his news conference for the first time.

The sum of his replies to two questions left Mr. Eisenhower, as the undoubted Republican candidate this fall, in a position which more and more Democrats are coming to believe will be one of their most difficult to counter—drawing Negro votes in pivotal Northern states but still retaining considerazle conservative Southern support; in short, bringing under one party roof many of the opposing elements in the race issue as the Democrats succeeded in doing for two decades under Presidents Roosevelt and Truman.

Asked to give possible reasons for reports that some Negro leaders were switching their political allegiance from the Democrats to the Republicans, the President gave this reply:

"Well, I have got a very good one. I have told you a dozen times that it is anybody's judgment as to whether I am trying to do it for 166 million people, not for any group.

"I don't care how you define them, how you separate them geographically or racially or religiously, I am for America, and that is what I am trying to do. So if they want to come in under that umbrella ,I welcome them with open arms."

LETTER FROM THE FIRST LADY: Judy Genier, 14, shows a classmate the missive in which Mrs. Eisenhower praised her for "making the road to integration" shorter.

Mrs. Eisenhower Hails a Girl For Her Fight on Segregation

Times Thurs. 1-26-56 P.31-C

ASHEVILLE, N. C., Jan. 25 (AP)—Judy Genier, 14 years old, a white New York State girl who chose to attend a Negro school here because she felt she was "wasting my life," has won the praise of Mrs. Dwight D. Eisenhower.

Judy displayed to students and teachers at Allen High School a letter from Mrs. Eisenhower. She wrote that Judy was "much to be admired for * * * making the road toward integration a shorter one."

Nobody at Allen, a combination boarding and day school operated by the Methodist Church, knew how Mrs. Eisenhower had learned of Judy's attendance.

In Washington, an aide to Mrs. Eisenhower said that she had learned about Judy's decision to go to the school from a letter from the girl's mother.

At Moriah Center, N. Y., Judy's mother, Mrs. Robert May, said, "I'm flabbergasted."

Mrs. May recalled that Judy had become interested in the school two years ago, when Allen's white principal, Miss Julia Titus, spoke at a Methodist Church center in the Adirondack Mountain hamlet here.

Shortly afterward, Mrs. May asserted, her daughter said, "I just feel as if I've wasted my life." She said she wanted to attend Allen and "let them know what it is like to have a white sister."

Judy led the eighth grade in scholarship last year, her first at Allen. Judy is the only white girl in the 130-student school, grades 7-12.

Allen officials quoted the letter Judy received as follows:

"It was gratifying to learn recently about the wonderful work which you are doing at Allen High School. You are much to be admired for your strength in making the road toward integration a shorter one, and I want to commend you for your courage and foresight in taking your place where you could accomplish so much toward making our country a better place for every citizen.

"The President joins me in sending you very best wishes in all of your endeavors."

ASHVILLE, N. C. — Mrs. Dwight D. Eisenhower has commended a 14-year-old white pupil at a Negro high school for 'making the road toward integration a shorter one." Chicago Ill.

In a letter to Judy Genier of Moriah Center, N. Y., and the only white pupil at Allen High school, the First Lady said:

ADMIRES HER

"It was gratifying to learn recently about the wonderful work which you are doing at Allen High school.

"You are much to be admired for your strength in making the road toward integration a shorter one, and I want to commend you for your courage and foresight in taking your place where you could accomplish so much toward making our country a better place for every citizen.

"The President joins me in sending you very best wishes in all of your endeavors."

JUDY'S SURPRISED

Judy's immediate reaction to the letter was one of surprise. She said she was "very surprised and happy" to receive the letter but "had no idea the letter was coming or why it came."

Of the other 130 pupils, she said: "They have accepted me and seem glad to have me."

Mrs. Eisenhower learned about Judy's decision to attend the school from the girl's mother, Mrs. Robert May.

Allen High school is a combination boarding and day school operated by the Methodist church. The principal anl most of the faculty are white.

HONOR PUPIL

Judy became interested in the school two years ago, Mrs. May recalled, when Allen's principal, Julia Titus, spoke at a Methodist church center in the Adirondack hamlet.

An honor student, Judy was elected class president last year and this year was chosen a member of the student council.

Her other activities include singing in the school choir, which travels throughout the state, and participating in the New Homemakers of America, an organization of home economic students.

Segregation Leaders From Twelve States Meet; Organize Fight To Maintain Racism

World Tues. 1-3-56

Doctrine Of Interposition Gains Support Of Forces

P. 7

Birmingham, Ala.

MEMPHIS, Tenn. —(SNS)— The forces of segregation met here last week and added the muscle of unity to its fight to halt the forces of integration!

The move occurred here last week when segregation leaders from 12 Southern states met and banded together into a single organization, the Federation of Constitutional Government, designed "to coordinate the efforts" of segregation forces throughout the South.

Observers from New York, New Jersey and Illinois were present at the secret "organizational meeting."

A statement handed to reporters who were made to wait outside said the federation "will act as a coordinating and information development organization, and will not interfere with the activities of presently existing patriotic organizations or those that may come into existence."

"Courageous political leaders at all levels-national, state and city — must have organized support," the statement said. "If we fail them, they face defeat or discouragement. Remember, the minority pressure groups are united and untiring."

45 PRESENT

About 45 persons, including Sen. James O. Eastland (D. Miss.) and Georgia's Atty. Gen. Eugene Cook, both avowed segregationists, attended the secret meeting.

The new organization adopted a resolution supporting the doctrine of interposition which it said five states had used to "nullify unauthorized acts of the federal government."

The interposition doctrine, intended to void a U. S. Supreme Court decision, is to be considered this month by the Virginia Legislature as a means of resisting integration of the state's public schools.

The FCG resolution called on the legislatures of other Southern states to support Virginia on the "issue of state rights."

John U. Barr, a New Orleans businessman, was named chairman of an executive committee designed to "organize an aggressive campaign" against integration.

Others named to the executive committee:

Micah Jenkins ,Charleston, S. C.; R. B. Crawford, Farmville, Va.; Circuit Court Judge Tom P. Brady, Brookhaven, Miss.; W. M. Shaw, Homer, La.; J. Evetts Haley, Canyon, Texas; State Sen. James D. Johnson, Crossett, Ark.; State Sen. Walter C. Givhan, Stafford, Ala.; T. Walker Lewis, Memphis; Joseph Jenkins, Gainesville, Fla.; Edward H. Malone, Louisburg, N. C.; Hugh C. Grant, Augusta, Ga., and Mrs. Hallie M. Kendall, Charleston, W. Va.

Executive committee chairman Barr said "We are going to coordinate the work of such groups as the Citizens Councils, the States' Rights Council of Georgia and the Committee of Individual Rights in Virginia."

Tells Why He's Glad He's White

Defender Sat. 1-14-56 P. 8

Chicago, Ill.

By REV. ROBBINS RALPH

(Rev. Robbins is associate superintendent and minister of church extension for the Florida Congregational Christian conference. This sermon was preached at Rev. Ralph's former pastorate, the Church-by-the Sea, Madeira Beach, Fla.)

I'm glad I was born white, since this is a white man's world. There are lots of reasons. I can go into any kind of a store and be fitted for a suit. My wife can try on a dress in any dress shop in any city in the country. We can board a bus or train or boat, if we can pay for the ticket, and we can occupy any seat that is available, and no questions asked.

I'm glad I am a white man. I can go to any theatre, and choose my own seat. If I were a Negro, I could not do that. I enjoy baseball, and when I go to Al Lang Field, all I have to have is one dollar and I can enter the main gate and go anywhere I choose in the great shaded grandstand. Negroes have to sit on bleachers out in the sun. I'm glad I'm a white man.

I'm glad my children have the privileges and advantages of freedom. The public schools that have been open to them are fine schools. They could attend any private school or college in the country to which I could afford to send them and for which they are intellectually qualified.

NO JOB BIAS

They may choose their own careers. They may apply for any job in the country, and the only requirement is that they have the ability to perform the work. And that they be white. I'm glad my children are white, since this is a white man's world.

And yet I'm not altogether glad that I'm a white man. There is something on my mind. Since this is a white man's world, I rather naturally get the impression that I'm a better man than the Negro. More intelligent, more cultured.

Take the matter of money, for example. I know how to use money fairly, wisely. I don't spend it as fast as I get it, and then go on relief when it is gone. I don't own a television set because I can't afford it. I can't drive a Cadillac because, for my money, there are other values in life more important.

BOTHERS ME

But the Negroes who live in tumble-down shacks have forests of TV towers over their quarters. They love to drive flashy and powerful cars. Their cultural scale is obviously lower than mine. Or so I am tempted to think.

And yet, something bothers me. It just happens that I like to live in an adequate and modern house, set on a spacious land-scaped lot, in a pleasant neighborhood. How do I know what I would do if this privilege were denied me? How do I know what I would do if I had to live in the narrow confines of a crowded slum?

If it were impossible for me to go out and buy, or build, or rent the kind of a house I like? If I could not go to the better churches, could not spend my money at the better theatres, could not play golf at the country club?

DO LIKE NEGROES

I imagine I'd get a television set as soon as I could manage the down payment. Would I be able to keep up the payments? I don't know. If a white man and I work together in a certain place and the employer has to let one of us go, I'll be the one laid off. I can't be sure of the future anyway. I might as well enjoy TV while I can. And if they have to take the set back to the store, so what?

And as for the Cadillac, this is a white man's world. And in the white man's world, a Cadillac is a symbol of success, achievement, of power and prestige. Since I happen to be a white man, there are also other ways in which I can satisfy the urge to be somebody; other ways in which I can prove myself successful.

I don't need a Cadillac. But if these other avenues were closed to me; if I could not have a good house to live in; if I could not hobnob with the best people; if I could walk through the hotel dining room as a waiter but not as a diner; if I could go out in the municipal pier with a broom to sweep the floor but not with a pole to catch the fish; if my wife could to into the homes of the rich and elegant to serve tea but not to take tea — you know, I think a Cadillac might be tempting.

No, I'm not altogether happy about being a white man in a white man's world. This world gives me the impression that I'm a better man. But the horrible and disturbing thought is that I may be wrong.

The cards are stacked in my favor. The comparison is not fair. Maybe I'm an inferior person, and don't know it.

No I'm not entirely happy about being a white man in a white man's world. There is something gnawing on my conscience. It is on my conscience that I and my sort are depressing my brother and his children . . . When we elevate ourselves by stepping on the colored race, by the same act, we send the colored race down.

When we deceive ourselves into the notion of innate and God-given superiority, by the same token we sometimes force upon the Negro a sense of inferiority which dooms him to live way below his best.

If he is sensitive (and he is human), something gets crushed. Why fight against a stone wall? Why push in where you obviously are not wanted? You can always go back to shanty-town, the television, the Cadillac. For excitement and adventure you can always turn to moonshine liquor and the bolita game.

I love this church, and the people in it. I love them very greatly. Could I come to church some Sunday morning with a Negro friend and could we worship quietly together? I don't know. We had better be doing some thinking and some praying about these things.

WHITE MAN'S COUNTRY

At present, it is still a white man's country, the American Negro today being where all our ancestors were 200 years ago, where all women were 100 years ago. We do not well to boast of freedom until the last battle has been fought and won.

I happen to be white. I want to be a Christian. The white man part of me is satisfied the way things are. The Christian part of me is restless and unhappy and guilty and ashamed.

The Christian part of me will not be at peace until this is not a white man's country nor a black man's country, but God's country. For all men are His children.

I beg your pardon if I have spoken in such a way as to disturb your thinking. I beg God's pardon if I have not.

Cops shoot up home

Afro-American Sat. 1-28-56 P. 1

Baltimore, Md.

PENSACOLA, Fla. — Mystery of who riddled the residence of Dr. Charles A. Augustus with bullets on Jan. 13, was cleared up Tuesday with the suspension of two white policemen.

A barrage of shots were fired shortly before midnight into Dr. Augustus' home, located in a white neighborhood, as the family slept.

Windows were shattered in the living room, guest bedroom and the bedroom occupied by the two Augustus children.

ACCUSED OF the shooting were Patrolmen George C. McLarty, 25, and Randall E. Sellers, 23.

The charges were filed by Police Chief Crosby Hall with the Civil Service Board. Criminal charges may be added later, he said.

In addition to the shooting, the two officers face charges of attempted rape.

The assault attempt occurred when their radio car became stuck in a sandy strip near a colored neighborhood, City Attorney F. Churchill Mellen said.

McLarty reportedly banged on a door of one of the residences and shouted:

"Open up, it's the law."

* * *

UPON DISCOVERING that the matron who answered his knock was alone, he drew his gun and attempted to rape her.

When she fought him off, he went next door where an attempt was made on another woman.

Earlier, the two officers had driven up beside another police car and asked:

"If you heard that Dr. Augustus' house was shot up tonight, how long would it take you to get out there?"

A short time later Dr. Augustus' home was riddled with three shotgun blasts and bullets from a .38 calibre pistol.

Anti-Integration Party Proposed

Times-Picayune P. 12 New Orleans, La.

JACKSONVILLE, Fla., Feb. 1 (AP) — Fred H. Kent, chairman of the board of control over state universities, has proposed a new political party as a means of combatting racial integration.

"From a practical angle such a party should become immediately, even if limited to the solid South, the controlling factor in the government of this country," Kent said in a talk before the Jacksonville Junior Chamber of Commerce.

"In almost every election we would be the balance of power in the country. We would force presidential elections into the House of Representatives. In Congress we could control the organization of both houses."

Collins Says Florida Cannot Afford Racial Issue Turmoil

Constitution Atlanta, Ga. Wed. 2-8-56

TAMPA, Fla., Feb. 7 (AP)—Gov. Leroy Collins declared today Florida canont afford to get mixed up in turmoil over racial issues and denounced any office seeker who campaigns by "inflammatory statements calculated to arouse fear and hatred."

Using perhaps his strongest words on the racial problem, Collins told a gathering of several hundred Tampa businessmen at a Florida State Fair luncheon:

"Believe me when I say Florida cannot afford an orgy of race conflict and discord."

Collins saved his remarks on racial issues until the end of his prepared speech, which he read. He led up to his remarks on segregation by telling of present and future industrial developments in Florida. He said he wanted to see Florida have the best of everything.

"Above all, this is why I do not want to see us waste our energies in the fruitless furor of agitating racial misunderstanding.

"As your governor . . . I wish to emphasize that this is a time, perhaps above all others, when our people should be united in a common dedication of unselfish service to promote the welfare of all."

Then he added:

"One of our most effective appeals (to investors) has been that we can offer soundness, stability and security. Nothing will turn these investors away quicker than the prospect of finding communities hepped up by demagoguery and seething under the tension and turmoil of race hatred.

"We can preserve segregation without furor. We have demonstrated this effectively up to this time."

Florida Grocer Forced to Sell Out

Richmond Heights Boycott Succeeds

Courier Sat. 2-18-56 Pittsburgh, Pa. P. 6

RICHMOND HEIGHTS, Fla.—An aroused citizenry of this all-Negro community, seventeen miles south of Miami, Fla., successfully boycotted the operator of the Richmond Heights Food Market and forced him to sell out the store and quit the community. This action was started two weeks ago when the white merchant, Jack Richards, slapped a 6-yearold child.

The successful boycott of the community's only store was obtained by about 90 per cent cooperation from the residents, with neighbors shopping for neighbors in stores along the highway, and the operation of a car pool for shoppers.

At a mass assembly reminiscent of a New England town meeting, the citizens of Richmond Heights met at the school to hear a report on their boycott by James M. Reid who in turn introduced the new store owner, Saul Kricum, of Philadelphia. Mr. Kricum stated that the policies he will follow in the store and heard from the group the kind of store they wanted in the community.

Other speakers at the meeting were Mrs. Ola Stevenson, Mrs. Ora D. Taylor, Mrs. M. K. Reid and George Davidson, a developer in the Richmond Heights area. Willie L. Redding, commander of the American Legion Post, presided.

The group voted to continue its mass assembly and to work on other projects to benefit the community. They will next demand the school board to begin construction of a permanent school, conduct a registration drive to enroll every household, build and furnish a playground, and launch a drum and bugle corps.

Bryant Supports Segregation

Herald Thurs. 1-26-56 Miami, Fla.

Different Standards Cited by Candidate

TAMPA — (UP) — C. Farris Bryant, candidate for governor, came out Wednesday emphatically for segregation and warned that "violence, bloodshed and death" will result if integration is forced on the south.

Bryant, who was scheduled to address the Tampa League of Women's Voters on "constitutional government," was badgered by club members on the segregation issue until he finally gave up and said, "I'm for segregation, yes, ma'm."

The veteran legislator explained that "my line of thinking comes not only from my life but the lives before me and from what I'm accustomed to. In the homes of Negroes we find different intellectual levels and moral and sanitary standards."

Bryant said, however, "Negroes have come very far in these past 100 years, but not as far as they will go in the next 100. I feel that it would not be for two groups with such different standards to be thrown into direct contact."

Bryant predicted that forcing integration in the schools of the South would cause parents to take their children out of public schools and put them into private institutions.

Florida Solon Seeking Pow For Governor On Segregat

Advertiser Thurs. 3-15-56 P. 6-A

TALLAHASSEE, Fla., March 14 (AP)—State Rep. Kenneth Ballinger of Tallahassee today wired all members of the Florida House proposing a special session of the Legislature to give the governor sole control over admission of students to state universities. Montgomery

Ballinger said giving the governor such authority would aid Florida in opposing racial integration at the universities because a governor cannot be imprisoned for refusing to perform administrative duties. Ala.

COLLINS OPPOSED

However, Gov. LeRoy Collins, who alone has authority to call the Legislature into special session, said the plan did not sound feasible to him.

Collins, who has said he would call a special session to consider segregation problems if it is determined any good would come from it commented:

"Offhand, it certainly does not sound good to me. I don't think it is consistent with our form of government to vest that much power in any single official."

Ballinger suggested submission of an emergency constitutional amendment to the voters which would give the governor "the final supervisory authority over requirements to the universities and colleges because the governor is the only state authority who cannot be placed in federal prison for refusing to perform administrative duties."

Ballinger's telegram to his 94 fellow House members followed the U.S. Supreme Court's order of Monday that Virgil Hawkins, Daytona Beach Negro, be admitted to the law school of the University of Florida.

"Florida must act promptly and courageously to meet this crisis," Ballinger said.

Florida Politics Feed Racial Tension

Post & Times Herald, Washington, D.C. Mon. 5-7-56

By Robert E. Baker

TALLAHASSEE, Fla., May 6 — Politics has fertilized the seed of racial stress in Florida.

A few months ago, the Sunshine State was pictured as one of the more moderate southern states in its reaction to the Supreme Court's school desegregation decision. The picture has changed.

Baker

Floridians will go to the polls in Tuesday's Democratic primary and vote for any of six candidates for Governor. The results will show how deep have burned the flames of racial stress, fanned vigorously in the past three campaign months.

Gov. Leroy Collins, running for reelection, has always said he favored segregation of whites and Negroes. He said he would do everything legally possible to maintain it.

He specifically asked the 1955 State Legislature to do nothing about the segregation problem. Unlike other southern states, which passed numerous and various laws intended to preserve segregation, the Legislature passed only a mild one: Giving local school boards greater assignment powers. Stronger measures got nowhere.

Need for Gradualism

Up until Feb. 1 of this year, Florida was considered moderate in its reaction. Its Supreme Court brief had stressed the need for gradualism in complying with the desegregation decision. Many observers credit this brief with influencing the court's implementation decree.

On Feb. 1, Sumter L. Lowry of Tampa, retired lieutenant general of the Florida National Guard, announced his candidacy. Up to that time, segregation was not an issue. Since then, it has become for all practical purposes, the only issue.

Lowry, who has said he feels "absolutely sure the hand of the Lord is on my shoulder," definitely promised: "There will be no mixing of races if I am Governor."

Integration, said Lowry, would "destroy the wonderful qualities of the white so that people will have no initiative and backbone for anything. We will become a nation of weaklings." He added he had nothing but the kindest feelings toward Negroes.

Farris Bryant of Ocala, former speaker of the State House, another candidate, at first attacked Lowry's performance. Now Bryant is whooping up the segregation issue.

Warren Drops Restraint

Another candidate, former Gov. Fuller Warren, maintained restraint until two weeks ago. Now he says NAACP stands for the National Association for the Advancement of Collins Politics. If school segregation ends, he warned, "the next step is intermarriage" and "ultimately there would be no longer a white race and no longer a Negro race."

He swore by affidavit that he would maintain segregation. His solution: Simply repeal the Fourteenth Amendment, upon which the Supreme Court based its decision.

But the strong anti-integration stands of Warren and Bryant make no difference to Lowry. He said they and Collins are "three peas in a pod and a vote for any of them is a vote for mixing of the races."

Collins continues through the storm to discuss planks of his platform—revision of the State Constitution, reorganization of state government, reapportionment of the Legislature. "If you want racial hatred, don't vote for Leroy Collins," he said.

But Lowry's only platform has been maintenance of segregation. Bryant and Warren have virtually dropped their other planks and speak now almost exclusively of their segregation stand.

Collins has been charged with failing to prevent integration on municipal buses (by not calling out the sheriff to enforce segregation); with being under the influence of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People when he commuted the death sentence of a Negro, convicted of raping a white woman, to life imprisonment; with not stopping a Negro church convention from meeting in Miami Beach where the Negroes stayed at hotels usually reserved for whites and usually closed at this time of year.

State Aide Suspended

Collins was forced under pressure to suspend Henry Arrington, a Negro he had appointed to the post of assistant state attorney for Dade County (Miami). The appointment, when made, was called a step forward in race relations.

Peaslee Streets, Palm Beach County constable, is another candidate for Governor. He is the only one to announce support of the Supreme Court decision. Recently he sponsored a 15-minute television film consisting of a white woman's description of her rape by four Negroes. The sixth candidate is W. B. Price, Jacksonville used car dealer.

Political observers are unable to tell just how much the racial campaign has riled Floridians. If none of the candidates wins a majority of the total votes cast on Tuesday, a runoff will be held May 29.

Observers feel damage already has been done to Florida's moderacy. In 1954, after the Supreme Court decision, the state had pointed out reaction might consist of "a tidal wave of hate and inflamed emotions." But it added the decision could also be looked upon as "a high goal which this court has fixed for men of good will to strive to attain in due course if rational consideration is given to human frailty and faith is maintained in the slow but sure upward movement of democracy."

Florida's course may be set Tuesday.

Gunman Shoots Up City After Sidewalk Feud

Daily World, Atlanta, Ga. Wed. 5-16-56

TAMPA, Fla.—(INS)— A white man whipped out a gun and sent several shots whistling through Tampa's business section Tuesday when he became embroiled in an argument with three Negroes over who had the right-of-way on the sidewalk.

No one was injured in the incident, which wasn't without its humorous aspects.

When the shouts rang out a woman wearing a large white hat and a polka-dot dress rushed screaming into a telephone company building and reported: "A man with gun is trying to kill me." She demanded that police be called to protect her, but dashed out before officers arrived.

THREE TARGETS

The three "targets" in the wild shooting spree took off with John Landy-like speed and still have not been located.

Hours after the incident, which occurred in front of the postoffice building Tuesday morning, police had pieced together this story:

John A. Davant, 46-year-old Tampa mechanic was walking along the street when three Negroes deliberately blocked his path. He pushed them aside and continued on, with the trio dogging his footsteps making insulting remarks.

Davant warned them to leave him alone but instead, one of the men struck Davant on the head with his fist. Davant pulled a gun from his shirt and fired one shot into the sidewalk and two more at two of the fleeing Negroes. The third man remained momentarily to grapple with Davant, and then made tracks with his companions.

The shots sent pedestrians dashing for cover and several persons reported hearing the bullets whizz by their heads.

Davant was charged with discharging fire arms in a public place and was released under $100 bond.

Arms Hunt Ordered In Delray

DELRAY BEACH — The City Commission Friday night gave police here the power to search all persons and cars for weapons in a move to "prevent riots" over Negro use of the municipal beach.

Following Wednesday's action in which Negroes were barred from the beach and city pool, the latest emergency ordinance "forbids the carrying of weapons on the person or in any motor vehicle."

Based on the "great amount of tension existing in the city and the unusually large number of residents of this city and nearby areas who have recently purchased large quantities of guns and ammunition," the ordinance, unprecedented in South Florida, gave Police Chief R. C. Croft authority "to set up road blocks as may be necessary."

After a 35-minute closed caucus, the commission once again minus Commissioner Catherine Strong, approved without hesitation the city's latest effort to combat a situation which exploded with Mrs. Strong's statement in district federal court last week that the mile-long ocean beach here was open to all races.

The commission cited "persistent rumors have come to the attention of the City Commission that trouble will soon break out on the municipal beach which may lead to injury and death to residents of this city."

Florida City Votes Ordinance to Halt 'Racial Tension'

New York

DELRAY BEACH, Fla., May 23 (AP)—The Delray Beach City Commission adopted an ordinance today to prohibit Negroes from using the municipal swimming pool or the municipal beach.

Times 5-24-56

The commission called its action an "emergency ordinance to prevent interracial riots within the city."

"Racial tension has increased in this community to the point that the life of one commissioner has been threatened," the commissioners said.

The law was adopted without discussion in a public session. The action followed by eight days dismissal of a suit in Federal court at Miami in which nine negroes sought the use of the facilities.

The city previously has had no law to prevent the "intermingling of the negro and white races," the commission noted.

The maximum penalty for violation of the law was set at $500 fine and ninty days in jail.

Negroes Drop Suit At Florida Resort

Washington Post, Jacksonville Times, 5-14-56

WEST PALM BEACH, Fla., May 14—A group of Negroes seeking the right to use public swimming facilities in the exclusive little Florida community of Delray Beach dropped their law suit after one witness for the city testified Negroes never were barred.

The base, heard by District Federal Judge Emmett C. Choate, was dismissed "without prejudice" with the consent of both parties.

Delray Beach is located just south of West Palm Beach, center of the Gold Coast's high-society life during the winter months.

Prior to filing the suit, the Negroes had petitioned the city commission to give them the right to use the beaches. Catherine Strong, former mayor of Delray and the only witness to take the stand, said the commission never answered the petition because it had never said Negroes could not use the swimming facilities.

Asked whether this meant the beach would be integrated, Mrs. Strong replied: "This means we are going to continue exactly as we have been. No one has told the Negroes to stay off the beaches. There's nothing new about this."

Bars Lifted On Public Facilities

Court Dismisses Federal Action

By RUSS MARCHNER
Herald Staff Writer

WEST PALM BEACH — In momentous action, without precedent in Florida, the city of Delray Beach gave the green light in federal court Tuesday to integration on public beaches. Herald

By agreeing to an order from District Judge Emett C. Choate dismissing the suit of nine Negroes to obtain use of Delray beaches, the Gold Coast city and its commissioners indicated that all public recreational facilities in the city are open to Negro use.

Former Delray mayor Catherine Strong, whose lone testimony that Negroes were "welcome to use the beach" caused a joint motion for dismissal, told The Herald that "the public beaches always have been open to all people regardless of color." Miami Fla.

When asked if the city's action in the case implied that all public recreational facilities are open to white and Negro alike at all times, Neil MacMillan, one of two defense attorneys, said, "In that respect I think the order speaks for itself."

Mrs. Strong retorted, "They always have been."

She added, "We're still not responsible though for what individual people will do. Everybody will be protected, white or black; They're the public."

MacMillan was joined by Miami Attorney William Steel, the other defense counsel, when he said, "the city is satisfied with the outcome of the case."

"We contemplate no further action. We hope this will settle it for awhile."

Apparently, neither county nor city laws will stand in the way of the plan. Harry Johnston, Palm Beach county attorney, and John H. Adams, Delray Beach city attorney, both said they knew of no ordinances blocking mixing of the races at beaches.

State Atty. General Richard Ervin said in Tallahassee that he did not know whether any state law could be applied in the case. He would not comment on the integrated bathing beach approval.

Francisco A. Rodriquez, Tampa Negro attorney, who filed the suit for the Delray Negroes asking a permanent injunction allowing beach use, was asked by The Herald, "Does that mean that you got what you wanted?"

"Absolutely," answered Rodriquez.

"As far as I know, it is the first time in the state of Florida and one of the firsts in the South that there has been an official statement that Negroes may use a recreational facility without discrimination," he said.

"In my capacity," he said, "as state-wide representative for the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People and in private practice, I have tried numerous cases of this type."

"From a practical standpoint it sets a valuable precedent," Rodriquez commented. "We always have had the legal standpoint."

"With intelligent action by both parties," the Negro said, "it may well be that this will serve as an open door toward the settlement of all these civil rights cases in the field of recreation." Wed 5-16-56

Mrs. Strong, Delray mayor when the complaining Negroes said they were denied use of the lone city beach in 1954, said under Rodriquez's questioning, "I don't recall any city official telling them not to use the beach."

"They stopped using it themselves," she observed.

In addressing one of the Negro complainants who sat across the Datura Street courtroom, Mrs. Strong said, "Ozzie (Youngblood) remembers that when we were children we both used that beach."

She indicated that after she became mayor Jan. 1, 1954, she gave instructions to the police department that "regardless of who wanted to use the beaches, they should provide protection."

Judge Choate handed down the dismissal order after saying, "I have been advised by counsel that they feel that they can work out their own problems."

"I want to congratulate counsel on both sides in the manner they have disposed of this problem in contrast to the manner in which the same problem has been handled in other states."

He continued, "We must keep in mind that these things cannot be accomplished in a day or a year."

During pre-trial conferences, Judge Choate said the integration issue as a whole "poses some very serious joint problems" for both white and Negro races.

He said integration "has to be thought out by both sides" over a reasonable period of time, with due consideration for the state's big tourist industry.

"We don't want to change things to hurt our tourist business."

Choate, a native of Ohio, is 64 and has been a resident of Florida since 1926. He is in West Palm Beach for a week for federal court's annual visit to that area.

4 Negroes Seek WPB Course Use

Herald P.4-b Sun. 5-27-56 Miami, Fla.

File Petition With City Commission

Herald Bureau P.4

WEST PALM BEACH —Four Negroes petitioned the City Commission Saturday to allow them the use of the city's municipal golf course following what they said was a denial of that use last week by the course manager.

In action similar to that taken in February, 1955, by nine Delray Beach Negroes to use the public beach there, Drs. W. H. Collier and G. J. Gaines, Carney Green and Arthur Davis petitioned the City Commission, the golf commission and City Manager Keith Chinn for use of the southend 18-hole course.

The four, through attorneys W. H. Holland and I. C. Smith, said they were denied "the use and enjoyment of the golf course" by its manager, C. R. Philips.

The petition sent in the mail Friday, according to Holland, said that Philips based his denial on a directive from the golf commission to deny the use of the course to Negroes.

The City Commission is expected to receive the petition officially at Monday's meeting.

The action marks the first move by local Negroes to force the integration issue here.

The local action said that the four, "not only citizens of the city, but taxpayers as well," were met by Philips Thursday when they tried to gain admission to the course by paying green fees.

After stating that "the golf course was being used . . . by people of other races, other than Negro, who were neither citizens, nor residents, nor taxpayers of the city," the petition asked that:

The three city offices "rescind, repeal, countermand, annul, and revoke any and all directives, regulations, or ordinances, which deny the undersigned and other members of the Negro race use . . . of the country club on or before the first day of June."

The petition indicated that failure to do so by that date would mean that "other remedies" would be sought by the quartet.

Florida Town Bans Negroes From Beach

Constitution Thurs. 5-24-56 Atlanta Ga. P.2

DELRAY BEACH, Fla., May 23 (AP)—The Delray Beach City Commission adopted an ordinance today to prohibit Negroes from using the municipal swimming pool or the municipal beach.

The commission called its action an "emergency ordinance to prevent interracial riots within the city."

"Racial tension has increased in this community to the point that the life of one commissioner has been threatened," the commissioners said.

The law was adopted without discussion in a public session. It came eight days after the dismissal of a suit in federal court at Miami in which nine Negroes sought use of the facilities.

The city previously has had no law to prevent the "intermingling of the Negro and white races," the commission noted. This was the basis for dismissing the suit brought in the federal court before Judge Emett Choate May 10.

DEL RAY BEACH, Fla. — (INS) — The Del Ray Beach City Commission, in an unprecedented action it said was aimed at avoiding a racial riot, gave police the power last night to search all persons and cars for weapons.

The action followed closely on the heels of an "emergency ordinance" passed by the Commission Wednesday barring Negroes from the city swimming pool and beach facilities.

The latest ordinance forbids the carrying of weapons on the person, or in any motor vehicle. The move was taken, the ordinance says, because of "the great amount of tension existing in the city, and the unusual large number of residents in this area who have recently purchased large quantities of guns and ammunition."

Police Chief R. C. Croft said he planned to hire no new, but declined to say whether auxiliary policemen would be used. The ordinance gives Croft authority to setup roadblocks.

A group of Negroes withdrew a Federal Court suit last week which sought to force the city to give Negroes the right to freely use swimming facilities. The case was dropped after a member of the City Commission testified that the city had no law banning Negroes from the beach or pool.

Police averted a near-riot at Delray Beach last Sunday when Negroes, taking the City Commission at its word, appeared on the beach. An argument between whites and Negroes resulted, and police ended the disturbance by clearing the beach.

'With love, determination'

Afro-American Baltimore Md. Sat. 8-4-56

By SAMUEL HOSKINS

TALLAHASSEE, Fla. — The current special session of the State Legislature is the end-product of political dilemma and judical contradiction.

Its burden, from the Administration's point of view, consists of two inconsistent tasks.

It must find a lawful means of evading a ruling of the highest legal authority of the land —the United States Supreme Court — and at the same time remain within the scope of law and order.

THIS MEANS Gov. LeRoy Collins must produce an effective method of evading the Supreme Court's school integration ruling, or run the risk of losing state leadership to the bitter-end racists in both the House and Senate.

Possibly better than anyone else in the state, Gov. Collins knows what will happen should he fail in this all but impossible task.

He knows the bitter-enders would chart a course of open defiance of the Supreme Court.

He also knows that such a program undoubtedly would result in either swift orders from Federal courts that schools be integrated or abolition of the public school system by the bitter-enders, themselves.

* * *

THE DILEMMA of the Administration is revealed by the following words of the governor:

"I am against defiance of constituted authority... (but) I am for orderly and effective assertion of our rights under the authority of law."

The instrument by which the Administration hopes to assert states' rights, while remaining within the spirit and letter of the Supreme Court ruling, is the Fabisinski Committee.

This committee is composed of a group of so-called legal experts, headed by retired Circuit Judge L. L. Fabisinski of Pensacola.

OTHER MEMBERS are: Judge Rivers Buford, J. Lewis Hall, John T. Wigginton, all of Tallahassee; Judge Millard Smith, Cody Fowler and Luther Mershon.

Such a group of legal experts was envisioned by the governor shortly after the May 17, 1954 Supreme Court decision. He said:

"We cannot find a solution to the problem arising from the U.S. Supreme Court decision in an atmosphere of hysteria and political demagoguery.

"We should call together the best brains in our state to study the situation and meet it calmly and properly."

* * *

AFTER STUDYING the situation, this group of so-called experts proposes to meet it with the following legislative program:

1. Authorize county school boards to assign pupils to schools for which they are considered best fitted.

2. Assign teachers on a similar basis.

3. Increase the governor's authority to suppress disorders.

4. Recommend a resolution calling for clarification of the "states' rights amendment" to the Federal Constitution.

5. Authorize funds for 100 additional state troopers and driver license examiners.

(The latter proposal is believed aimed at curbing boycotts against public transportation companies.)

BUT THE "legal experts" reckoned without the bitter-enders.

Arrayed against this alleged program of moderation are such rabid pro-segregationists as Reps. Prentice P. Pruitt, Jefferson County; J. Kenneth Ballinger, Leon County; James M. Beck, Palatka, and Frank Allen, Bay County.

* * *

PRUITT WANTS a new law to permit residents to abolish schools rather than integrate them. He wants approval of a resolution declaring the Supreme Court's integration ruling null and void in Florida.

* * *

BALLINGER, a lame duck legislator who credits the colored voters with defeating him, wants a law which would permit the jailing of car-pool operators.

He wants the legislature "to empower the governor to defy the federal courts" should integration orders be issued for any school in the state.

Allen is seeking a law to ban bus boycotts.

Beck is agitating for a law to authorize firing of state employees who take part in a boycott of any type. He says members of Florida A. and M. University faculty have been active in the boycott movement here.

There are similar bitter-enders in the Senate.

* * *

IN ADDITION to these extremists, the Administration is faced with two other very real dilemmas.

One is the case of Virgi Hawkins of Bethune-Cookman College. A Federal Court has ordered the State Board of Control to enroll him as a student in Florida State Univedsity.

The gravity with which Governor Collins views this case is indicated by the fact he called a special cabinet meeting last March after the U.S. Supreme Court denied an appeal by the State Attorney General.

At that time he (Collins) stated: "... Unless we can secure a new and sensible decision in the Hawkins case, we will be severly handicapped in trying to develop a course of legislative action which would be effective."

* * *

THE OTHER dilemma the Administration faces in its efforts to block integration is increasing registration among colored people of the state.

As early as last spring, Gov. Collins recognized this fact as something politicians soon will have to reckon with. He said: "More and more colored people are voting in our elections."

The importance of this issue is further indicated in the fact that even now colored leaders of Tallahassee are talking of running candidates for public offices in next year's primaries.

The Rev. Charles Kinzie Steele, boycott leader, has publicly called for 10,000 colored voters on the registration books by next spring.

* * *

THE BATTLE-CRY is: "The ballot will solve most of our problems." The slogan is: "Forward wtih love and determination."

And it is evident to even the casual observer thaat the movement is catching on. Soon it will spread throughout the state, even throughout the South.

It is evident, too, that neither the bitter-enders in the Legislature, nor restrictive laws nor the Ku Klux Klan can stop the movement. It's futile for them to try.

RIGHT TO LIMIT SESSION ISSUE

Challenge Is Expected on Florida Racial Plan

By HAROLD PARR

TALLAHASSEE, Fla., July 22 (AP)—The right of Gov. Leroy Collins to restrict legislative consideration of segregation measures to the four-point program of the Fabisinski committee apparently will be challenged by legislators who claim the committee recommendations will not effectively prevent integration of the races in Florida.

Under the constitution, the legislature cannot transact any business "other than that for which it is especially convened."

In the segregation phase of his call Collins convened the lawmakers "for the sole purpose" of considering enactment of the Fabisinski committee's program in the segregation field. To take up business not included in the governor's call requires a two-thirds vote of each house.

Laws recommended under the Fabisinski committee program would allow county school boards to assign pupils to schools to which they were considered best suited, assign teachers similarly and increase the governor's authority to suppress disorders.

Rep. Prentice Pruitt, one of the legislature's most active proponents of segregation, said he will introduce a number of segregation proposals outside of the Fabisinski committee recommendations.

And he said he would contest any effort to require a two-thirds vote of both houses for their consideration.

"As I interpret the constitution, the governor can restrict the legislature in special session to particular fields of legislation, but he cannot restrict it to specific bills. As I see it any bill dealing with the general subject of segregation may be introduced without invoking the two-thirds rule," Pruitt said.

Collins said he believed the program proposed by the committee would block integration in the schools and would withstand legal attacks.

Rep. Kenneth Ballinger of Leon county, who has announced he will introduce a bill to put carpools operated during transportation boycotts under regulation by the state railroad commission, said he anticipated that most segregation proposals by legislators outside the Fabisinski report could get the required two-thirds vote on a roll call.

Florida Chief Calls Session On Race Laws

Advertiser Montgomery, Ala. Sat. 7-21-56

TALLAHASSEE, Fla., July 20 (AP) — Gov. LeRoy Collins today called the Florida Legislature into special session Monday to deal with a limited field of segregation matters and 12 other emergency proposals.

His formal call expanded the scope of legislation beyond what he had announced earlier this week.

The program is expected to call for new appropriations totaling about $7,700,000. This amount would include five million dollars as the state's share of the fight on the Mediterranean fruit fly.

The Legislature was asked to restrict its actions on segregation to the four-point program and federal states' right amendment recommended by a committee of legal experts earlier this week.

This program calls for a strengthened pupil assignment law, a teacher assignment law, and increasing powers of the governor to prevent or suppress disorder in event of emergencies.

The assignment law would give county school boards the authority to assign pupils to schools for which they were best fitted and would authorize them to consider certain sociological and psychological factors in classifying pupils.

Other measures covered in the call included appropriation of adequate funds to be used in the eradication of the Mediterranean fruit fly.

Beach "Invasion" Expected July 4 In Jacksonville

Daily World Tues. 7-3-56 Atlanta, Ga.

JACKSONVILLE BEACH, Fla.—(INS) — The seaside community of Jacksonville Beach was cloaked Monday in an atmosphere of uneasy tension, built on a persistent rumor of an alleged Negro "invasion" of area beaches on July 4.

For the past week the main topic of conversation has been, "will they or won't they."

Negro leaders in Jacksonville have stated through the medium of a weekly newspaper that "no march on the beaches is planned." They have said, without identifying themselves, that the "march is an unfounded rumor."

Beach residents still are not sure, however. July 4th is the traditional peak of the summer tourist season and elaborate preparations for the celebration have been made.

Negroes have never been admitted to the main part of Jacksonville, Atlantic or Neptune beaches, but have for many years utilized several other nearby beaches.

Beach officials said Monday they had been advised of the possibility that an organized effort to invade the "white" part of the beach will be made. Extra policemen have been alerted to report for duty in the event the threat materializes

Acting City Manager Wilson Wingate said he understood some Negroes had been "chased off" Seminole Beach, just north of the main Jacksonville Beach, a few weeks ago.

He said if Negroes go to Seminole Beach Wednesday it will not be considered unusual nor will any action be taken by beach authorities to prevent them from going there.

Wingate said that if a march starts on Jacksonville Beach, "we are going to try and keep them from getting here."

Accompanying the "invasion" rumor was another report that the Ku Klux Klan would stage a warning demonstration on the beach Tuesday night.

Klan officials said Monday such a report is untrue and beach officials also have discounted the idea. A Klan gathering on public property would have to be approved by the city officials concerned.

Segregation and Medfly Bills Signed

Miami Fla.

TALLAHASSEE —(UP)— Gov LeRoy Collins signed into law Thursday the major segregation bill passed my the current Legislature and a bill appropriating five million dollars to help eradicate the Mediterranean fruit fly.

The bills were the first to become law of a series of "ermgency" measures passed by the special session since it convened Monday.

P. 9-A

Collins put his singature on the pupil-assignment law, principal bill of five recommended by the governor to prevent racial integration. It gives county school boards complete authority to assign pupils to the school for which they are best suited with appeals from adverse decisions to the State Board of Education and circuit courts.

It also authorizes the boards to establish school attendance areas but to ignore them in assigning individual pupils on a basis of intelligence, aptitude, physicological, moral, ethical and cultural background. Boards may also consider available school facilities, teaching capacity and the effect of each admission upon the particular school.

A pupil could be kept out of a certain school if the board determined his admission would interfere with the proper administration of the school or would endanger the health and safety of others enrolled.

The attorney general is authorized to furnish legal counsel to county and state school boards and county boards can hire special counsel to assist in legal suits.

The Medfly appropriation, to be matched by five million dollars in federal funds, can be spent only at the direction of five members of the Cabinet, one of whom must be the governor. No part of the funds can be used for salaries or buildings or to create any new agency or function.

White Miami Woman Declares She Is Ashamed of Her Race

TALLAHASSEE, Fla. — Miss Loyce Cargile, a young white Miami resident, recently took a firm stand against segregation when she declared, "she is ashamed to belong to the white race."

The statement was made before 900 people attending a mass meeting of the Inter-Civic council in Tallahassee, Fla. Miss Cargile further stated that she would rather walk herself "bowlegged" than ride a taxi or a bus under the present conditions in Tallahassee.

Tallahassee Negroes were congratulated by Miss Cargile for their initiative and efforts to hasten integration. She feels that the liberals and progressives cannot afford to wait any longer. According to the white woman, her patience has already collected "spider webs."

Reference was made in the talk of Miss Cargile to the twisting and turning of old laws and the creation of new ones just to intimidate Negroes. "Taking away the privileges of democracy leads us to another form of government. When democracy is in danger for a segment of the population, it is in danger for all. Traces of a caste system has no place in a democracy," stated Miss Cargile.

The speaker compared some of the tactics being used by the politicians in Florida with those employed by the fascists: "Absolute power corrupts absolutely," she added.

She refuses to teach in a state whose constitution goes against the Supreme Court. Her moral courage cannot be sold for a job with "political contamination." She will not accept anything from the "taxpayers' feedbag." Any effort "taxpayers' feedbag." Any effort to compel her to go against her own convictions is like trying "to fit a square peg in a round hole."

Miss Cargile also attended the meeting of the Ways and Means committee of the ICC where she suggested that a rummage sale be put on in order to raise funds. When leaving Tallahassee to return to Miami, she gave the committee her suitcase and all it contained for the sale. The dress she wore when she addressed the mass meeting was also in the bag. As she boarded the train, she also donated her earrings, necklace and bracelet.

Kansas City Mo.

During the so called emergency session of the legislature she came to Tallahassee to attend the hearings. She sent every senator and representative air mail special delivery postcards in an effort to persuade each legislator to vote against any measure that goes counter to the constitution of the country.

Times 8-17-56

She had photostatic copies made of answers by legislators who declared they intended to defy the Supreme Court and sent them air mail special delivery registered to Supreme Court Justice Earl Warren.

The speaker of the house was also sent two "insulated" hats to be passed on to the most hot-headed legislators. Seemingly these hats when soaked in ice water and worn will keep one's head cool for a considerable length of time.

DELRAY BEACH, Fla., May 23 (AP)—The Delray Beach City Commission adopted an ordinance today to prohibit Negroes from using the municipal swimming pool or the municipal beach.

Times 5-24-56

The commission called its action an "emergency ordinance to prevent interracial riots within the city."

Montgomery Ala.

"Racial tension has increased in this community to the point that the life of one commissioner has been threatened," the commissioners said.

The law was adopted without discussion in a public session. It came eight days after the dismissal of a suit in federal court at Miami in which nine Negroes sought use of the facilities.

The city previously has had no law to prevent the "intermingling of the Negro and white races," the commission noted This was the basis for dismissing the suit brought in the federal court before Judge Emmett Choate May 10.

Representatives of the city told the judge then that "the public beaches always have been open to all people regardless of color."

Little tnsion had been noted in this south Florida town of some 8,500 persons — including about 2,000 Negroes — before the suit was brought. Four Negro men sun-bathed on one section of the beach two days after the decision without incident.

But a group of about 70 Negroes went to the beach last Sunday and met a group of whites of about equal size. They argued several minutes before policemen dispersed them. There was no violence and no arrests were made.

Penalty for violating the law was set at up to $500 fine and up to 90 days in jail.

The suit for the nine Negroes was filed by Francisco A. Rodriquez, Tampa attorney and representative of the National Assn. for the Advancement of Colored People.

Governor Names Bi-Racial Advisers

Herald Thurs. 8-30-56

Miami Fla. P. 2-C

TALLAHASSEE —(AP)— Gov. LeRoy Collins Wednesday appointed a bi-racial committee to advise him in implementing segregation laws enacted by the recent special session of the Florida Legislature.

Collins said the three-member group also would be asked to advise with him "as to progress we can make otherwise in advancing proper and sound racial relations."

Retired Circuit Judge L. L Fabisinski of Pensacola was named chairman of the committee. Other members are Doak S. Campbell, president of Florida State University since 1941, J. R. E. Lee, business manager of Florida A & M University.

Lee, a Negro, has been business manager at A & M here since coming to Florida 32 years ago. Fifty-nine years old, he is a native of Marshall, Tex. His father was president of A & M from 1924 to 1944.

"The duties which have been given to me as governor, through the adoption by the Legislature of the bills recommended by the Fabisinski committee, are very far-reaching and should be exercised only with extreme caution and understanding," Collins said.

"There is a very strong need for me to have an advisory commission thoroughly familiar with the laws and with conditions throughout the state, to advise with me in respect to the implementation of these laws by specific action and also as to progress we can make otherwise in advancing proper and sound race relations."

Collins said the commission probably would hire a legal assistant and will have an office in the State Capitol. He said the office would work closely with the State Department of Education and the Attorney General's office.

The governor said he expected the commission members to receive some nominal compensation for their services, but no final arrangements had been made for this.

The Cabinet budget commission has allocated $15,000 in emergency money to the governor's contingency fund to meet emergency expenses of the group.

Judge Fabisinski served as chairman of the committee of legal experts who drafted the program adopted by the recent Legislature designed to block integration by legal means.

The program consists of pupil and teacher assignment laws and laws expanding powers of the governor to deal with emergencies.

Delray Negroes Still Hope for Solution, But Faith Vanishing

DELRAY BEACH — Until recently, the 3,300 Negroes of this city could use the 100-foot Ocean Ridge beach north of here.

They were not happy with it because it's only 100 feet long and hazardous, but they used it.

Of late, they have abstained in fear of conflicts with neighboring white residential areas.

They have kept away from it, too, because "no Parking" signs have been posted and they prefer not to get into conflict with authorities.

Consequently, their 2,100 children can get their fun and recreation only in Teen-Town a Negro recreation center in the city's West Side.

It consists of a wooden building, a large field, grass covered but beset with deep, grayish-black sand, and a tennis court adjacent to it.

They can swim only in a rockpit where two of them have drowned.

Unless their fathers take them on weekends to spots like Virginia Beach in Miami, which they do at times.

Their leaders are George S. McKay, secretary of the Civic League which has been in existence here for more than 10 years, and Spencer C. Pompey. Pompey is a history and sociology teacher at Carver High School. He is also coach and recreation director in Teen-Town.

Both of them talk freely about their problems.

They deny above all two arguments put forth by the city:

First that their battle for swimming facilities is NAACP-inspired.

Pompey says: "We are intelligent enough, without outside guidance, to realize that we and our children are entitled to go swimming, too.

SPENCER POMPEY
. . . willing to compromise

"In fact, when the NAACP offered to come in and help us, we told them to stay out. We want to handle this alone."

There is no NAACP chapter in town. However, an NAACP lawyer handled the case of the nine petitioners who sued in Federal Court for opening of the beach.

He came from Tampa and the word is that he did because no local lawyer could be found to handle the case.

The second city argument McKay and Pompey deny is that the Negro population is not united, that there is no leadership with which the city could deal.

McKay says: "The Civic League, though city commissioners have talked once or twice with our Ministerial Assn., is representing all Negroes.

The commissioners know that because when they run for office, they come to us and ask us to present them to our people. They do not go to the Ministerial Assn."

In addition, he points out that last November an Interracial Council was organized, consisting of nine Negroes and nine whites, and formed for the specific purpose of finding a compromise.

"So, they could certainly find a way to come forth with direct negotiations and action."

Summarized, what McKay and Pompey have to say amounts to this:

The Negroes will insist on better swimming facilities.

They are still, however, willing to compromise.

They resent bitterly the exclusion resolution.

Since its passage, they will not accept anything from anyone unless and until it is wiped out.

McKay as well as Pompey, told me that Negroes do not care about school integration becuase they have a good school.

They do not care about swimming with whites, and "the city could just as well give us a beach with wall separating us from the whites. We would not mind."

But they told me too, that they are bitter and have lost much of their faith because the promised swimming pool is nonexistent and the exclusion resolution "hurts them deeply."

They are still eager to come to terms with the city, nevertheless, though much of their hope for such terms has vanished.

Consequently, they point out, too: 'If the city does not go ahead with the swimming pool and continues to push this exclusion act, it will just force us to seek outside help. Because we will then have to fight it with all the legal minds we can possibly gather."

These then are the pros and cons of the argument.

These then are the two sides to the problem.

Segregation Extremists Sidetracked

Lowry and Ervin Urge Defiance

By JOHN B. McDERMOTT
Herald Staff Writer

TALLAHASSEE — Extremists urged the Florida legislature Monday to wage open defiance of the United States Supreme Court integration edict and gamble on the federal government's known opposition to using troops in the segregation fight.

Indications were, however, that the lawmakers would continue their course of moderate resistance to integration under a program of legal moves outlined by Gov. LeRoy Collins.

The open defiance was advocated by Sumter Lowry, of Tampa, retired National Guard general and an unsuccessful candidate for governor in last May's Democratic primary.

He had what amounted to a strong assist from State Atty. General Richard Ervin.

Ervin, in a more restrained vein, suggested legislation which would permit abolition of the public school system in counties where voters themselves authorized it.

Both men urged a special House committee on education and internal affairs to approve and send to the House floor an interposition resolution comparable to ones already adopted by seven other states.

The requests were deferred to a sub-committee.

Political observers interpreted this move as virtually killing them.

Lowry and his extremist point of view was backed by some eight other speakers from around the state who made similar pleas before the committee during a 2½-hour public hearing.

Ervin called on legislators to ace the segregation edit squarely, and to give him "laws' to fight integration.

He called for "a last-ditch stand—if we are serious about resisting integration."

"If some counties want to integrate, let them," he declared. "Give them that right . . . but don't put up a mirage."

For counties which do not want integration in their schools, Ervin said the voters should be allowed to make the decision themselves.

The attorney general said he did not know whether interposition would be an answer to halting integration "but I'd like to try it."

He said a possible alternative which would allow students to continue their education without interruption would be to set up a system of tuition grants — scholarships — under which students in a county could attend private schools.

Ervin predicted that the governor's program — patterned on recommendations of his citizens committee headed by former Circuit Judge L. L. Fabisinski, of Pensacola—would slow down integration "one or two years."

But he emphasized that in his opinion it would not stop it ultimately.

Lowry, urging open defiance said the only way to combat the problem is to battle the U. S Supreme Court "head-on,"

"The Supreme Court defied the people and we can defy the court legally and without violence," he declared.

He called for the governor to give leadership to a program of interposition "and go to jail if necessary" in opposing the federal ruling.

J. Lewis Hall, Tallahassee attorney and a member of the Fabisinski committee told legislators that an interposition ruling would serve to undermine the entire work of the citizens group which had tried to provide a legal answer to integration without actually making it an open racial fight.

Hall said he could see no "magic" formula in interposition.

Five members of the Miami branch of the National Assn. for the Advancement of Colored People registered as lobbyists to speak at the hearing, but only two attended and none spoke. Rev. Theodore R. Gibson, the president, said the NAACP will challenge each of the laws in court.

According to police, the victim's wife said that her husband had been despondent since his arrest last Saturday and the loss of his job at the garage where he struck Edward Pompey over the head with a tire jack during an argument over repairs to Pompey's automobile.

JULY 26 — The Florida A. and M. University Chapter of the American Association of University Professors discussed steps that could be taken if the rights and academic freedom of any faculty members were violated on account of the bus protest here.

JULY 27 — Further moves have been made to inconvenience leaders of the Inter-Civic Council. Although the Rev. Rollins had had insurance with De Milly Yeager, local agents for a national company, for two years with an accident - free record, he was refused renewal of his policy.

After application to Mdyette-Moor Insurance Agency, he secured insurance after an investigation showed that he was denied insurance with the other company purely on account of a local reason, i. e., his connection with the fight for integration on the buses.

Despite Rev. Rollins' excellent credit references he was not given a courtesy card for a national gas company. Local distributors did not recommend him for the credit card, since "he has not been here long enough." Rollins has been a Tallahassee resident for three years.

One of the city commissioners has the franchise here for one of the national gas companies . . .There are some signs that Tallahassee is not divided into two racial camps.

The combined youth groups of the First Presbyterian Church, the Trinity Methodist Church and the First Christian Church (all white) invited the Rev. Rollins to their joint meeting to speak on "The Role of the Minister in the Bus Protest."

JULY 28 — The Inter - Civic Council ran a full page ad in the Tallahassee Democrat reminding the entire citizenry that ordinances passed directed at Negroes could be subsequently used against whites as well.

JULY 29 — At the mass meeting, Mr. Cook, one of the hardest workers in the movement, was introduced. He has set a record of seven escorted trips to the police department . . . .A $20,000.00 (twenty thousand dollars) legal defense fund is to be set up to fight for the rights of our people, who are mistreated when they do ride the buses, or because they do not ride.

AUGUST 1 — The executive committee drew up the following recommendations, which were accepted and approved at the mass meeting:

1. We recommend that the body file a law suit for the council to resolve the bus situation.

2. We move that we continue serving our members.

3. We reaffirm the position that the council try to find transportation for those who do not wish to ride in humiliation.

4. We reaffirm the position that we have never intimidated and we do not intend to intimidate. If the City Attorney can prove that there has been intimidation that they prosecute commensurate with the offense committed.

AUGUST 2 — Bus service resumes. Buses serving predominantly colored routes were driven by colored drivers. While the ICC took note of the fact that the bus company had met their request to hire colored drivers, the Rev. Mr. Steele, council president, said the hiring of colored drivers is not the "crux of the problem."

"The crux of the problem is around the seating arrangements for the passengers on the bus, and so far, that seating arrangement remains as before. And certainly we would not be willing to settle for the jobs of a few while the many must still ride in humiliation and segregation.

"Our people voted that they will not be herded like cattle to the rear of the bus though driven by smiling colored drivers."

"Pressure of monetary value has been brought to bear on the Rev. Mr. Rollins by members of the sponsoring group of his church.

The congregation met Sunday, July 29, and gave him a unanimous vote of confidence, and assured him that they are willing to make the necessary sacrifices to retain him as their minster and leader of their congregation.

AUGUST 3 — As part of the "Ride-the-Bus" campaign it was reported that 1,000 civic workers spent an evening collecting $800. One colored man said "if each worker had bought one of the $1.25 passes, they could have stayed home and done better than that."

AUGUST 3 — One of the leading bus promoters in the chamber of Commerce complained that while waiting for a bus, he was offered rides by three of his friends. It appears that not all of the whites are aware of the role that they are supposed to play.

EDITOR'S NOTE: While typing this diary, the editor observed four consecutive empty buses pass.

Of Delray Beach vs. Negro

Second of a Series

By HENDRIK J. BERNS
Herald Staff Writer

DELRAY BEACH — The history of the swimming argument dividing this city is a long one.

Its development is evident from the time table.

Its highlights are these:

In January, 1954, the city paid $30,000 to create a separate beach for Negroes. The city bought a 100-foot strip of beach at Ocean Ridge, about five miles north of Delray's mile-long public beach.

Negroes used the beach a few times in 1954 but have not used it since because of dissatisfaction with it.

They have pointed out that the white population of 4,200 people can enjoy a public beach one mile long and also has the use of a public swimming pool. They have claimed that 100 feet of beach is not enough for their own group of 1,200 adults and 2,100 children.

They have argued, and city officials have confirmed it in writing, that the Negro beach is hazardous because it is very rocky and that it lacks parking facilities.

From July 1954 to January 1955, Negro leaders asked the city for additional and better beach territory.

Nothing was done about it.

On February 28, 1955, nine Negro petitioners filed suit in Federal Court, demanding use of the city's public beaches by white and Negro residents alike. As defendants, the suit named the mayor and the four other city commissioners.

While this suit waited its hearing in court, the argument for better Negro swimming facilities kept on.

On Sept. 15, 1955, the City Commission approved and voted to set aside $60,000 for the construction of a Negro swimming pool.

The pool has not been built yet. Its construction lacks a City Commission vote which would put the project up for bids.

Meanwhile, Federal District Judge Emett C. Choate heard the suit of the nine Negro petitioners. Francisco A. Rodriquez, a Tampa lawyer, represented them.

City Attorney John H. Adams and Palm Beach County Attorney Harry Johnston represented the city.

While all five commissioners were scheduled to testify, only one did. The suit ended with the testimony of Mrs. Catherine Strong, a former mayor and now vice mayor of the city.

She said under oath that Delray Beach Negroes had always been "welcome to use the beach."

Adams and Johnston said they knew of no ordinance barring Negroes from the beach.

On that basis, Judge Choate dismissed the suit on May 15. He did so, praising both sides for "the manner in which they have disposed of this problem, in contrast to the manner in which the same problem has been handled in other states."

Yet no sooner had he done so, when the argument picked up steam and action.

On May 21, Steve Forsythe, the city's aquatic director, said no Negro would ever get into the municipal pool.

In quick succession, the City Commission — with Mrs. Strong absent — passed two emergency ordinances.

One barred Negroes from the public pool and beach; the other permitted the search for and seizure of weapons in cars.

The climax came on June 5 when the Commission passed, with Mrs. Strong objecting, a resolution for "exclusion" of all Negroes from city limits. There the problem stands.

Negro Pool Voted Down By Delray

Herald P.2-A Jun. 6-26 Miami, Fla.

Special To The Herald

DELRAY BEACH — The argument over swimming facilities for local Negro residents broke wide open Monday night when the City Commission voted, in effect, against construction of the previously approved $60,000 pool.

The vote was 3-1. Mrs. Kathrine Strong, vice mayor, was the only commissioner opposing it.

City Commissioner Howard Cromer, just back from a Texas medical checkup, introduced a resolution to put the money appropriated for the pool into a trust fund pending the outcome of a referendum on the exclusion act.

This act would take the entire Negro population, 40 per cent of the total population, and the four square miles on which they live, out of the city limits. It must yet be introduced and voted on in the Legislature.

Consequently, if it does not reach the Legislature or is voted down by it, there will not even be a referendum.

Emory Barrow, who had charged that newspapers predicting a planned Commission stalling on the project were wrong, seconded the motion. Mayor Mike Yargates voted for it, along with Barrow.

Mrs. Strong told her fellow commissioners: "You are letting people down by going back on your promise. In fact, you say with your vote, you don't want to spend the money allotted for their swimming pool, if you can kick them out."

When the motion passed there were howls among the public. The majority of the overflow audience, white as well as Negro, protested bitterly that the commissioners and particularly Yargates had broken campaign promises and pledges made since they were in office.

A newcomer to this city told them that they could now "no longer complain about bad publicity."

Col. Dugall Campbell, president of the Delray Beach National Bank, said: "You may call me what you want and I do not care if I lose friends; in fact I will perhaps lose more dollars by speaking up than anyone in this room. But I am a human being and I love other human beings. You have gone back on your word of honor."

Negroes, many of whom claimed that they and their parents had been born in this community, asked simply: "Why do we deserve such treatment? Are we not citizens too?"

Cromer, Yargates and Barrow denied they ever promised to build the pool. However, it is one of the established and exclusive secrets that a clandestine agreement was signed at a highly confidential meeting in May.

This agreement, carrying the signature of Yargates, Barrow and Commissioner W. J. Snow, who was absent Monday night, called for: 1. Clearing of the Negro beach at Ocean Ridge to eliminate hazards; 2. Construction of the $60,000 Negro swimming pool for which money was allocated last September; 3. Consideration of additional beach frontage for possible Negro use.

This agreement has never been published. It is completely hush hush. But it does exist.

In view of this fact, it can be expected that Negro leaders will now seek outside help to push their case.

The city, as predicted in last Sunday's Tip Off column in The Miami Herald, will push the exclusion act and sit tight otherwise.

The end results of Monday night's Commission meeting is that the lines have been drawn irrevocably unless influential outsiders begin to mediate.

Fla. Judge Voids Pool Jim Crow

Courier P.7 Sat. 2-11-56 Pittsburgh, Pa.

ST. PETERSBURG, FLA.—A Federal judge ruled here that segregation cannot be sustained at St. Petersburg's SPA pool and beach; a ruling which Assistant City Attorney Harry I. Young announced will be appealed.

A motion for summary judgment sought by plaintiffs in the case was granted by Judge George W. Whitehurst in Tampa Friday.

Plaintiffs were Dr. Fred W. Alsup, Willette Williams, Chester L. James Sr., Dr. Ralph M. Wimbish, Naomi Williams and Harold J. Davis.

Final order will be delayed about a week to allow the city time to determine the method of appeal to the Fifth Circuit Court of Appeals.

The city opposed the order, basing their claim on what they termed "business reasons." Attorney Young stated that Southern custom would cause revenues to drop if Negroes gain admittance.

Atty. Francisco A. Rodriquez represented the plaintiffs.

In Miami, City Manager E. A. Evans received a petition calling for the city to end segregation at the Miami Springs Golf Course.

Evans turned the petition over to the City Commission with the comment, "Here's a hot one for you."

Negroes are now allowed to play on the course on Mondays. The city maintained that they first opened the golf courses on a non-segregated basis for a test period of two weeks but lost money.

Evans told the petitioners he will take the matter under advisement.

Jim Crow In Reverse

EDITOR, THE ADVERTISER — Lake Talquin, Florida, near Quincy, has many fish camps run by whites who do not discriminate against the Negro, and there being so many Negroes in this tobacco growing section, they patronize these camps as much as the whites, but there is one camp for "COLORED ONLY." It advertises and practices discrimination. How awful. See picture enclosed.

MADISON, Fla.—Dr. Deborah Coggins faces dismissal from her job as state health officer in Madison county because she dared to lunch with a colored registered nurse.

Sat. 6-23-56

The nurse, Miss Ethel Kirkland, employed by the state as a midwife consultant, had responded to a request by Dr. Coggins to open a class for midwives here.

When they found their schedule too busy to discontinue a conference and have lunch separately, a Madison restaurauteur permitted them to have lunch together in a private dining room in which another white state health nurse joined them.

THE TRIO entered the restaurant by a rear entrance, sat down and continued discussion of their midwife program as they ate.

"No one seemed displeased about the whole thing except maybe the waitress," Dr. Coggins said. "I don't know what happened after that but probably she told somebody about it.

"But, anyway, a gossip campaign got started and the commissioners asked that I be fired for lunching with the colored nurse," she said.

Dr. Coggins said that she did not plan to resign.

In answer to requests for the health officer's dismissal, state health officer Dr. Wilson T. Sowder said:

"I feel this was a very unfortunate incident, contrary to the custom in that county and in the state of Florida. I am extremely sorry it happened.

"However, I hope she may be forgiven because she is a good health officer and a fine person."

Dr. Coggins, 32, is a native of Tampa, and the wife of a Madison physician.

Lauderdale, Afraid of Cash Loss, Votes to Bar Negroes On Links

Herald P. 23-A Miami, Fla.

F.M. 3-16-56

Herald Bureau

FORT LAUDERDALE — City commissioners by a 3 to 2 vote Wednesday adopted a resolution barring Negroes from the Fort Lauderdale Golf and Country Club.

It instructed Manager Norman Somers to deny them admission.

The resolution states that "by admitting Negro citizens to the golf club a large percentage of winter tourists and local White golfers will leave the municipal course.

"The result will be that the city will default in the payment of its bonds, a receiver will be appointed, the golf course will have to be sold andt here will be no municipally owned facilities for any golfers in the city."

If Negroes go to court to force the city to admit them to the golf course, it will be the first time the question of non-segregation of municipal facilities is tried on the issue of its financial consequences, City Attorney Julian E. Ross said.

The northwest Golfers Association, a Negro group, Thursday informed the city commission it plans to take court action unless the city opens the municipal course to Negroes immediately.

In 1950 the city borrowed $262,000 for improvements to the golf club. The entire revenue of the course is pledged to pay off the debt and operate the course.

The Men's Golf Association of the country club reported that it was the consensus of the group that allowing Negro citizens to use the course would seriously jeopardize the operation of it.

A resolution adopted Wednesday by the golfers states "The city needs so many public facilities such as sanitary sewers, bridges to relieve traffic and the like that it cannot jeopardize a public improvement program to be financed by bonds by following a course which will lead to default in bond payment, loss of revenue, loss of the golf course and impairment of credit standing."

Cramer Joins Blast At Court

Herald P. 14-A Tues. 3-13-56 Miami, Fla.

Fascell Maintains Approach Is Wrong

By AL NEUHARTH
Herald Staff Writer

WASHINGTON — Rep. William C. Cramer of St. Petersburg belatedly joined the Southern bloc's blast at the Supreme Court Monday, while Rep. Dante Fascell of Miami reiterated his stand against the resolution.

Although more than 80 Southern congressmen in all refused to go along with the strongly worded segregation decree, Fascell was the only non-signer who openly expressed his views on the touchy issue.

He maintained a position he first outlined in The Herald on Sunday, when he said he wouldn't sign the resolution because it was the wrong approach to the segregation problem.

Cramer, Florida's lone Republican congressman, signed the resolution Monday saying that he had not done so earlier because he had not been given the opportunity.

He charged the dean of the Florida delegation, Rep. R. L. (Bob) Sikes, Crestview Democrat, specifically excluded Cramer "for obvious political reasons."

Cramer's belated signature lined up seven Florida congressmen and both senators behind the resolution which denounces the Supreme Court's integration rulings and vows to seek ways to reverse the court.

Sikes was away from Washington Monday and could not be reached for comment.

Fascell made it plain he is strongly in favor of continued segregation, but he reaffirmed his belief the congressional resolution was the wrong approach and would accomplish nothing.

Fascell's statement:

"It should be obvious to everyone that forcing integration in the school systems on the people of Florida and the South will be met with resentment and hostility.

"Integration will be accomplished only if and when the people of the South are ready and willing to accept it. The principle of segregation in the public schools in Florida has been a part of the state Constitution for over a hundred years. It was adopted by a vote of the people of the state.

"I have stated before and I state again that since the principle of segregation was invoked by a vote of the people of Florida, as a congressman, I would not cast a vote which would change that principle unless the people of Florida themselves voted to do so.

"However, Congress has not acted. The Supreme Court of the United States has ruled that segregation is invalid. I do not agree with that opinion as a matter of law, primarily because I believe the school system is one for state and local control.

"But once the Supreme Court establishes law, it is my duty as an American citizen and public official, sworn to uphold the laws, to abide by them.

"The manifesto or statement subscribed to by many congressmen Monday is, in my opinion, a denouncement of the Supreme Court of the United States which is a cornerstone of our American government.

"In the light of the Supreme Court decision, the statement offered no solution to those who want segregation. It was simply a statement of open defiance of the Supreme Court which in itself accomplishes nothing and to which I cannot subscribe."

Harvard Insists On Equality For Negro Glee Club Member, So Florida Date Cancelled

Call P. 4-6-56 Kansas City, Mo.

TALLAHASSEE, Fla. —(INS) —A spokesman at the Florida State university said a scheduled appearance of the Harvard university glee club was cancelled because Harvard "insisted" that a Negro member of the glee club be given equal treatment with whites.

The FSU spokesman said Harvard had asked that the Negro be allowed to attend a reception for the glee club and that he be quartered with other members of the club at a hotel in Tallahassee.

The reception was to have been held at a sorority house on the campus.

The school spokesman said Harvard was told that "customs and traditions" of the state required segregation in social affairs.

The spokesman added that the school had made arrangements for the Negro to stay at Florida A&M university, a Negro college in Tallahassee, but that Harvard wanted him to stay at a local hotel.

The club was to have performed after the Easter holidays.

privileges of white singers.

But Harry J. Kraut, graduate manager of the Glee club, said the cancellation was due to financial reasons.

Kraut said the glee club was offered $300 for the FSU appearance, and the glee club then notified FSU authorities that the cost of train fares alone would be about $700. He said FSU also was told of the Negro singer.

When no reply was forthcoming from Florida, Kraut said, the glee club canceled the engagement on its own as unprofitable.

Negroes' Rights To Beach Appealed

Herald Miami, Fla.

F.M. 3-23-56

TAMPA —(AP)— Federal Judge George W. Whitehurst Thursday suspended his order that Negroes be admitted to St. Petersburg's municipal Spa Beach, pending an appeal by the city.

Judge Whitehurst heard the suit several weeks ago and said then he would uphold the petition by a group of St. Petersburg Negroes for use of the beach.

He signed the formal order Thursday, then granted the city's motion for appeal and suspended enforcement of the order.

The city contended first that equal facilities were provided Negroes elsewhere and second that the city is not bound by recent U. S. Supreme Court rulings on admitting Negroes to public facilities because in this instance the city is not acting as a municipality but as a proprietor of a commercial enterprise.

Judge Whitehurst ruled with the plaintiffs that the operation of the beach is subject to the 14th Amendment and that Negroes should be admitted in line with recent Supreme Court rulings in similar cases.

The suit now goes to the U. S. District Court of Appeals in New Orleans.

Racial Ills Blamed on Do-Gooders

Constitution Atlanta, Ga. Tues. 3-27-56

WASHINGTON, March 26 (AP) — Sen. Stennis (D-Miss) said tonight that "carpet baggers and do-gooders" are causing rapid deterioriation of relations between whites and Negroes in the South.

"I have never heard any responsible leader of the colored or white race in the South say that the ultimate goal of their social relations or their race relations was to have integration educationally, socially or otherwise," he said.

COURT OPENED WAY

Stennis said the impact of the Supreme Court decision outlawing segregation in the public schools opened the way for "outsiders and do-gooders" to try to convert the South to their way of thinking. He added:

"They will see the futility of their effort and then the leaders of the white and colored races will return to the scene of their labors and start building again from those smouldering ruins, and they will rebuild."

Stennis, interviewed on a radio program (Mutual — Reporter's Roundup), said, "we insist that the only pattern that can be successful is a pattern that we have a part in making."

MUCH INTERESTED

"The colored people are very much interested in a continuation of their greatly improved school programs, their better teachers pay, better transportation and better schools," he said.

"...they are not pressing for this so-called recognition or the technical right to go in the other schools."

THE REV. MR. HAWKINS also reported that he has reason to believe that illegal methods are being used to take land which Negroes own from them by certain individuals who either hold office or are prominent in the community."

"Because of the conditions above, I am requesting that you, as Governor, take immediate steps to protect those persons who have registered and who are being intimidated and to insure that any Negro of Liberty County or any other county in Florida shall receive the same treatment as other citizens."

Flaming Crosses, Shotgun Protest Voters

Ask Florida Governor End Reign of Terror

Pittsburgh, Pa.

By ALBERT J. DUNMORE

BRISTOL, Fla.—Governor LeRoy Collins and the Federal Bureau of Investigation have been asked to immediately launch a probe of the reign of terror begun here last week, following the registration of ten Negroes on Jan. 28.

There has been a report of the burning of several crosses, and the home of the Rev. Dee Hawkins, an AME minister, reputed leader of a group of the Negroes who led the registration campaign, was fired on with a shot gun.

The NAACP urged Governor Collins to immediately launch an investigation and information concerning the situation has reportedly been forwarded to Washington and the Department of Justice.

In a letter to the Governor, mailed on Friday, last, Robert Saunders, writes as follows:

"The following information is sumbitted to bring you up to date on a condition which warrants your immediate attention:

"On Jan. 28, it was reported to my office that ten Negro citizens of Liberty County and residing in Bristol, did register to vote. On the following morning Negroes went to register and were refused permission. On Feb. 3, a cross was burned in the colored section of Bristol and, on Feb. 4, another cross was ignited on the premises of the Rev. Dee Hawkins, a leader in the registration movement.

"According to reliable information, several shots were fire into the home of the Rev. Mr. Hawkins. At present, he and other persons who have registered in Bristol have feared reprisals by hostile persons opposed to the exercising of Constitutional rights by Negroes.

Segregation Dispute Overshadows Politics As Florida Awaits Presidential Primary

Times P. 60
Sun. 3-25-56
New York, N.Y.

Special to The New York Times.

TALLAHASSEE, Fla., March 24—Segregation is still the No. 1 issue in Florida. Estes Kefauver's upset victory in Minnesota's Presidential primary apparently has not done much to generate interest in the primary here May 29.

In fact Mr. Kefauver's triumph in Minnesota occurred the same day that a meeting was held by Florida's top officials to map a campaign against the Supreme Court's ruling ordering the University of Florida to admit immediately a Negro law student.

The meeting resulted in a unanimous vote to ask President Eisenhower to call a conference of Southern Governors to discuss the touchy segregation issue.

Gov. Leroy Collins also is contemplating a special legislative session this summer to deal with a constitutional amendment aimed at stalling integration.

Surveys indicate that Floridians are too much concerned with the segregation problem and local politics—including a torrid six-man Gubernatorial race—to worry seriously about the Presidential primary.

Both Mr. Kefauver and Adlai E. Stevenson have full slates of delegates on the Florida ballot but even short tours through the state by the candidates did little to stir interest.

None of Florida's top officials has done any active campaigning for either of the Democratic hopefuls. Governor Collins says, however, that the Democrats generally will be better organized this year than four years ago, when the state swung over to the Republican side for the first time since 1928.

Mr. Collins was noncommital about the primaries and he conceded that President Eisenhower would probably carry the state again if the election were held today. But Mr. Collins said that the Democrats were better financed and not split by internal strife as they were in 1952.

Four years ago Floridians stood fairly solidly behind Senator Richard Russell from neighboring Georgia in the primary. This year no such "Southern gentleman" is in the race to create interest.

Reported opposition to General Eisenhower over his farm policies is not too pronounced in Florida because of its limited agricultural production. Florida also lacks a formidable organized labor force to become aroused about labor legislation.

example of how well democracy can work and "giving everyone an even break."

To do this, he says, there must be reactivation of the principles of the New Deal; the Administration's encouragement of monopoly and corporate power against "small business" and labor must be reversed with appropriate legislation; farm problems must be solved by helping the farmer; poverty should be alleviated by extending Social Security and distributing stored farm surpluses with food stamps; the nation's standard of existence could be elevated by achieving international stability which would permit diverting a lot of our 35-billion-dollar-a-year defense outlay into more constructive channels.

New Twist to Old Ideas

None of the ideas is very new. But Senator Kefauver is giving them a new twist in presentation.

Instead of tediously exploring their ramifications and thrashing out pros and cons, he speaks generally off the cuff. He wraps up each point in a sentence, or at most in a paragraph, fitting them all into a handy pocket-size package of reassurance. Although he has been described as a radical purveyor of promises, his "promises" here have been largely implicit, inferential and amorphous. They have revolved mostly around giving everyone "an even break."

His brevity and calmness do not tend to encourage argument, contradictions, or undue contemplation. The opinion that "he didn't have much to offer" — occasionally heard among his departing listeners—appears to be a minority one. People can't help liking him.

Collins Hits Injection of Race Issue

Herald Fla.
Miami, Fla.
Wed. 2-8-56

TAMPA—(AP)—Gov. LeRoy Collins Tuesday criticized candidates who wave the flag of racial issues. Sumter L. Lowry, campaigning for governor on a segregation platform, retorted that "it is high time he (Collins) quits pleading the cause of the NAACP."

Collins, saying Florida cannot afford to get mixed up in turmoil over racial issues, denounced any office seeker who campaigns by "inflammatory statements calculated to arouse fear and hatred."

Using perhaps his strongest words on the racial problem, Gov. Collins told a gathering of several hundred Tampa businessmen at a Florida State Fair luncheon:

"Believe me when I say Florida cannot afford an orgy of race conflict and discord."

He said segregation can be preserved without furor.

Lowry replied in a statement that "it is not the southern people who have brought on race conflict and discord. The peoples of the southern states have only asked to be let alone, to live and work in their homeland, according to their laws and customs."

The Tampa businessman and retired National Guard lieutenant general said wherever conflict has been caused it has been by "those who wish to uproot the basic laws and way of life of the southern people, and the other radical race-mixers are the troublemakers and Mr. Collins does the people a disservice when he seeks to hide this fact."

Lowry repeated an earlier appeal to Collins to give the state leadership against integration, adding the "Collins 'wait and see' policy means defeat by degrees."

No Fla. Law Found For Hotel Bias

Daily World
Atlanta, Ga.
Sat. 3-3-56

TALLAHASSEE, Fla. --(INS)-- Atty. Gen. Richard Ervin, in an opinion requested by state hotel commissioner Richard Edgerton, says there is no law under which hotels can be prevented from accepting Negro guests.

"After searching the Florida statutes pertaining to segregation and the mixing of races," Ervin said, "I can find no law which prohibits a hotel or restaurant from serving guests who are desirable in the opinion of the management."

Democratic Gubernatorial Candidate Sumter Lowry--who has based his campaign solely on a pledge to preserve segregation--has taken Gov. Leroy Collins to task because a group of Negroes attending a church convention in Miami are being housed at Miami Beach hotels.

Lowry charged Thursday night that Collins has the legal authority to keep Negroes out of the hotels but was failing to use it because it "would alienate the colored vote."

Fla. Boycotters

Officials turn down all requests

Afro-American Sat. 7-7-56 Baltimore, Md.

(Special to AFRO)

TALLAHASSEE, Fla.—Buses of the Cities Transit Inc., ceased to roll here at midnight Saturday.

That was the consequence of the refusal of city officials to grant the demands of boycotting colored riders for nonsegregated seating and courteous treatment.

C. L. Carter, manager of the bus company, had admitted a 60 per cent drop in revenue since colored riders began walking five weeks ago.

* * *

The protest was begun when two Florida A. and M. University coeds were arrested for refusing to surrender their seats to white men.

"We had rather walk with dignity, than ride with humiliation," the Rev. K. C. Steele, president of the Inter-civic Council, explained to the AFRO.

"The city commission refused to meet us half way," the Rev. Mr. Steele added.

THE REV. K. S. DUPONT, addressing 500 boycotters at the "deadline" mass meeting Friday night, admonished his hearers: "Walk and God will walk with you."

Later the audience voted unanimously to reject the terms offered by the city and bus company for settlement of the boycott.

The vote was significant in that it occurred only 24 hours before the deadline set by the company for settlement of the controversy.

Two weeks ago company officials announced that if agreement was not reached by midnight June 30 bus operations would be suspended.

OFFICERS OF the Council met June 25 with city commissioners and bus company officials. However no agreement was reached as both sides failed to come to terms on seating arrangements.

The council offered to compromise on seating arrangements on all bus lines except the two which transverse colored communities. On these two lines approximately 95 per cent of the riders are colored.

A "First come first served" arrangement was requested.

Following rejection of this proposal the council then asked he appointment of an interracial council to mediate the differences.

However, this proposal also was rejected.

* * *

AS A RESULT, at Friday night's meeting the Rev. Mr. Steele told the audience:

"We have done all we can. We have nothing to work on. The only thing left for us now is to devise a plan of transportation for our own people."

He also made reference to the full-page advertisement which the group placed in the local daily paper, the Tallahassee Democrat on June 22.

The advertisement appeared under the caption: "An appeal to the people of Tallahassee for moral gestures."

THE ADVERTISEMENT set forth the position of the council, which represents the city's 16,000 colored citizens as follows:

All citizens regardless of race should be treated as Americans. They should receive equality of treatment and full use of all facilities and conveniences provided for all riders on any and all buses.

It pointed out that the boycott was not designed to destroy the business of the bus company, "but there is no law that makes a man trade with another man who mistreats and humiliates him."

It stated that the incident which started the boycott never would have happened if all passengers had been treated like American citizens."

* * *

THIS REFERENCE was to the arrest on May 26 of two coeds of Florida A and M. University, Misses Wilhelmina Jakes, 26, and Carrie Patterson, 20, both of Lakeland, Florida for refusing to give up a seat when the bus driver refused to return their fares.

The incident was described in the advertisement as "the overflowing cup of humiliation which caused individual bus riders to seek other means of transportation."

Further the segregated seating arrangement was callel arbitrary and a "cancerous sore."

The appeal appeared over the names of members of the Council's Executive Committee.

Montgomery bus line lays off 24, cuts back service

News Fri. 6-29-56 Birmingham, Ala.

MONTGOMERY, Ala., June 29—(AP)—Hard hit by the six-month-old Negro boycott, Montgomery City Lines announced the layoff of 21 more bus drivers and three other employes today and made arrangements to take more buses out of service.

Manager J. H. Bagley said the cutback is necessary because of loss of business from the mass refusal of Negroes to ride the segregated buses.

Bagley said the cut leaves the company with 37 drivers, five office workers and maintenance personnel.

City Lines had some 54 regular buses in service before the Negro protest began. Bagley said only about 20 are being used now in the city of 150,000 population.

At one time buses carried an estimated 30,000 to 40,000 Negro riders daily. Company officials said recently that figure had dropped to about 500.

Bagley also anounced that two of the bus routes which have been retained during the boycott will be combined into one starting Monday.

Negroes at Tallahassee Ignore New Bus Service

Evening Star P. 10-C Washington, D. C.

TALLAHASSEE, Fla., July 12 (AP).—Tallahassee Negroes last night publicly ignored an announcement that bus service will be resumed here and reaffirmed their determination to hold out for fully integrated seating.

Thurs. 7-12-56

No mention was made at a mass meeting of the Negro Inter-civic Council of plans announced by the Cities Transit Co. to reinstate the service, which was suspended July 1. The company halted operations in the wake of financial losses caused by the Negro boycott. The boycott is a protest against segregated seating.

Instead, council members said they would continue to provide their own transportation by means of car pools. They took up a collection toward purchase of station wagons to serve the Negro community.

The transit company announced yesterday it would resume service over routes to be determined by a survey of potential riders. If Negroes are not willing to ride, the routes will serve white neighborhoods only, Cities Transit Manager Charles L. Carter, said.

The bus company acted in response to a request from the Tallahassee Chamber of Commerce, which plans to sponsor a ride-the-bus campaign. This city of 40,000 has been without public transportation except for taxicabs for nearly two weeks.

On Sunday Negroes rejected a City Commission compromise under which one three-passenger seat would be set aside for white persons but any other seat would be available to Negroes.

There was no suggestion last night that Sunday's action would be reconsidered.

Montgomery joins state of Alabama in bus line appeal

News P. 2 Sat. 6-30-56 Birmingham, Ala.

MONTGOMERY, Ala., June 30—(AP)—City attorneys Friday joined hands with the state in appealing a Federal Court decision banning segregation on city buses.

They filed notice of appeal to the U. S. Supreme Court, as did the state attorneys a day earlier in the name of the Alabama Public Service Commission.

In the appeal the city questioned jurisdiction of the three-judge federal panel which issued the decision earlier this month holding city and state segregation laws unconstitutional.

Store boycott threatened in Tallahassee

News P. 34 Mon. 7-2-56 Birmingham, Ala.

TALLAHASSEE, Fla., July 2—(AP)—The leader of the Negro boycott that caused suspension of segregated city buses threatened today to extend it to downtown white merchants unless he called "police intimidation" is stopped.

The Rev. C. K. Steele, president of the Negro Inter Civic Council, told a mass meeting of about 500 council members last night:

"It really appears that our city policemen have decided to run us out of town—that is off of Monroe and Adams streets (the main business streets).

"It seems they don't recognize that we are in town not to break laws, but to pay bills and to give business and patronage to stores that are friendly to us there.

"If they continue their police intimidation it will finally become necessary for us to stay out of town and make other arrangements."

STEELE told newsmen later that police appear to have opened a campaign of harrassment and intimidation of Negroes in the downtown area.

Chief Frank Stoutamire denied any intimidation of Negroes by city police.

"I've never seen any third degree," he said. "I've never seen any mistreatment. I wouldn't stand for it."

Stoutamore said police are cracking down more vigorously on traffic violators but he said this is a general crackdown aimed at all law breakers, white and Negro.

A CHECK of police records showed four fewer Negroes were arrested on traffic charges from June 12 to June 29 than during the same previous period in May.

The boycott, in protest against segregated seating, resulted in suspension of service Saturday by Cities Transit Co., which had operated the city bus franchise since 1940.

Two-thirds of the line's business came from Tallahassee's 14,000 Negroes. About 1000 Negroes rode the bus daily compared to about 500 from Tallahassee's white community of 26,000.

8 Point Appeal For Relief Is Outlined To PS

Weekly Sat. 6-30-56 New Orleans, La.

An eight-point "undesirable conditions" report was issued to the New Orleans Public Service, Inc. last week by the Ninth Ward Civic and Improvement League, appealing for relief for Negro patrons using the Caffin and Tennessee bus lines.

In issuing the list of suggestions, the league urged that corrections be made as soon as possible.

Noting that the Caffin and Tennessee bus line is now well established, the League called attention to:

*Larger buses be put in operation. The present ones are small, inconvenient and out-moded.

*That a shelter be built at the Forstall and St. Claude Avenue bus stop. Large numbers of passengers board the buses at this point; the shelter that was originally there was moved to Lizardi and St. Claude and is hardly used other than by loiterers, and serves only the very few passengers riding the Barracks bus; the need for more accommodations is greater for the passengers riding the St. Claude and the Caffin-Tennessee buses.

*That the bus landing at the Forstall and St. Claude be asphalt paved, and that the drain at this landing that has been stopped up for years be opened. During inclement weather when the buses approach the stop the passengers are often splashed—soiling their clothing and other valuables.

½ Asphalt bus landings along Florida Avenue which are now overrun with weeds on one side and overflowing with water and mud on the other.

*Foot bridges and asphalt landings are needed at the Caffin bus landings because of the same reasons, plus the large ditches. This condition exists on Caffin and Florida to North Carolina.

*There is a definite need for additional buses during carnival parade season.

*More courteous operators. There are too many who are unaccommodating, discourteous, and unsafe in the operation of the buses.

Representing the League were Mrs. L. G. Luke, Mrs. Martha Joseph and Wilfred S. Aubert, Jr., chairman. Those representing NOPSI were A. L. Naisine, vice-president, and H. E. Palmer.

MSR, CITY ANSWER SUIT FILED BY NEGRO

Constitutionality Of Statutes Is Big Issue In Bus Case —Three Judges Asked

By ROY JENNINGS

The City Commission and other defendants yesterday challenged a Negro postal employe's claim that state segregtion laws on public transportation are unconstitutional.

Answering the Federal Court suit brought by O. Z. Evers of 671 Lipford, the briefs said constitutionality of the statutes in question was upheld by the Tennessee Supreme Court.

Unconstitutionality Charged

Evers, a distribution clerk for the Postal Transportation Service here, charged in his suit filed three weeks ago that the segregation statutes are in conflict with the 14th Amendment to the United States Constitution. He asked the state laws be declared "null and void."

The suit, sanctioned by the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, also requested a three-judge court to decide the constitutionality question and to enter an injunction forbidding enforcement of the segregation laws.

Defendants are the City Commission as individuals; Memphis Street Railway Co.; its operator, Warren G. Alexander; Police Chief J. C. Macdonald, and two patrolmen, J. A. Renfrow and B. L. Rogers.

The defendants also challenged the jurisdiction of Judge Marion S. Boyd's court to hear and determine the case on any ground set out in the complaint.

Compliance Assured

There will be no need for an injunction, the briefs said, if the state statutes are declared unconstitutional by the proper court. The defendants assured they will comply with the court mandate.

The defendants also asked the court to deny Evers' request for a temporary injunction, pending a United States Supreme Court ruling.

"Previous decisions of the Federal Supreme Court have upheld the validity of such laws by which the practices and habits of the people dwelling within the territorial jurisdiction of this court have been molded during a period of more than 50 years," the City Commission brief contended.

The commissioners' answer, filed by City Atty. Frank Gianotti Jr. and two assistants, Charles Crump and Frierson Graves Jr., also questioned Evers' claim for a three-judge court.

Memphis Street Railway suggested the court enter a judgment determining the constitutionality of the laws.

The transit firm's answer contended all other matters charged in Evers' petition stemmed from the contention the laws were unconstitutional and were dependent upon such a ruling.

The patrolmen denied they were the officers who gave Evers the choice of moving to the rear of a MSR coach last April 26, getting off or facing arrest.

The officers said the incident on McLemore near Wellington apparently occurred about noon and they didn't go on duty until 3 p.m.

Evers said in his complaint he boarded the coach at Bellevue and Lamar and took a seat immediately behind the operator. When he refused to move to the Negro section in the rear, the operator called police.

Patrolmen Renfrow and Rogers asked the court to dismiss the suit against them.

TALLAHASSEE WALKS

Service Is Suspended as Result of Boycott by Negroes

TALLAHASSEE, Fla., July 1 (AP)—Tallahassee's 40,000 residents were without bus service today.

The Cities Transit Company suspended its routes at midnight as a result of a month-long boycott by Negro patrons. Negroes normally supplied 70 per cent of the company's revenue.

Stetson Coleman, president of the company, announced ten days ago that bus service would end July 1 unless some solution were found to get the city's 14,000 Negroes back on the buses.

The last hope for a compromise ended Friday night when the Negro Inter Civic Council refused to retreat on its demands for an end to segregated seating on the buses and for employment of Negro drivers.

The boycott was touched off by the arrest of two Florida A. & M. University women students who refused to move to the rear of a bus. Fellow students at the Negro university started the boycott May 28. It spread to the entire Negro community within five days. Charges against the two students were dropped, but the boycott continued.

Tallahassee Bus Compromise Fails

TALLAHASSEE, Fla., July 9 (AP).—Tallahhassee Negroes last night again rejected a compromise proposal for ending the bus boycott and reaffirmed their determination to do without public transportation until they get integrated seating.

The Tallahassee City Commission renewed an offer to permit Negroes to sit where they wish on buses, except for one 3-passenger seat reserved for white patrons.

The Rev. David Brooks, a lader of the Negro Inter-Civil Council, reported the commission offer which was unanimously rejected. He said he understood Negroes would not be required to stand while the white seat remained empty and that if it were occupied by Negroes before whites boarded the bus, the white passenger would have to stand.

Mr. Brooks also told some 500 Negroes attending the mass meeting the proposal was presented as a temporary solution.

There were cries that it was the same proposal already rejected by the Negroes several times since their boycott started in May as a protest against segregated seating. The boycott since has resulted in suspension of bus service here.

2 Negro Aids Win Erie Bias Battle

Special to World-Telegram and Sun.

NEWARK, June 18.—In its first decision after a public hearing in the 11 years of its existence, the Division Against Discrimination of the State Department of Education today ordered the Erie Railroad to "cease and desist from discriminating against any and all employees because of their race or color."

The decision was rendered in the case of two Negro waiters-in-charge of the railroad's dining car service, Benjamin A. Thompson and Edward Williams. They charged that they had not been upgraded to the rank of steward because they were Negroes.

The complaint was originally filed in 1951, and subsequently the railroad abolished the position of steward and raised the two complainants from waiters to waiters in charge. Today's opinion ordered counsel for the railroad and the two men to try to determine the difference in salary due the pair for the years they were rated as waiters-in-charge instead of stewards.

Bus appeal to be noted

COLUMBIA, S.C. — An appeal from a recent Federal court's second dismissal of the civil rights suit of Mrs. Sarah Mae Flemming Brown may be filed by July 15, the last date for appealing.

Philip Wittenberg, attorney, told the AFRO Thursday he was studying the record of the dismissal hearing and had found "probable grounds" for appealing to the Fourth Circuit Court of Appeals.

Mrs. Brown, then Miss Flemming, sued the S.C. Electric and Gas Co. for $25,000 in 1954 after a bus driver for the company allegedly struck her in the stomach on a city bus.

JUDGE GEORGE BELL Timmerman Sr., dismissed her case on the grounds that it did not qualify under the 1954 ruling of the U.S. Supreme Court School decision.

In July, 1955, however, the Fourth Circuit Court of Appeals ruled that the high court's school cases ruling also applied to intrastate transportation and demanded the case for disposal on its damages angle.

Last month, in a surprise action, Timmerman again dismissed the case, holding that the bus driver's action occurred before the Circuit Court's ruling and was, therefore, beyond the pale of retroactive judgment.

He also held that the plaintiff had failed to show that the offense charged had been committed under the 14th Amendment. The driver, Timmerman ruled, had acted under color of state law, then valid.

THE BUS INCIDENT took place June 22, 1954, about 36 days after the 1954 school rulings May 17.

Mr. Wittenberg did not specify what exceptions to the Timmerman findings would be noted. The court had dismissed it before it came before a jury.

Fred Gray Given Pre-Draft Exam

Negro attorney Fred D. Gray, legal spokesman for Montgomery Negroes participating in the bus boycott, yesterday underwent a pre-induction physical examination at the H&R Point here.

Gray, whose draft status was recently changed to 1-A, previously held a 4-D classification which exempted him from the draft on the grounds he was a practicing minister.

Selective service officials said the 25-year-old attorney will not be inducted until his status has been cleared by U.S. Selective Service headquarters.

Fla. boycotters irked by police

Afro-American P.1

Sat. 7-14-56

(Special to the AFRO)

TALLAHASSEE, Fla. — "We would rather walk with sore and heavy feet than ride with sore and aching hearts."

Thus the Rev. C. K. Steele, president of the Inter-Civic Association which is spearheading the six-week-old bus boycott here, described the attitude of who have caused the local bus 15,000 colored Tallahaseeans company to go out of business because of their refusal to submit to jim-crow transit conditions any longer.

The Rev. Mr. Steele was speaking at a mass meeting held in Bethel Baptist Church Monday attended by more than 500 persons. The meetings are held weekly in order that the leaders of the bus protest may report to their followers on developments.

THE REV. King Soloman DuPont, this week, is directing the strategy of the Inter-Civic Association, which is fighting for equal rghts in this state capital.

The pastor fo Fountain Chapel AME Church and vice president of the association told the AFRO Friday that while no agreement had been reached between the city commission and the association during a special meeting on July 3, he felt that a better spirit had been engendered and that a solution to the transportation problem would be worked out.

On the preceding Saturday, the Cities Transit Company, which had a franchise to operate the buses in this city, ceased operations, because of the 100 per cent effective boycott against riding segregated buses by colored people for one month had deprived the concern of more than 60 to 75 per cent of its income.

THE BUS LINE normally collected 1,500 fares daily, about 1,000 from colored riders and 500 from whites.

The Rev. Mr. DuPont denied that the association planned to enlarge its boycott to include downtown white stores in reprisal for what had been pointed to by some observers as intimidation by police of drivers in the car pool which is keeping colored Tallahasseeans from going where they want to go in this city of 40,000 people.

The Rev. Mr. Steele was quoted in some newspapers as having threatened Sunday nights to boycott white merchants because police were intimidating colored drivers in the car pool which is furnishing transportation to the bus strikers.

* * *

HE WAS REPORTED to have said:

"It seems that they (white merchants) don't recognize that we are in town not to break laws, but to pay bills and give business and patronage to stores that are friendly to us.

"If they continue their police intimidation it will finally become necessary for us to stay out of town and make other arrangements.

"We may even have to form excursions to other cities to spend what little mney we have to spend."

The Rev. Mr. DuPont said that he and other officials of the Inter-Civic Association are trailing their car pool operators into the downtown areas to check on whether or not they are being unduly harassed by city policemen.

* * *

THE STREETS upon which they have been ticketed most frequently during the past two weeks have been Monument and Adams, where the majority of the department stores and other business places are located.

At each mass meeting held by the association since the inception of the bus strike, May 28, leaders of the group have advised their followers to "stay away from downtown unless you have business there that you must attend to personally."

This advice was given to lessen the chance of incidents which might lead to violence, the Rev. Mr. Steele told the AFRO.

Bus boycotters were also urged not to go into "white" areas at night.

TALLAHASSEE'S 15,000 colored people are as one in their determination not to continue to pay "to be humiliated" on any public transit system which may be made available in the city, the Rev. Mr. DuPont said.

More than 70 automobiles, several station wagons and one bus make up the motor pool which transports persons to work and calls and gets them for other urgent errands.

Daniel Speed, director of the car pool, urged all persons to "walk wherever you have to go, ride taxicabs if you have the money and call us only when you must."

The pool is financed by donations made to the ICA by the people of Tallahassee and by their supporters from other towns and cities in Florida, Georgia and elsewhere.

* * *

DRIVERS EXACT NO fares from passengers and receive only gasoline for their participation in the struggle for full citizenship in the sphere of public transportation.

The Rev. Mr. DuPont chuckled when he mentioned the plight of the white riders left stranded when their bus line ended its operations.

"I guess they're walking," he said. "I don't know of any car pool or anything else they have."

The AFRO, which has sent two of its editors, Arthur Randall and Samuel Hoskins, to Tallahassee from Baltimore to cover the strike, came in for praise by the Rev. Mr. DuPont.

"I hadn't been reading your paper until the trouble started," he said, "but now, I guess I'm the best customer you have."

* * *

HE CRITICIZED the Tallahassee Democrat daily newspaper for being "biased" and said that its news stories and editorials on the bus situation seem to be "slanted."

"They don't seem to realize that we are dignified people," he complained, pointing out that the bus protest was a non-violent, community - wide expression of disgust at mistreatment.

The Rev. Mr. Steele was out of town and unavailable for comment, Friday. However, the next mass meeting called for Sunday is to be held at Bethel Baptist Church of which he is pastor.

It was disclosed this week that the Cities Transit Company had already sold five of the buses it operated in Tallahassee to a purchaser in Cuba.

* * *

AT THE MEETING with the City commission Thursday, Police Chief Stoutamire denied that the boycotters were being intimidated by police.

"We're cracking down on traffic violators, black and white," the chief said.

"I've never seen anyone mistreated as long as I've been chief. I won't stand for it. We're not picking on anybody; we're just trying to do a job."

When Stan Wayman, who said he was a free lance photographer representing Life magazine, snapped photos of the meeting by poking his camera through a rear window of the commission room, he was seized by two of the commissioners and made to surrender his film

"I don't want my picture in that damn magazine," Commissioner John Humphress asserted.

MEANWHILE, Gov. LeRoy Collins said that he considers the bus boycott a "miscarriage of ambition."

"Efforts made here by the NAACP which have resulted in the discontinuance of bus service in this community, I regard as a miscarriage of ambition." (The governor apparently was unaware that the NAACP has no connection with the protest).

The governor's statement came after the Cities Transit Company was forced to suspend service.

Collins said:

"If this organization (NAACP) is interested in advancing the welfare of our colored citizens, it should concern itself with other conditions of far more importance than where people sit on buses.

"I frankly think that these people had some grievances," Collins said, "but it is clear to me that the city authorities indicated in good faith a willingness to adjust these grievances."

Tallahassee Negroes again reject plan to end bus boycott

News p.3

Mon. 7-9-56

Birm. Ala.

TALLAHASSEE, Fla., July 9—(AP)—Tallahassee Negroes last night again rejected a compromise proposal for ending the bus boycott and reaffirmed their determination to do without public transportation until they get integrated seating.

The Tallahassee City Commission renewed an offer to permit Negroes to sit where they wish on buses except for one three-passenger seat reserved for white patrons.

The Rev. David Brooks, a leader of the Negro Inter-Civic Council, reported the commission offer which was unanimously rejected. He said he understood Negroes would not be required to stand while the white seat remained empty and that if it were occupied by Negroes before whites boarded the bus, the white passengers would have to stand.

BROOKS ALSO TOLD some 500 Negroes attending the mass meeting the proposal was presented as a temporary solution.

There were cries that it was the same proposal already rejected by the Negroes several times since their boycott started in May as a protest against segregated seating. The boycott since has resulted in suspension of bus service here.

At present, private automobiles are ebing used in a car pool to provide transportation for Negroes normally dependent on the buses.

In addition to rejecting the seating plan, the Negrose turned down a proposal for formation of an inter-racial council composed of six white and six Negro members.

Tallahassee buses to roll again

Wed. 7-11-56

TALLAHASSEE, Fla., July 11—(AP)—The Chamber of Commerce announced today that the Cities Transit Co., had agreed to resume city bus operations in Tallahassee.

Thomas Brownless, C of C secretary, said the buses would start rolling just as soon as revised routes can be worked out on the basis of a survey of requirements.

Tallahassee has been without bus service since July 1. Service was suspended because a boycott of Negro riders made operations unprofitable, the transit concern said.

The boycott was called two months ago in a move by Tallahassee Negroes to gain integrated seating. The City Commission has refused to approve full integration, saying this was prohibited by state laws.

MONTH OLD BUS BOYCOTT HALTS SERVICE IN FLA. CITY

Hamilton, Oho

Negroes Refuse To Retreat In Demand For Ouster Of Jim Crow

Sat. 7-7-56

Tallahassee, Fla. - It was call a cab or walk Saturday for those among Tallahassee's 26,000 white residents who depend upon public transit facilities.

Cities Transit company suspended service on its bus routes last midnight as a result of a month long boycott by Negro patrons. The Negroes normally supplied 70 per cent of the bus company's revenue. Stetson Coleman, president of the company, announced 10 days ago bus service would end July 1 unless some solution was found to get the city's 14,000 Negroes back on the buses.

The last hope for a compromise ended Friday night when the Negro Inter Civic Council refused to retreat on its demands for an end to segregated seating on the buses and immediate employment of Negro drivers.

The city had agreed to amend the bus franchise to permit open seating on the predominantly Negro lines except for one three-passenger lateral seat at the front which would have been reserved for whites and to allow employment of Negro drivers at the discretion of the company.

Tallahassee Drops Efforts To Settle Negro Bus Boycott

Advertiser Fri. 7-13-56 Montgomery

TALLAHASSEE, Fla., July 12 (AP) —All efforts to settle the Negro bus boycott were dropped by the Tallahassee City Commission today. P. 7A Ala.

"It's been proved to me that all they want is integration and they'll never get it as long as I'm on the City Commission," said H. C. Summitt in a statement endorsed by a commission majority.

Tallahassee Bus Outlook Called 'Fairly Hopeless'

Post & Times Herald P. 3 Wash. D.C. Tues. 7-10-56

TALLAHASSEE, Fla., July 9 (AP)—City Commissioner W. T. Mayo today said rejection by Tallahassee Negroes of a compromise proposal for ending the bus boycott made the situation "fairly hopeless."

At a mass meeting last night the Negro Intercivic Council reaffirmed its determination to do without public transportation until Negroes get integrated seating.

The group voted down a renewed offer by the City Commission to permit Negroes to sit where they wish on buses except for one 3-passenger seat reserved for white patrons.

Mayo said "the people of Tallahassee do not want integration and they are not going to have it." He added:

"If they (the Negroes) are not willing to accept the situation as it exists in Tallahassee and accept something less than full integration the situation is fairly hopeless, because the City Commission is not willing to change the franchise to include full integration."

No new meetings between the City Commission and representatives of the Intercivic Council have been arranged. An estimated 500 Negroes attended last night's meeting.

The Rev. David Brooks, a leader of the Negro Intercivic Council, reported the Commission offer, which was unanimously rejected. He said he understood Negroes would not be required to stand while the white seat remained empty and that if it were occupied by Negroes before whites boarded the bus, the white passengers would have to stand.

An offering taken up to meet transportation costs produced $412 to add to $2198 reported already in the treasury. Private automobiles are being used in a car pool to provide transportation for Negroes normally dependent on the buses.

ON ALTERED ROUTES

Tallahassee To Resume Segregated Bus Lines

Advertiser Thurs. 7-12-56 P. 1 Montgomery Ala.

TALLAHASSEE, Fla., July 11 (AP)—Cities Transit Co., announced today it soon would resume bus operations in Tallahassee on a segregated seating basis, but over altered routes.

Charles L. Carter, manager of the transit firm, said the company was acting in response to requests from the city's Chamber of Commerce which had pledged its efforts to increase patronage in a ride-the-bus campagin.

Carter said the new routes would be tailored to fit demands of the riding public.

Buses which serve the Florida capital ceased operating July 1 because of financial losses resulting from a boycott by Negro riders. This city of some 40,000 population has been without a public transport system, except taxicabs, since.

While plans went forward for getting the buses rolling again, the Negro Inter-Civic Council called a mass meeting for tonight to reconsider a compromise seating proposal advanced by a majority of the City Commission.

A spokesman for the Council, Dan Speed, said, "I think there is a very good chance that the proposal will be reconsidered and approved."

Speed said it was felt that many of the 500 Negroes who attended a mass meeting Sunday night which rejected the compromise didn't fully understand it.

Under the plan Negroes would be permitted to sit where they wish on the buses serving Negro routes except for one three-passenger seat reserved for white patrons.

In rejecting the plan Sunday, members of the Council served notice they would accept no plan short of complete integration.

In addition to voting down the seating plan, the Negroes turned down a proposal for formation of an inter-racial council composed of six whites and six Negro members.

The boycott was called almost two months ago in support of demands for integrated seating. The City Commission refused to approve full integration, saying it was prohibited from doing so by state segregation laws.

The Whole Town's Walking

'In middle,' bus driver tells AFRO

Afro-American Sat. 11-10-56 Baltimore Md.

By ELIZABETH M. OLIVER

TALLAHASEE, Fla. — "I live eight miles from my job. I'd like to catch a ride, but if I don't I'll just walk it."

That's what Mrs. Minnie Minor said Monday in Tallahassee, and that is exactly what all the people are doing in protest of segregated bus seating here.

If they can not ride with a neighbor or a friend, the working people, those who want to go to town, the FAMU students are all walking wherever they want to go.

* * *

"THERE WERE a few who have been riding all the time, but that total number is not more than five or six. Now, since the ICC and the car pool drivers have received a verdict of guilty, even those people have stopped."

That was a bus driver talking with the AFRO.

He stated that because he is a driver, and in Talahassee a bus driver is in a peculiar position between both sides of the controversy — he preferred to remain anonymous.

"I should like to see the question settled," he added "and I'd like to keep my job. Right now, I'm put on the spot by both white and colored people.

"But, I don't think the people are going to get back on the buses and sit in the back. They've been walking all this time.

"The students say that their folks at home told them to stick with their race, so they aren't riding either."

THE CAR POOL has been abandoned although the City of Tallahassee did not prove that a single person who rode in the automobiles furnished by the Inter Civic Council paid one cent of money for the rides.

The ICC furnished the gas for the car pool, instructed the drivers to pick up anyone who wanted a ride. They received their money for the gas and maintenance of the cars from donations from sympathetic people all over the United States.

"I've been instructing everybody to give a walking friend a ride," said the Rev. C. K. Steele, the dynamic Baptist minister and leader of "the walking people."

* * *

"WE WILL GET this thing straight with the help of God but, until then, we're still walking."

And so, in Tallahassee, the buses go wobbling along their routes with empty seats.

Sometimes from boredom the driver leans over the steering wheel, rests his chin upon his hands and keeps driving at hardly more than five miles an hour.

Since no one is there at the bus stops to take up his time in getting on the bus, his schedule is thrown off. In order to make it come out right somehow, he just rattles along, looking at the scenery, yawning or talking to himself to ease the monotony of driving all day with no one to talk with.

* * *

I PASSED A BUS with one "passenger" sitting up next to the driver. That was on the A and M - Frenchtown route which is used by students and colored workers.

"She's the driver's wife," I was told. "Sometimes the driver's kids get on and ride, just ride anywhere. Other tots will get on, too, but they are riding free.

"No one is riding for pay," the driver continued. "I don't see how the bus company can keep up expenses. It costs a lot of money just to drive the bus around the route, let alone service it and keep up the terminal."

The court testimony of the city's witness. Charles L. Carter, vice-president of the City Transist Lines, revealed that before the boycott began last May the daily intake on the "A and M - Frenchtown" route was $180.

SINCE STUDENTS and citizens generally have refused to ride this or any other line, company records show that for the period from May to September 1956 the intake has averaged barely $18 per day.

Mr. Carter stated that in an effort to overcome the loss sustained by the boycott (monthly income used to average $15,500 but is now barely $4,000) the company upped the fare from 10 cents to 15 cents.

If the City of Tallahassee had hoped to befriend the owners of the bus company by their prosecution of the boycotters, the ICC and those in sympathy, it has been disappointed so far.

* * *

"WE'D RATHER WALK in dignity," say the people, "than ride in the rear."

"It's deeper than just the segregated buses," said Dr. M. C. Williams, executive secretary of the ICC.

"All of us are interested in throwing off the yoke of suppression which robs us of our rights as American citizens. We'll just keep on walking and working toward freedom."

Referring to the people's "walk for freedom" protest, the defense attorney, Francisco Rodriquez, stated: "We don't want to wear golden shoes in heaven, we just want to wear Florsheims here on earth."

* * *

"THEY CUT OFF our car pool," said the Rev. M. Steele, "now we'll get buggies and bicycles and our friends will ride us in their cars.

"If they cut off our buggies and bicycles, we'll just walk. "If they cut off our legs, we'll crawl."

Dr. J. R. E. Lee Jr., FAMU business manager, and lifelong resident of Tallahassee, states "The boycott is an expression of resentment against riding the buses and justifiably so. It has served a wonderful purpose."

* * *

THEODORE R. BOWERS of Bascom, a student, said: "As far as the students are concerned, we'll go along. We are are inspired by the attitude of all uneducated people who are walking."

The City's special prosecuor, Mark Hawes, who was hired at a fee of $4,000 to handle the case against the boycotters, said before the count.

"We warned them. That didn't stop them and they tell me they are still walking. Your Honor, if you don't stop them, the ICC will take over the whole city of Tallahassee."

THE NEXT DAY after the car pool was abandoned by order of the court and the 21 defendants were fined a total of $11,000, it poured rain. The downpour came in sheets with driving winds.

The empty buses jogged along the route, their dim headlights bouncing crazily up and down in the near darkness.

But the highways and byways were dotted with people, their umbrellas raised high as southern people do, and they were walking, walking in dignity.

For Fort Lauderdale

Federal Court Orders Golf Integration Trial

Herald P. 4-C Miami, Fla. Tues. 10-30-56

A suit for integration of the Fort Lauderdale Municipal Golf Course must go to trial in federal court in Miami.

Judge Joseph P. Lieb refused summary judgment Monday because he found an issue still existed. Attorneys for the city and the petitioning Negroes did not agree on some facts.

It means full trial in court with witnesses and testimony. No date of trial was set.

Through summary judgment, Lieb could have ruled in favor of the Negroes. They asked that the rights of all concerned be outlined, and that segregation of the course be found in violation of the Constitution.

Still at issue, Lieb found, was whether the four Negro petitioners had ever applied in person at the course, and whether a city commission resolution denying Negroes use of the course was effective.

City Attorney Julian Ross said that under Fort Lauderdale's city manager form of government, only the city manager can tell city employes what to do. He raised the question of the legal effect of the commission's resolution.

Judge Lieb told C. E. Graves, attorney for the Negroes, to study his petition and see if a favorable ruling will give them the relief they want.

"When it comes to the objective of your suit, I want you to decide if you've done it the right way," Lieb said.

Ross noted the commission's resolution barring Negroes cannot be enforced. Only city ordinances can be enforced with arrests and fines, he noted.

Ross also denied that the petitioning Negroes ever applied at the course, but admitted the Northwest Golf Assn. did. However, he said, it was not shown the four peititioners were members of that group.

But a few hours later, five golfers, including members of the all-Negro Northwest Golf Assn. claimed in Fort Lauderdale that they were turned down when they asked permission to play Monday at the Fort Lauderdale Golf and Country Club, a municipally owned facility.

They said Assistant City Manager Joseph J. Balcer had instructed Clubhouse manager Al Souckar not to admit their group because "the matter is still in litigation and the city's policy is to maintain status quo until the courts rule otherwise."

EVERYBODY'S WALKING—Students and citizens still walk in Tallahassee, Florida in protest against segregated but seating. This is a morning scene on the street where the "A. and M.-Frenchtown" bus line runs.

NEGROES' RIGHTS TO POOL UPHELD

Times-Picayune

Appeals Court Decides St. Petersburg Case

Thurs. 12-20-56

The right of Negroes to use the municipal beach and swimming pool in St. Petersburg, Fla., was upheld Wednesday by the United States fifth circuit court of appeals.

New Orleans La.

P. 5

An injunction restraining the city of St. Petersburg and its director of recreation from refusing to allow Negroes to use the pool and beach on the same basis as whites was affirmed by the appeals court.

The appeals court pointed out that the city's attorneys claimed that the city operates the pool and beach in its proprietary capacity and has not only the right, but the duty to operate the pool and beach as a business enterprise for the best interest of the inhabitants of the city who are stockholders, so to speak, of the enterprise.

Loss of Patronage

It is also pointed out that the city claimed that if Negroes were allowed to use the facilities white patronage would cease and that the city would be forced to close the pool as it would not have sufficient funds to continue its operation.

The St. Petersburg attorneys used the argument of proprietary operation to distinguish the case from facilities operated by cities in governmental capacity.

In the opinion, the appeals court held that to accept the argument of the city's attorneys the constitution would operate with different effect in various states.

Cannot Be Justified

"It is no answer to say that the beach and pool cannot be operated at a profit on a non-segregated basis, and that the city will be forced to close the pool. Of course, financial loss cannot justify illegal operation, and, unfortuate as closing the pool may be, that furnishes no ground for abridging the rights of the appellees to its use without discrimination on the grounds of race so long as it is operated," the opinion holds.

The opinion was written by Judge Richard Rives and concurring were Judges Elbert Tuttle and Warren L. Jones.

The Dismissal Of Dr. Coggins

Defender P. 9

The firing of Dr. Deborah Coggins, a 32-year-old Florida county Health officer because of an infraction of Southern race etiquette, is one more evidence of immaturity and irresponsibility of the Southern states.

Sat. 10-13-56 38a

Dr. Coggins, Florida's only woman county health officer, ate lunch with a Negro nurse who is employed by the state board of health as a midwife consultant. The nurse thought that the matter which troubled her was of sufficient urgency for her to seek Dr. Coggins' medical advice. The lunch over which the matter was discussed was in the exclusive recess of a private d i n i n g room, in deference, no doubt, to Florida's tradition of inordinate racial bias.

However, this concession to prejudice did not suit the emotional mood and primitive temper of those natives who have little respect for law and none for decency. Yielding to the evil design of an ignorant, jeering crowd, a three-county commission summarily dismissed both the health officer and her luncheon guest.

Dear reader, we regret the necessity for commenting week after week on such unpleasant happenings. But, we MUST, lest our silence be interpreted as condoning the convulsive practices that injure our status as human beings and our positions as citizens. These ugly circumstances force themselves upon us. And, we would be derelict in our duty to our public were we not to accept the challenge.

We would rather write about the conquest of nature by modern science in an atomic age, or discuss the comparative I.Q. of the Eskimo or paint a word-picture of the flowers that bloom in autumn or write learnedly of the reasons why the grass is not green in winter.

But it would be an unpardonable waste of precious space were we to do so in the face of daily violations of our citizenship rights and elementary privileges. You cannot cure a malady by ignoring it. Race prejudice is a disease that must be attacked wherever it occurs.

Florida's firing of both Dr. Coggins and the Negro nurse must be censured as a disgrace to white civilization.

Group Reveals New 'Dallas Plan'

Informer Houston, Tex.

Sat. 11-17-56

BEAUMONT — Reverend Carey Daniel, pastor of a West Dallas Baptist church and first cousin of Governor-Elect Price Daniel, urged a group of some 1,000 segregationists who attended a meeting of the Beaumont Citizens Council last Thursday to "resist, overcome, and defeat" the Supreme Court decision on Integration.

P. 1

Former Jefferson County Judge Charles Howell presided at the meeting. He declared: "It's not the will of the people that our race shall be mongrelized."

Adding his views to the race-hating throng, Rev Mr Daniel said mixing of the races "is unchristian and foreign to God's way." He added, "when God created man, He segregated the races"

Judge Howell charged that the Supreme Court took over the work of Congress when it handed down its now famous anti-segregation decision in May 1954.

He charged that the court also "took over" the school system and usurped states's right.

"The court has done something that no dictator has ever dared to do- it has proposed amalgamation of the races," declared Judge Howell.

He said much blame for the integration move in this country can be laid to the United Nations and its "one world" philosophy. But he said there is no place in this country for hatred of the Negro.

A plan of Dallas segregationists to open at least three of their churches as exclusive w h i t e s c h o o l s if public schools there are integrated was revealed.

White Church Stoned During Mixed Meet

Informer Houston, Tex.

Sat. 11-17-56

BEAUMONT — St Andrew's Presbyterian Church, the site of an integrated youth rally, was stoned and large sanctuary windows were broken Sunday by an unknown number of white men who protested the meeting of Negro and white youngsters in the white church.

P. 1

The rally of the Brazos Presbytery, District No 5-- which ended Sunday, attracted some 115 young Presbyterians from the Beaumont-Orange-Port Athur area. Eleven of the delegates were Negroes, Dr H E Pickhard, pastor of the stoned church, said.

It was during the concluding sermon of the rally, which was delivered by Rev W J Henning Jr of Beaumont's Westminister Presbyterian Church, when the barrage of stones began to crash through the windows. Shattered glass covered the sanctuary floor, police officials revealed.

Several people arriving at the church for another meeting saw several white men running into a wooded area nearby, police said.

Informer

Some of the church members had received calls during the week protesting the intetgrated meeting and at least one call was made to police by a woman who asked what could be done about the Negro youths attending the white church police added.

Only one clue, a large cloth sack half filled with bricks and stones, was found, Detective B L Vanderwater said.

P. 10

Dr Pickard said the youth rallies always had been attended by the Negro representatives of District 5 Presbyterian churches, and there had never been a protest.

Sat. 11-17-56

Police and detectives said they have been unable to obtain a description or the definite number of persons seen leaving the church after the brick barrage.

Nabbed For Viewing Anti-Negro Display

Informer Houston, Tex

Sat. 12-1-56

BEAUMONT — Two young Negro ministers were jailed last week, after a white woman had taken the license number of a car driven by one of them when she saw him looking at an anti-integration display the White Citizens Council had placed in a show-window.

P. 1

The Reverends Ozark Range, 28, pastor of the Forrest Street Christian church and H L Bethune, 29, pastor of the Graham Congregational church were picked up by officers a day after the Rev Pange and a third local pastor had looked at the Anti-Negro display. Rev Range said when they returned to his car after viewing the voluminious display of leaflets, tracts, cards and posters, a white woman following them, took the license number of the car.

The next day, the Rev Range was curbed by police officers and made to place his hands on his car while they frisked him, he said. He continued that the officer told him that they had a report that two men, riding in his car the day before, had thrown stones in a white person's house at Franklin and Avenue C. The officers put him in the Scout car and drove around to Trinity street where t h e y saw the Rev Bethune standing in the office of the Golden State insurance company, talking to one of the office personnel, he said. He said that the officers arrested the Rev Bethune despite the fact that he told them a group of Boy Scouts was waiting for him. He said he, himself had numerous letters and other papers of identification but that the officers paid no attention to them.

Clement Picketed At Texas Hotel

Chicago Ill.

HOUSTON, Texas — (INS) —Orderly pickets who said they were sympathetic to the anti-integration program of the White Citizens Council marched outside a Houston hotel last week as Tennessee Gov. Frank Clement spoke at a testimonial dinner.

P. 10

About 25 persons marched in front of the hotel carrying placards reading "Tennessee Tanks Won't Work in Texas", "See You Later, Integrator" and "Where's The Storm Troops?"

The pickets said they were demonstrating to protest Clement's recent action in ordering out national guard troops during school integration disorders in Tennessee.

Before speaking at a dinner honoring Dr. Marcus Levinson of Houston, Clement said he had acted in his duty to maintain law and order and not to support either integration of segregation of public schools.

He added:

"It is obvious that those who would picket my speech as a result of my action at Clinton, either misunderstood the facts or are against law and order."

Ousted Florida Doctor Calls County Heads 'Fools Cowards'

Post & Times Herald Washington, D.C.

MADISON, Fla., Oct. 3 (AP) Dr. Deborah Coggins called Madison County Commissioners fools and cowards today while members sat virtually in silence.

Dr. Coggins, who has been dismissed as health officer of a tri-county area apparently for having a business lunch with a Negro nurse, stormed out of the Commission meeting with the parting words:

"You're all fools, fools. And I'm going to be in Madison and you're going to have to look at me for a long time."

The Commissioners voted after her departure to stand by the minutes of their previous meeting.

Asks Action in Her Presence

She had asked them to act in her presence and demanded: "Why are you such cowards? You must be afraid you're not doing the right thing."

At a previous meeting the Commissioners voted to request the State Board of Health "to relieve Dr. Deborah Coggins of her duties as Madison County Health Officer."

Dr. Wilson T. Sowder, State Health Officer, said he cannot dismiss her unless a cause is given.

The minutes make no mention of the controversial lunch that she said was held because a crowded schedule allowed no other time for the conference.

Dr. Coggins tried to have the Commissioners specify a reason for their action, but only silence greeted her efforts.

Officer Defies Board

Robert H. Browning, County Health Information Officer, appearing on behalf of Dr. Coggins, told the Commissioners he is "unafraid of you individually or collectively.

"Dr. Coggins has been severely persecuted," he said. "Dr. Coggins has been tormented. The health programs i nthree counties have collapsed.

rifice my own integrity and self-respect on the altor of economic security. What Dr. Coggins did had no more to do with spreading integration than drinking a cup of Russian tea has to do with spreading communism.

"If there is one Christian among you, one American, let me hear a motion to rescind this action. Let me hear it now."

There was no response from the Commissioners.

Editor Makes Defense

Next to defend Dr. Coggins was T. C. Merchant Jr., editor of the Madison weekly Enterprise-Recorder. He declared Dr. Coggins has been "subjected to the most vicious assortment of lies, misrepresentations and slander that I have had occasion to witness in this community.

"A physician greater than Deborah Coggins was once criticized for eating with tax collectors and sinners. Now, I am ont attempting to make any irreverent comparisons, but I sincerely believe that if you fire this girl today for the reason you have in mind you will be doing an evil and unjust act."

Calling each Commissioner by his first name, Merchant asked them to "show the world what Southern white men are like."

No one spoke advocating her dismissal, although the small basement meeting room was crowded wit hspectators.

Dr. Coggins, 32, who has received offers of jobs from two other states since the controversial luncheon drew Nationwide attention, already has been discharged by the Jefferso nand Taylor County Commissions. She served as health officer for the tri-county area at a $675 a month salary.

Effigy Hangs In Place of The U. S. Flag

DELRAY BEACH, Fla.—Students attending Seacrest High School here were shocked to find an effigy of a Negro dangling from the flagpole as they arrived for classes here Thursday.

An investigation has been launched to discover who placed the stuffed dummy on the 50-foot flagpole. The dummy's black face was smeared with red and a placard on it read:

"This was the first black one. Who is next? By the A.N.A."

Delray Beach had been the center of controversy following the attempt of Negroes to use the public beaches. City officials finally agreed to provide a bathing beach and pool for Negroes.

Governor deplores mixed lunch firing

TALLAHASSEE, Fla. — The firing of an attractive blonde woman health officer for eating at the same table with a colored nurse "cannot be squared with right and justice and conscience."

"And I am sick about it," Gov. Leroy Collins commented Friday, adding: "If I did not speak up and say so I feel that I would, by my silence, condone an evil act."

The woman, Dr. Deborah Coggins, 32, the state's only woman health officer, said her only error was "in evaluating this community" which condemned her for having lunch with a colored woman consultant.

SHE HAD been under fire since Aug. 22 when she had a business conference with Miss Ethel Kirkland, a registered nurse, in a private dining room of a Madison restaurant.

The two women met to discuss a class for midwives being conducted by Miss Kirkland.

The dismissal was agreed upon in a joint conference of the Jefferson, Madison and Taylor County commissions in the courthouse at Monticello as a crowd of prosegregationists outside shouted "fire her."

While her actual firing awaits individual action by Madison, Jefferson and Taylor Counties, Dr. Coggins says she'll not resign. "They'll have to fire me," she declared.

* * *

APPARENTLY neither Governor Collins nor Dr. Wilson T. Sowder, state health officer, both of whom sympathize with Dr. Goggins, have authority to overrule the decision of the county commissions which pay her $675 a month salary.

Calling the firing a "by-product of the passion aroused by efforts to coerce integration of the races against the will of the people," Governor Collins said "This would never have occurred two years ago."

In explaining how the dispute arose, the doctor said:

"We were working on our midwife program. Another white consultant and myself were meeting with the colored nurse in charge of the program.

"TIME WAS important and we wanted to get on with our work while eating, too. So I went to the manager of a restaurant and asked him if we could eat in his private dining room.

"All three of us entered and left from the rear door. No one seemed displeased about the whole thing except maybe the waitress. I don't know what happened after that but probably she told somebody about it.

"But, anyway, a gossip campaign got started and the commissioners asked that I be fired for lunching with a colored person.

"THE STORY was put out that I was working for some integration organization. That's silly, of course, and absolutely untrue.

"But in a small community like this, they believe such things. You see, colored people form 50 per cent of the population in Madison County and probably 70 per cent in Jefferson. And they're all so terribly afraid.

"I like my work and I was only trying to do my job when all this came up."

Dr. Coggins, a native of Tampa, had held the job since April 9. Her husband, Dr. Wilmer J. Coggins, is a native of Madison where he has a practice.

ficer of these three rural north Florida counties since May 1.

Dr. Coggins said she arranged a luncheon conference with Ethel Kirkland, a Negro registered nurse who is midwife consultant for the State Board of Health, when she found the nurse's morning and afternoon schedules were full. The nurse had opened a class here for Negro midwives at Dr. Coggins' request.

Post & Times Herald 9-25

MADISON, Fla., Sept. 19 (AP)—The Madison County Board of County Commissioners has asked that its health officer, Dr. Deborah Coggins, a white physician, be fired as an aftermath of her having lunch with a Negro nurse in a restaurant.

A letter signed by Dale M. Leslie, clerk of the Board, to Dr. George A. Dame, director of the bureau of local health services of the State Board of Health, said only:

"The Board of County Commissioners of Madison County at a regular meeting Sept. 5 voted to request the State Board of Health to relieve Dr. Deborah Goggins of her duties as county health officers for Madison ounty."

State Board officials said they knew of no regulation that could be used to discharge the health officer.

The Commission notified Dr. Coggins yesterday it will meet with her Oct. 3, at her request, to hear "a discussion of your situation."

Doctor Defies Ouster For Lunch With Negro

Post and Times Herald p.21

MADISON, Fla., Sept. 28 (AP) Dr .Deborah Coggins, who incurred the wrath of local interests because she lunched with a Negro nurse, today said she will not quit her office as public health officer of three counties until she is forced out.

That formality is expected to be concluded next week, after which she said she will join her husband, Dr. Wilmer Coggins, in private practice.

At a stormy session last night the Commissioners of Jefferson and Taylor Counties voted to affirm the ouster action taken earlier by the Madison County Board.

Doctor Not Present

The controversial doctor was not present at the meeting. Two women present asked that Dr. Ciggins be forgiven for the "indiscretion" of eating with a Negro. But they were drowned out by cries from spectators of "fire her."

The Jefferson Commission voted to give the health officer a chance to resign. Dr. Coggins said she was notified by the county clery today to appear before the commission in Monticello Saturday.

"I plan to go, but I will not resign," she said. She does not plan any legal action to keep her job.

"I grew up in the South," she said. "I am not a crusader, I have no soapbox and I am not an integrationist. I think it would be disasterous to try to integrate these three counties at this time. I have no ax to grind. I was simply trying to do my job."

'Error of Judgment'

Dr. Coggins said that when she scheduled the business lunch with a Negro nurse "I realized it was a little against social custom, but I felt that a doctor had a little professional immunity in order to carry out his work." Then she added:

" I made an error of judgment, but my error was in evaluating this community.

"Two weeks ago, I was stunned that such a thing could happen.

"But one thing I am sure of. I have committed no crime."

Dr. Coggins said she has received letters from all over the country supporting her "and they have helped me to think this out."

"There are democratic and Christian principles involved here."

Dr. Coggins said her three children, aged 7, 3 and 2, have suffered no unpleasantness as a result of the furor "and our friends have been very understanding." She said her husband's practice so far has not suffered as a result of the publicity.

THE SOUTH

"Fire Her! Fire Her!"

For four months, blonde, Tampa-born Dr. Deborah Coggins, 32, served as the first woman health officer of Florida's Madison, Taylor and Jefferson counties. One day last August, she was consulting with Ethel Kirkland, who is in charge of the Florida State Board of Health's midwife training program. Dr. Coggins suggested that they carry on business over their lunch. Because Ethel Kirkland is a Negro, Dr. Coggins carefully asked the manager of the Madison Hotel (all-white) restaurant if they could use a private room; the manager did not object, and neither did anybody else except—as Dr. Coggins thought about it later—"maybe the waitress."

Last week in a public meeting, the three county commissions heeded a growing public uproar, in effect kicked Dr. Coggins out of her job. She had had no hearing; the protests of state officials and a couple of local residents that her "indiscretion" be "forgiven" were overruled. "Fire her! Fire her!" cried Jesse Lott of Monticello from the audience. "When we give one inch, we are going to give the whole thing. It is time to stand up and be white men, not jellybacks." When one of Dr. Coggins' friends asked a county commissioner if he had not eaten with Negroes on hunting trips, he replied: "They eat after we're through." Florida's Governor LeRoy Collins angrily denounced the firing. "I am sick about it . . . an evil act," but Collins had no power to intervene.

Amid all the tumult Dr. Coggins painstakingly sidestepped a martyr's role. "I should have known better," she explained to a reporter. "But I wasn't sponsoring integration; I was just doing my job. Look, this is a small community." Then she added: "I guess saying that, I sound like I've been brainwashed. Well, maybe I have. I don't know."

Board Yields To Shouting Crowd

Defender P.1 Chicago

Sat. 10-6-56

MONTICELLO, Fla. — (INS) — Dr. Deborah Coggins, 32-year-old Florida county health officer, will be fired because she ate lunch with a Negro nurse while discussing business.

A three-county commission in North Florida, amid shouts from the audience to "fire her," agreed at a joint open meeting to dismiss the blonde mother of three children from her job.

The commission of Jefferson, Taylor and Madison counties also ruled out a plea that final action on the case be deferred until after a meeting of the Madison board next week.

LITTLE SUPPORT

Dr. Coggins did not attend the meeting in Monticello and received support from only two white women in the entire audience.

The state's only woman county health officer ate lunch in a private dining room in Madison, Fla., on Aug. 22 with Ethel Kirkland, midwife consultant for the state board of health.

ASKED FOR MEETING

Miss Kirkland had opened a class for midwives two days previously and asked for the meeting to discuss problems she had come across.

The Jefferson commission voted unanimously to fire the nurse and the Taylor commission agreed to follow suit. However, it said it would take no action until after its regular meeting next Monday.

The Madison commission began the ouster move by writing the state board of health on Sept. 5, telling of the luncheon meeting Dr. Coggins had with the Negro nurse.

Dr. Coggins is the wife of a Madison physician and receives a salary of $673 a month.

Mrs. Flo Way, 33-year-old Monticello elementary schoolteacher, said she "exercised her right of free speech in defending Dr. Coggins, fired this month as health officer of three North Florida counties for having a business lunch with a Negro nurse.

Ala. Journal

Chairman L. G. Morris of the Jefferson County School Board said he does not anticipate further action against Mrs. Way, who has a "continuing contract" and can only be discharged for causes listed in the state school law.

"She certainly is under no legal compulsion to resign," said State School Supt. Thomas D. Bailey at Tallahassee.

Mrs. Way spoke in behalf of Dr. Coggins at a meeting here Sept. 27 of commissioners of three counties the physician served as health officer. The teacher, a native of Florida, said she favors segregation but opposed the action against Dr. Coggins.

At Madison, Dr. Coggins — who had served Madison, Jefferson and Taylor counties as health officer — said she regrets "very much that the Jefferson County School Board feels it necessary to subject Mrs. Way to this treatment."

Kantor's Race Issue Threat Unanswered

Post + Times Herald Fri. 9-28-56

Washington, D.C.

SARASOTA, Fla., Sept. 27 (AP)—County Commissioners declined comment today on the threat of Pulitzer prize-winning novelist MacKinlay Kantor to expose a bathing beach segregation controversy here.

Kantor sent the commissioners yesterday a telegram demanding that they either provide Negroes with a beach or face the consequences of having the Nation read about how "Sarasota cheats black children." He offered them a third choice of resigning.

Gustin M. Nelson, chairman of the all-Republican Board of County Commissioners and a GOP candidate for Congress, refused to comment and other commissioners remained silent.

Kantor, one of America's best-known writers, wired Nelson that unless the Board corrects the "grave injustice" to the Negro population the situation would be revealed for "millions of Americans to read."

"If this be blackmail, then make the most of it," the novelist told the Commission. "I assure you I was never more serious about anything in my life."

Kantor's telegram was promped by the Board's refusal Monday to accept a proposal by a committee it had named to set up plans for the Negro beach on Siesta Key.

Sarasota Negroes, who have no Gulf beach, have been trying unsuccessfully for two years to get a swimming site.

Senate OKs Racial Bills In Florida

House Reluctant To Limit Program For Segregation

TALLAHASSEE, Fla., July 23 (AP)—The Florida Senate sped to unanimous passage today four bills recommended by Gov. LeRoy Collins at a special legislative session to block integration of the races in the public schools and parks.

But the program moved more slowly on the House side, where some legislators have indicated they would ignore Collins' plea to restrict the segregation field to the program he outlined.

The House committee on education and internal affairs gave 19-2 approval to the key bill in the governor's program—the revised pupil assignment measure—but sent the companion teacher assignment bill to a subcommittee.

INTEGRATION 'STEP'

One member of the House committee, Rep. Bart Knight of Calhoun County, criticized the pupil assignment proposal as a "stepping stone to integration" because he said some Negro pupils had "a higher I.Q. than some white pupils."

The Senate steam rollered through, within 2½ hours of the convening of a special legislative session, four bills recommended by a special committee of constitutional law authorities. The group was appointed by Collins and Atty. Gen. Richard Ervin to study means of lawful avoiddance of desegregation.

The bills provide for giving county school boards authority to assign pupils to schools on the basis of intellectual ability and scholastic ability and sociological factors; giving county school boards authority to assign teachers to the schools for which they are best fitted and increase the governor's powers to deal with disorders and use of public facilities.

SPECIAL COMMITTEE

Gov. Collins had included the recommendations of the special legal committee in his call for the special session and today appealed to the Legislature not to introduce legislation or proposed constitutional amendments in the segregation field outside the scope of the program offered.

The four bills recommended by the committee and the governor were introduced in the House.

No bills outside the governor's recommendations were introduced.

Rep. Prentice Pruitt of Jefferson County has announced he will offer several measures, including a proposed emergency amendment to the constitution which would permit local option to abolish public schools if necessary to prevent integration.

OTHER MEASURES

But Pruitt said he would not offer his measures until the attorney general had ruled whether bills outside the governor's specific recommendations will require a two-thirds vote of each house for consideration.

In addition to the four segregation measures, bills were offered:

1. To provide funds for additions, including a psychiatric floor, to the new teaching hospital at the University of Florida medical school.

2. A measure appropriating $292,235 for beginning operations of the South Florida Mental Hospital in Broward County on March 1.

3. A bill setting up admission procedures for the Broward County mental institution.

4. A measure appropriating five million dollars for the Mediterranean fruit fly eradication and control program.

5. A bill appropriating $900,000 to permit employment of 100 additional Florida highway patrolmen next year.

6. A bill increasing the authorized strength of the patrol from 300 to 500 men.

Florida Legislature to Meet Monday to Map Program

New York

TALLAHASSEE, Fla., July 18 (AP)—Gov. Leroy Collins announced today that a spcial session of the Florida Legislature would convene Monday to deal with segregation.

The segregation program, Governor Collins said, would effectively prevent mixing of races and meet all legal tests.

The major point in the program provides for a strengthened pupil assignment law. It would give county school boards authority to assign pupils to schools for which they were best fitted.

Times 7-19-56

The board would be required to take into consideration sociological, psychological and other social scientific factors, and would set up appeal procedures to the state board of education and state courts.

The program also calls for a somewhat similar teacher assignment law.

Special Legislative Session Takes Five Days to Pass Bills Governor Favors

Aug. 7-29-56

Special to The New York Times.

TALLAHASSEE, Fla., July 28—A special session of the Legislature took only five days to pass a group of Administration-sponsored bills aimed at maintaining segregation. Even more drastic measures are up for consideration Monday.

Both House and Senate passed and sent to Gov. Leroy Collins a series of bills drawn up by a special committee. He had asked the Legislature to stop at that point but some members are insisting on getting to the floor with bills of their own.

The most controversial proposal is an emergency constitutional amendment that would allow any school district threatened with integration to abolish its public school system and get state aid for private schools.

Governor Collins is opposed to this bill and it is expected that he will veto it if the Legislature passes it.

Before it even gets to the floor of the House it must get by the Rules Committee. That group will decide whether it comes within the scope of the Governor's special session call. If the committee decides it is not within the scope of the session it would take a two-thirds vote to get it introduced.

It takes three-fourths of the members of both houses to pass an emergency constitutional amendment.

The private school bill was offered by Representative Prentice Pruitt of Monticello. He also has other bills aimed at preserving segregation. These are awaiting committee action.

Governor Collins and his special committee assert that the Pruitt bills might weaken the position of those already passed. The Administration bills provide for teacher and pupil assignments to the schools for which they are best fitted. They also give the Governor more power and authority to settle racial disputes and handle emergency racial uprisings.

In other action during the week the Legislature appropriated more than $8,000,000 for various state functions listed as emergency. These include $5,000,000 to fight the Mediterranean fruit fly, funds for buildings at state institutions and bills to increase the strength of the state patrol.

Segregation Plan Rushed By Florida

Constitution Atlanta, Ga. Times. 7-24-56

1 Man Stands Alone in Vote Against Bias

Courier Pittsburgh, Pa.

Orr had cast the lone dissenting vote against a proposal which would set up an interim committee plus a $50,000 "kitty" to probe "subversive" groups and individuals.

Everyone in the state knows that the "subversive" target is the NAACP.

Sat. 8-4-56

ORR EXPLAINED his stand by pointing to his belief that segregation is "morally wrong."

He told silent fellow-lawmakers during the special sessions being held in the capitol, "I believe, moreover, that had we devoted as much energy, time and talent to discovering means to live under the law, instead of defiance of it, we could have discovered a way."

The legislator told newsman later, "The big trouble with the NAACP is that they have been right. They seek action in the courts. They do not burn crosses."

At least one solon evinced admiration for Orr's stand. Rep. W. W. Herrell of Miami said, "I only wish I will have similar courage when called upon to make a decision on a matter of importance to me."

Doctor Fired For Dining With Negro

Sat. 9-29-56 Atlanta Ga.

MADISON, Fla., Sept. 28 (AP)—An attractive woman health officer heard today she was being fired for having lunch with a Negro. She said her only error was "in evaluating this community."

Blonde Dr. Deborah Coggins said, however, "I have no intention of resigning. They'll have to fire me."

The three counties which employ Dr. Coggins, Florida's only woman health officer, voted unanimously after a stormy session last night to cut off her $675 monthly salary. Her actual firing awaits individual action by Madison, Jefferson and Taylor counties.

RIGID CUSTOMS

All three counties lie in extreme north Florida where rigid customs of segregation are closely akin to those in nearby Georgia and where, in some areas, Negroes outnumber the whites.

Dr. Coggins said she realized it was a "little against social custom" to hold a business conference over lunch in a private dining room at Madison with Ettel Kirkland, Negro midwife consultant for the State Board of Health. That was two weeks ago.

Angry reaction was immediate on the Madison County Commission and "I was stunned that such a thing could happen," Dr. Coggins said. "But now I am sort of reconciled that it does happen.

NO SOAP BOXES

"I have committed no crime. I made an error of judgment, but my error was in evaluating this community."

But at the same time, the woman doctor emphasized she was no crusader, "I have no soap boxes and I am not an integrationist.

"In fact," she said, "I think it would be disastrous to try to integrate the three counties."

Dr. Coggins, a native of Tampa, is the wife of Dr. Wilmer Coggins, who grew up in Madison and practices here.

Though Ervin Favors Interposition, He's No Extremist

By JOHN B. McDERMOTT
Herald Political Writer

Florida Atty. Gen. Richard Ervin has been linked with extremists in the segregation fight because he advocated use of interposition in opposing the U.S. Supreme Court integration ruling.

Ervin, who until a few months ago was hailed as a leader of the South's moderate forces, says his recent position has been misconstrued and misinterpreted.

Why has this happened? Does a man who speaks out for interposition automatically become an extremist?

Here is the explanation, developed from an interview with the soft-spoken, almost shy official who directs Florida's legal department.

Ervin feels:

INTEGRATION should not be forced . .. the people of the South should be given a chance to adjust themselves through an extended period of gradualism.

INTERPOSITION, although probably it would be turned down by the Supreme Court, "represents, until tested, the only legal means to formally raise the question of usurpation of state sovereignty by the U.S. Supreme Court."

LEGAL TOOLS, such as interposition, are necessary for the attorney general's office to wage a court fight against the integration order. Calling the court names, denouncing it, has no legal weight.

Ervin said Florida was "moving along fine" on a program of gradualism until the high court ordered that Virgil Hawkins, a 48-year-old Negro from Daytona Beach, be admitted to the University of Florida Law School without further delay.

By that action, Ervin said, the federal court made it clear that gradualism was out — that no consideration would be given to the feelings, customs and traditions of the South, nor to the South's efforts to abide by the 1954 ruling through a moderate approach spread over a period of years.

The Hawkins case, incidentally, will be heard by the Florida Supreme Court Sept. 4. Hawkins hopes to gain admission this fall.

Ervin said that the U.S. Supreme Court's action in the Hawkins case had put the justices in the category of extremists because "they are no longer moderate. You do not decide cases on a basis of preference."

He said the federal tribunal apparently "went wild and has tried to over-simplify the problem."

Ervin said that from a legal standpoint schools are a local problem and should not fall under the Fourteenth Amendment. There is no provision in the amendment requiring absolute equality in schools, he said.

The key section to that controversial amendment—it is controversial because the Southern states were compelled to accept it after the Civil War — say this:

"All persons born or naturalized in the United States, and subject to the jurisdiction thereof, are citizens . . . No State shall make or enforce any law which shall abridge the privileges or immunities of citizens of the United States; nor shall any State deprive any person of life, liberty or property, without due process of law; nor deny to any person . . . the equal protection of the laws."

In stressing the need for a gradual approach to integration, Ervin said that it must have public acceptance.

He said that when he went on the campaign trails last spring, he become acutely aware that a big majority of Floridians are bitterly opposed to integration. He believes the will of the people should be of the utmost consideration.

As for interposition, the attorney general said ". . . if North Carolina, Virginia, Georgia and other states can adopt it as a legal weapon, then why can't we?"

He declared that Florida's school assignment law — which, in effect, is an effort to circumvent integration — was borrowed from North Carolina. Yet, North Carolina has seen fit to pass an interposition ruling.

"I am not an extremist," Ervin said flatly. "But how can I run to preserve segregation if we don't mean what we say— if we don't get legislation which will do what we say?"

He said he doubted the U.S. Supreme Court would recognize interposition pleas — "but it is our only hope."

"I'm not one to suggest defiance," he continued. "If the court refuses to see our viewpoint, then we must abide by the law."

Ervin said that he is opposed, and would hate to see, abolition of the public school system in Florida. However, because of public sentiment, he feels the people should be allowed to decide that for themselves on a local, county referendum basis.

The special session of the Legislature, which finished this past week, turned down bids which would permit county option referendums on abolishing the public schools.

The Legislature also failed to pass an interposition resolution, although it did adopt a series of bills advocated by Gov. LeRoy Collins to prevent or delay integration.

What will happen next in the fight over integration is anybody's guess. Feelings are running too high now in many Southern communities to make an accurate forecast.

Last Fight Lost By Dr. Coggins

See Picture on Page 5-C

MADISON, Fla. — (UP) — Dr. Deborah Coggins went down swinging Wednesday in her third and last fight to block her dismissal as county health officer because she lunched with a Negro nurse.

The blonde physician asked the Madison County commissioners repeatedly for a list of charges against her. But, except for whispered conversations with their counselor, Turner Davis, state Senate president, the commissioners remained silent.

"You are all a bunch of cowards," she cried, pointing her finger at the five commissioners. "You're fools. All of you. Fools."

After her outburst the commission turned to other county business, thus ending the final phase of the dismissal of Dr. Coggins as public health officer in a three-county area of this "Deep-South" section of Florida.

The racial incident started Aug. 22 when Dr. Coggins scheduled a business conference over lunch with Ethel Kirkland, a midwife consultant for the State Health Department. A waitress in the restaurant here reported Dr. Coggins to the county commissioners.

On Sept. 5 the commissioners voted to ask State Health Officer Wilson T. Sonder to fire the state's only woman health officer on grounds she was trying to break down the segregation traditions of the county. The commissioners made their decision while seated in an automobile parked near the Four Freedoms monument, a memorial for their hometown hero and also the country's first World War II hero — Colin Kelly.

Later the other two counties served by Dr. Coggins, Jefferson and Taylor, voted to dismiss her also. The Jefferson county commissioners said "by eating with a darky" she had destroyed her usefulness and effectiveness as a public health officer.

But Dr. Coggins replied that "health knows no color boundaries, not even in the South."

The Madison County commissioners opened the hearing Wednesday morning by asking if anyone had anything to say in the case. Two persons spoke up in Dr. Coggins' behalf, none against.

Robert H. Browning, health educator in the tri-county area, urged the commissioners to rescind their action and keep the 32-year-old health officer.

"This is a chance to practice the kind of Christianity you profess," he said. "We need her leadership. With one sweep of the hand you have removed the last vestige of permanent public health leadership for 40,000 people.

"What Dr. Coggins did had no more to do with integration than drinking a cup of Russian tea had to do with spreading communism."

T. C. Merchant, editor of The Madison Enterprise-Recorder, charged the commission "invaded Dr. Coggins' right of privacy" by their action. He said the private dining room of the restaurant in which Dr. Coggins and the Negro ate was the "equivalent to a room in her home."

Dr. Coggins got in the last word. After her outburst in which she called the commissioners "cowards" and "fools" she commented: "I'm going to stay in Madison and you are going to have to look at me a long time."

Blasts Board as Cowards

Noted Author Aids Fight for Negro Beach

By the United Press

SAROSOTA, Fla., Sept. 27.— MacKinlay Kantor, Pulitzer Prize-winning novelist, has threatened to expose a segregation controversy here unless Negroes are provided with a bathing beach.

He sent the county commissioners a telegram yesterday demanding they either provide Negroes with a beach or face the consequences of having the nation read about how "Sarasota cheats black children."

He offered them a third choice of resigning.

Gustin M. Nelson, chairman of the all-Republican Board of County Commissioners and a GOP candidate for Congress, refused to comment and other commissioners remained silent.

Mr. Kantor wired Mr. Nelson tthat unless th board corrects the "grave injustice" the situation would be revealed for "millions of Americans to read" in a magazine article.

"If this be blackmail, then make the most of it," the author of "Andersonville" told the commission. "I assure you I was never more serious about anything in my life."

Sarasota Negroes, who have no gulf beach, have been trying unsuccessfully for two years to get a swimming site.

Florida Governor Warns Against Violence in State

Sat. 9-15-56 Pittsburgh, Pa.

By AL DUNMORE

MIAMI, Fla.—In Tallahassee, with one eye on racial outbreaks in other areas, Gov. Leroy Collins warned that seething racial tension could thwart Florida's booming industrial expansion.

Collins issued his warning after a meeting of the three-man biracial advisory committee which includes J. R. E. Lee Jr., business manager of Florida A. and M. University.

While schools throughout Florida opened without incident, Negroes in several cities sought admission to white schools and began action to test Florida's new "Pupil Assignment" law.

IN MIAMI, Atty. G. E. Graves, representing Theodore Gibson Jr., son of Father Theodore Gibson Sr., Episcopalian rector and president of the Miami branch, NAACP, and John O. Brown Jr., son of Dr. J. O. Brown Sr., eye specialist, said that he would challenge the Dade County Board of Education's decision that these youths could not be assigned to new schools as they had requested.

Hearings on the matter were set for Thursday, Sept. 13. Both the boys involved are parties to a suit now in Federal Court against the school board but the new action is to test the state's Pupil Assignment laws.

Graves said that if the board refused to admit the two boys to the white schools to which they requested transfer, he would comply with the new law and file an appeal to the State Department of Education.

If that fails, he will carry the appeal to the Circuit Court in Leon County, also in compliance with the law.

Similar action has been initiated in other sections of the state.

IN THE Tallahassee bus strike, hearings on arrests of Negro car pool drivers have been rescheduled for Sept. 20. The national office of the NAACP has assigned Attorney Rodriguez of Tampa to aid in the defense of the 11 persons arrested for violation of the state "Vehicle for Hire" act.

One white youth wrote the Tallahassee daily newspaper and named white persons who were serving in car pools in the county for other reasons than the boycott. The newspaper editor explained that the action did not apply to them.

Again in Miami, Atty. John B. Orr, state legislator who voted against anti-integration legislation passed by the recent special session and who stated that segregation was "morally wrong" told a group "Negroes should be tolerant of their white brothers while they had an opportunity to learn the true meaning of the word brotherhood."

IN JACKSONVILLE, Bishop D. Ward Nichols of the AME Church called upon his pastors to organize "human relations councils" in their communities to serve as clearing houses for racial problems.

Governor Collins announced that he felt race relations throughout the state can be accomplished through cooperation of members of both the white and Negro races on the local level.

The placement tests designed to prevent Negroes from qualifying for admission to the white state-supported colleges and universities backfired when three outstanding white football players failed to pass the tests at Florida State University.

The Florida State Supreme Court heard arguments on the admission of Virgil Hawkins to the University of Florida Graduate Law School but failed to render a decision. The court indicated that it was considering an order which would eliminate race alone as a factor but leave other "administrative decisions" to the State Board of Control.

Fire Teacher In Florida Nurse Row

Sat. 10-20-56 Chicago, Ill.

MONTICELLO, Fla. — (INS) — A Monticello, Fla., elementary school teacher said last week the Jefferson county school board has asked her to resign because she defended Dr. Deborah Coggins, state health officer who was fired for eating lunch with a Negro nurse.

Mrs. Flo Way, a fifth grade teacher for five years, said the request came from the school board because of statements she made to members of the Jefferson, Madison and Taylor county commissions at a meeting Sept 7. Mrs. Way defended Dr. Coggins at the meeting but commissioners voted to fire the health officer.

The teacher said County School Superintendent Desmond Bishop told her he would "fire me outright if I did not have a continuing contract."

A continuing contract is given teachers with more than three years experience. Such teachers cannot be fired unless the school board can show "good and sufficient cause."

L. G. Morris, school board chairman, said the request for Mrs. Ways' resignation could be summed up as an attempt to "cool down" the racial situation in North Florida.

Dr. Coggins was fired by the tri-county commission for having lunch with Ethel Kirkland, a Negro nurse who has been with the state for 25 years.

Mrs. Way said the school board asked her to keep quiet about the meeting, which took place Wednesday. She said, however, "I feel I have the right to free speech and I exercise my right." The teacher said she has a "southern background and I think integration in this area would be disasterous." She added she had no thought of resigning.

21 Negroes Fined Over Bus Boycott

Herald P. 1-a

Sun. 10-21-56 Miami, Fla.

TALLAHASSEE —(UP)— City Judge John Rudd, calling on Divine Guidance, fined 21 Negroes $500 each and gave them suspended 60-day jail sentences Saturday for operating a car pool in a racial boycott of city buses.

"I have never called for Divine Guidance so much and so often," Rudd said in handing down the sentence at the close of a four-day trial. "I hope each of you will be Christian enough to abide by the law."

The Negroes, including the local NAACP president, the Rev. C. K. Steele, were convicted of running an illegal public transportation system without a city permit for a state "for hire" license.

The car pool was set up five months ago when Tallahassee's 15,000 Negroes launched a boycott of Cities Transit, Inc., to protest segregated seating.

Both the boycott and car pool are still operating, but Police Chief Frank Stoutamire did not comment on what effect the court ruling will have. Attorney Francisco Rodriguez, representing the defendants and the Negro Inter Civic Council, said he will file a motion for a new trial.

Rudd also imposed a 60-day jail sentence for those failing to pay the fine and a 60-day suspended sentence with one year's probation for all. But he stayed execution until the motion for a new trial is decided.

'Why are you such cowards?' fired doctor asks Fla. board

Afro-American Baltimore, Md.

Oct. 10-13-56

MADISON, Fla. — "I think it's pleasant to know that I could work somewhere else."

So stated Dr. Deborah Coggins, health officer for three Florida counties who was fired for having lunch with a colored nurse, as she reported receiving job offers from California and Pennsylvania.

ACCORDING TO Dr. Coggins, she has been offered a position as Shasta County, Calif., health director at a salary of $8,940 a year. She was paid $8,100 as health officer in Taylor, Madison and Jefferson Counties here.

The other offer came from the Alleghany County Health Department in Pittsburgh, she said.

In spite of these offers, however, she is reported planning to remain here.

"This is our home," Dr. Coggins, mother of three children, said. Her husband, a Madison native and physician, practices here.

"YOU'RE ALL FOOLS, fools and I'm going to be in Madison and you're going to have to look at me for a long time," Dr. Coggins told the Madison board just before it became the third of the three counties to fire her.

She asked the board to fire her then in her presence and demanded "Why are you such cowards? You must be afraid you're not doing the right thing." But the board waited until she had departed.

Dr. Coggins pleaded with the commissioners to give her a reason for their action in dismissing her from her job, but they sat mute in her presence and failed to list a cause for the action in the minutes of the meeting.

BECAUSE THE minutes fail to mention the controversial lunch, reporters asked the commissioners whether their action meant that Dr. Coggins was fired. All they would say was that the minutes speak for themselves.

The minutes show only that the board had previously voted to request the state board of health to "relieve Dr. Coggins of her duties as Madison County health officer," but Dr. Wilson T. Sowder, state health officer, said he could not fire her.

Robert H. Browning, county health information officer, who appeared on behalf of Dr. Coggins, told the commissioners he was "unafraid of you individually or collectively."

He added:

"DR. COGGINS has been severely persecuted. Dr. Coggins has been tormented. The health programs in three counties have collapsed.

"I say 'Is it worth it?' What do you have to prove? To acquiesce at a time like this would be to sacrifice principle.

"I cannot and will not sacrifice my own integrity and self respect on the altar of economic security. What Dr. Coggins did had no more to do with spreading integration than drinking a cup of Russian tea has to do with spreading communism.

"If there is one Christian among you, one American, let me hear a motion to rescind this action. Let me hear it now." The room remained as quiet as the tomb.

AMONG OTHERS to defend Dr. Coggins was T. C. Merchant Jr., editor of the Madison Weekly Enterprise-Recorder.

He declared that Dr. Coggins "has been subjected to the most vicious assortment of lies, misrepresentations and slander that I have had occasion to witness in this community.

"A physician greater than Deborah Coggins was once criticized for eating with tax collectors and sinners.

"Now I am not attempting to make any irreverent comparisons, but I sincerely believe that if you fire this girl today for the reason you have in mind you will be doing an evil and unjust act."

* * *

CALLING EACH of the commissioners by his first name, Mr. Merchant asked them to "show the world what southern white men are like."

No one spoke in favor of or against the dismissal of the health officer, although the small basement room in which the hearing was held was crowded with spectators.

Commissioners of both of the other two counties that fired Dr. Coggins—Jefferson and Taylor—have praised her medical services but contended that "public opinion" forced them to dismiss her.

Woman Fired In Racial Case Calls Officials Fools, Cowards

Madison, Fla., Oct. 3 (U.P.)—A woman doctor called the five Madison County commissioners "a bunch of cowards" today when she went before them to hear herself fired for the third time in a week because she had lunch with a Negro.

Attractive, blond Dr. Deborah Coggins repeatedly asked the commission for a list of charges against her. But, after whispered conversations with their attorney, the commissioners gave her no explanation.

"You are all a bunch of cowards," she cried, pointing her finger at the five commissioners. "You're fools. All of you. Fools."

Turn to Other Business

After her outburst the commission turned to other County business, ending the final phase of the dismissal of Dr. Coggins as public-health officer in a three-county area of this "Deep South" section of Florida.

The controversy started August 22 when Dr. Coggins held a business conference at lunch with Ethel Kirkland, a midwife consultant for the State Health Department. A waitress in the restaurant here reported Dr. Coggins to the County commissioners.

Other Counties Fire Her

September 5 the commissioners voted to fire the State's only woman health officer on the ground that she was trying to break down segregation traditions.

Later the other two counties served by Dr. Coggins—Jefferson and Taylor—voted to dismiss her also.

Robert H. Browning, health educator in the tricounty area, urged the Madison commissioners to rescind their action and keep the 32-year-old health officer.

"This is a chance to practice the kind of Christianity you profess," he said. "We need her leadership. . . .

Defended by Editor

"What Dr. Coggins did had no more to do with integration than drinking a cup of Russian tea has to do with spreading communism."

T. C. Merchant, editor of The Madison Enterprise-Recorder, said the commission "invaded Dr. Coggins' right of privacy" by their action. He said the private dining room of the restaurant in which Dr. Coggins and the Negro ate was the "equivalent to a room in her home."

Dr. Coggins got in the last word. "I'm going to stay in Madison and you are going to have to look at me a long time," she said.

Florida Teacher Asked To Quit For Defending Health Officer

Courier Montgomery, Ala.

Tues. 10-12-56

MONTICELLO, Fla., Oct. 11 (AP) —Mrs. Flo Way, 44-year-old white school teacher who came to the defense of Dr. Deborah Coggins, said today the Jefferson County School Board has asked her to resign.

Mrs. Way spoke at a Sept. 27 meeting of the commissioners of the three counties Dr. Coggins served as health officer in opposition to the firing of the physician for having a business lunch with a Negro nurse.

Mrs. Way, who has taught the fifth grade in Jefferson County for five years, said she was summoned to a meeting of the school board yesterday and asked for her resignation because of her support of Dr. Coggins.

The teacher said she has not made up her mind about whether to resign. She taught her class today as usual.

KEEP QUIET

She declared, however: "I have no reason to resign. I exercised my right of free speech."

Mrs. Way said Jefferson County School Supt. Desmond Bishop told her "he would fire me outright if I did not have a continuing contract." She added the school board asked her to "keep quiet" about yesterday's meeting but that spectators were coming in and out during the proceedings and she didn't see how the matter could be kept secret.

Mrs. Way, a native Floridian, said she is in favor of segregation and believes "integration in this area would be disastrous."

SERVED 3 COUNTIES

She said in the statement to the county commissioners which led to the request for her resignation that the Coggins incident was not important enough for a disturbance to be created over it.

Dr. Coggins served Jefferson, Madison and Taylor counties as health officer before she was discharged.

Chairman L. G. Morris of the Jefferson School Board said action against Mrs. Way was taken at the suggestion of Supt. Bishop whom he quoted as saying "it might be to the best interests of the school system."

At Tallahassee, State School Supt. Thomas D. Bailey said Mrs. Way "certainly is under no legal compulsion to resign." Bailey would make no further comment.

Mrs. Way is the wife of Bob Way, a seascape artist. They live nine miles west of here. They have no children.

Florida Race May Turn On Civil Rights Issue

Evening Star

By GOULD LINCOLN
Star Staff Correspondent

MIAMI, Oct. 26.—The civil rights issue, while it does not appear on the surface, could be a deciding factor in the race between President Dwight D. Eisenhower and Adlai Stevenson for Florida's 10 electoral votes.

Wash. 10-26-56

On this issue, neither the Republican nor the Democratic presidential candidate is satisfactory to the great mass of voters in this State. They don't want desegregation—especially in their schools. They intend to fight it as long as they can.

Washington, D.C.

There has been no integration in the schools, and when I asked the stiuation, a leading Democrat replied: "And there won't be any for a long time to come."

B-7

Returns to Democratic Party

Since the Democrats feel there is no choice, on this issue, between Mr. Eisenhower and Mr. Stevenson, some of them who supported the President in 1952 are now saying they are going back to vote Democratic. They contend they can best make their fight against desegregation in the Democratic Party.

If there are enough 1952 pro-Eisenhower Democrats following this course, they should make a Stevenson victory in Florida a certainty.

No one seems to be able to answer that question. Many of the voters have remained close-mouthed. Democratic leaders with whom I have talked frankly admit they think the presidential race is close—so close that they are only figuring on carrying the State for Mr. Stevenson with a lead of 30,000 to 45,000. This is mighty slim in an election when upwards of a million votes probably will be cast. In the 1952 election the total Florida presidential vote was 988,986, and Mr. Eisenhower's margin of victory was 99,086.

Not Worried Over Andrews

Neither side in the race is worrying about T. Coleman Andrews and his States Rights and Constitution Party. Due to the strong feeling in the State—directed against both major parties and their candidates for President on the civil rights issue—the Andrews ticket might have been expected to catch on here. It hasn't. ● Efforts made by Andrews supporters to get a sufficient number of signatures to place Mr. Andraws' name on the ballot were unsuccessful. The efforts came late. They failed in more than half the 64 counties of the State. The ballots for the election now are being printed, and it is impossible to get Mr. Andrews' name on them.

Under the election laws of Florida, a write-in vote for Mr. Andrews is possible, and a campaign for write-ins may be undertaken. The names of presidential and vice presidential candidates only appear on the ballot—not the names of the presidential electors. So it will be comparatively easy for Mr. Andrews' followers to write his name on their ballots.

It is not expected that the number of such write-in votes will be material, but the number will be watched with interest on election day. Andrews could take votes from either Mr. Stevenson's followers or those of Mr. Eisenhower.

Negroes Look Democratic

As for the Negro voters, the general belief is that they will for the most part stay in the Democratic Party where they have been for a number of years—since the days of Franklin D. Roosevelt. There will be some Republican gains among them. But it is expected the bulk will vote for Mr. Stevenson.

The number of registered Negro voters in the State is approximately 125,000. Not all of them vote. If there was a decided swing among them to Mr. Eisenhower, it could be of material effect on the election outcome.

The Democrats have no really strong, centralized State organization in Florida. Each prominent Democratic leader or office-holder has his own personal organization and following. But this year, most of these party leaders have thrown in with Mr. Stevenson, including both Senators, the Governor and all seven of the Democratic Congressmen.

The Stevenson campaign directors, therefore, have been greatly encouraged.

The Republicans, for their part, are counting heavily on their Citizens-for-Eisenhower organization. This organization is heavily weighted with Democrats—one of its leaders said he believed about 94 per cent of them were Democrats "who like Ike." The organization has 12,000 volunteer workers, scattered throughout the State—and only three paid workers. The figures indicate the real enthusiasm which Mr. Eisenhower engenders.

Veterans Back Eisenhower

A large number of veterans are supporting the President. As one Democrat told me, "Two hundred and fifty thousand Florida boys served under Eisenhower in World War II."

The Eisenhower campaign is being aided by Gen. James A. Van Fleet, commander in Korea during the war there. Gen. Van Fleet was a classmate of the President—at West Point. He is speaking frequently for the President, and probably will introduce him when Mr. Eisenhower speaks here next Monday or in Jacksonville. Gen. Van Fleet is honorary chairman of the Florida Citizens for Eisenhower.

Incidently, the general was head football coach at the University of Florida in the late 1920s, and has influence in Florida.

For a time, some Republicans were worried because of the statement of Representative Powell of New York when the Negro Congressman announced his support of the President. In that statement Mr. Powell quoted the President as having told him he, Mr. Eisenhower, thought that persons who resisted court orders for school integration would be put in jail—if they stood out. Mr. Powell has since withdrawn that part of his quotation of the President. However, the Democrats may bring the Powell statement into the campaign before it is over.

G. O. P. Leader Paul Helliwell, who heads the Citizens for Eisenhower here, has great hopes that the new voters, who number some 35,000, he says, will in the majority cast their votes for Mr. Eisenhower.

This big new vote, caused by the large influx of population in the last four years, and from the Floridians who have reached voting age in those four years, is a puzzle over which the Republicans and the Democrats both worry. Mr. Helliwell pointed out that Republican registration in the State in the last six months has gone up from 116,000 to 210,000.

Seek Jewish Vote

The Republican leaders believe opposition to the Republican national ticket among the Jews—of whom there are a large number in the Miami area—has been softened and that they will get some of the votes of that group.

An effort was made to show that Vice-President Nixon is anti-Semitic because he visited at a hotel with an anti-Jewish policy when he was down here. However, Nixon left the hotel as soon as he learned it was segregated.

Also a White House representative came here and talked confidentially with a group of Rabbis, giving them a detailed exposition of the administration's efforts to aid the Israeli.

The Democrats hope to carry Dade County (Miami). They have 11 party headquarters scattered through the city and are working hard. Four years ago, the county gave Mr. Eisenhower a 27,000 vote lead over Mr. Stevenson. The battle for votes here could determine the election.

Senator George Smathers, Democrat, against whom the Republicans have entered no candidate and who will be re-elected, is campaigning for Mr. Stevenson, and so is his old opponent, former Senator Claude Pepper. The latter has been making a number of telling speeches.

While the Republican leaders predict no figure by which they expect to carry the State, and admit that it is unlikely they can give Mr. Eisenhower as large a margin as he had in 1952, they speak with considerable confidence of victory. To an outsider it looks like a horse race, with the odds slightly favoring Mr. Stevenson.

MIAMI, Fla., Nov. 21 (UP)—Ninety per cent of 600 participants in Dade County's "Little White House" conference on education have expressed "general agreement with the general principle of integration," it was announced today.

Herald 11-22-56

The conference, studying the local educational picture and representing every major civic organization in this area, also recommended that a bi-racial citizens committee be appointed to study race relations and integration.

Some 540 delegates, representing fifty-four of the conference committees at the session here, voted yesterday in favor of integration.

The remaining sixty participants were divided into thirteen other committees. Nine committees declined to take a stand on integration but expressed their "willingness to abide by the law of the state when it is finally determined."

Four other conference committees refused to take action on the subject.

The "Little White House" conference here is based on the President's educational conference in Washington.

School Head Under Fire After Plea for Negro Swim Pool!

Courier p. 2
Pittsburgh Pa.

(Special to The Courier)

MOUNT DORA, Fla. — A local school official has been accused by a white Northerner of condemning every principle being fought for by Negroes when he asked for financial aid in the building of an all-Negro swimming pool in the "East Town" community of this city.

The accusation was made by H. H. Barrett, a "white Northerner," who wrote the Courier that " . . . Some of your leaders are hindering you from making the progress that you should be making. I attended a Lion's Club meeting and heard one of your leaders, a high school principal, Prof. C. O. Lott of Mt. Dora School, make an appeal for funds to build a swimming pool in East-town, a Negro section.

"He condemned every principle for which you people are fighting . . . He even condemned the Supreme Court for passing the decision on segregation, which he knows and every white man knows was the correct thing to do.

"A man like Prof. C. O. Lott should be discarded as a leader of your people. No swimming pool is worth talking against your people.

"Professor Lott said all of this, I am sure, to beg funds for the swimming pool his people need, I am sure, but no swimming pool is worth it. The things that he said were what the Southern white man wanted to hear, but they hurt your people.

"I had planned giving $100 toward the swimming pool, but after that speech I am not contributing anything."

THE ORLANDO Sentinel, which described Lott as "supervising principal of the Milner-Rosenwald Academy in Mt. Dora," reported the principal spoke before a meeting of Rotarians at a weekly luncheon at which he:

" . . . Stressed that he felt the Supreme Court decision had come at an inopportune moment, at a time when Florida was really beginning to put into effect the former edict of separate but equal facilities.

"He pointed out that the children in his area had needed a place to swim for 10 years, but added that so long as he was in a position of authority, there would be no requests for admission to Mt. Dora's white swimming pool. He stressed the effort being made by his own people, exemplified by a yard man giving as much as $100, but their need is $15,000. Following the meeting, Philip Lindsay suggested that perhaps the club could organize a fund-raising project to help with the pool."

MONTICELLO, Fla. — (INS) — The Florida State Board of Health has been asked to oust a health educator who defiantly denounced Jefferson county commissioners when they fired a white woman doctor for having lunch with a Negro nurse.

Defender p. 1

The county commission said it was requesting that Robert H. Browning be relieved of his duties because it "does not feel that Jefferson county needs a health educator at this time."

Chicago, Ill.

The commission, in a case that attracted national attention, fired Dr. Deborah Coggins as health officer in September because she was seen having lunch with a Negro nurse with whom she worked.

When Browning appeared before the commission in defense of Dr. Coggins, he defiantly told members: "I am not afraid of you individually or collectively."

Browning is health educator for Jefferson, Madison and Taylor counties, the same counties over which Dr. Coggins presided.

Mrs. Flo Way, a fifth grade teacher in Jefferson county who also stood up for Dr. Coggins, was asked to resign several weeks ago, but refused.

Pay Negro morticians less than white to bury paupers

MIAMI — Negro undertakers who bury the pauper dead, are even discriminated against, they charged before the Dade County Commissioners last week.

The commission wants Negro mortuaries to pick up adults for $15, children for $7.50, while whites get $100 for adults, $65 for children and $35 for infants.

Los Angeles

All Negro funeral associations are united in boycotting the local coroner until their demands are met.

Negro Ambulance Service Halted

Herald Sat. 12-1-56 p. 12a
Miami Fla.

Dade County's 10 Negro funeral homes discontinued all ambulance service at midnight Friday.

Emergency service is still available, however, from one ambulance company which reportedly does not practice racial segregation and two Miami police accident squad cars.

"When it's a case of life or death, we're going to get the man to a hospital. I don't care what color he is," a spokesman for Eastern Ambulance Service said.

Miami police have converted two accident squad station wagons into emergency ambulances.

38a

They are completely equipped with oxygen and all other apparatus found in ambulances, Lt. Glenn Baron, of the accident prevention bureau, said. Each car will carry two men trained in first aid.

Fla.

B. Solomon, president of the Dade County Negro Funeral and Ambulance Assn., said discourtesy and discrimination had destroyed members' interest in continuing to provide their exclusively Negro service.

Meanwhile, Negro funeral directors continued their strike against pauper burials for the county. The county commission pays only $15 for Negro pauper burials, but white funeral directors get $100 for burying paupers.

The county's 10 Negro funeral directors — Albert, Allen, Bain, Francis, Peek, Range, Richardson, Senior Solomon and Williams—have refused to bury paupers for the county for the past month.

County commissioners have threatened to file suit against the Negro funeral homes to enforce a contract signed four years ago. The county claims the contract doesn't expire for another three months.

Solomon commented, "They say they're going to file suit. Well, let them file. That contract was signed four years ago. Anybody knows the county can't sign more than a two-year contract. So let's see what happens when their suit gets to court."

Florida Assembly Set to Act On Anti-Integration Program

Some Say Plan Doesn't Go Far Enough; Collins Disagrees

TALLAHASSEE, Fla., July 21—The Florida Legislature will convene in special session here Monday to take up a program designed to slow down integration or halt it altogether.

But, it doesn't go as far as some lawmakers and state officials believe necessary, and if it fails to do the job, additional legislation is likely to be considered at the 1957 regular session, beginning next April.

Program Outlined

The program, which was proposed by a committee of legal experts composed of retired judges and attorneys, calls for legislation which would:

1. Direct the Florida Legislature to initiate a move to amend Article 10 of the federal constitution so as to spell out the fields in which the state and federal governments could operate.

2. Authorize county school boards to assign pupils to schools for which they are best suited.

3. Regulate the assignment of teachers. White teachers would be assigned to teach white pupils and Negro teachers assigned to teach Negro pupils.

4. Broaden the governor's police powers in emergencies, authorizing him to use forces of the state to prevent or suppress disorder.

5. Give the governor authority to make rules and regulations for use of public facilities.

State leaders, however, disagree as to the possible effectiveness of the program.

Gov. LeRoy Collins called the committee plan "the best program any state has adopted in this field. In my opinion, it will prevent integration."

He said it was "not designed in specific terms to apply to race, but it will be utilized as an effective means of maintaining segregation. This is not a program of gradual integration nor is it a subterfuge to evade the U.S. Supreme Court. Rather, it is an action of avoidance by legal means."

Mitigating Effect

The committee, however, indicated its purpose was to slow down integration, pending possible amendment of the federal constitution.

Retired Circuit Judge L. L. Fabisinski of Pensacola, chairman of the legal committee, warned the people not to expect too much.

He said that as the situation now stands desegregation "is the law of the land and we are going to have to live with it whether we like it or not. Our work was directed at mitigating the effect of the U.S. Supreme Court decision."

Atty. Gen. Richard Ervin said "the committee's plan is fine as far as it goes, but it does not go far enough." The suggested laws, he said, "would delay integration, but would not halt it. In the final analysis, the only solution, if the people wish to go that far, is abolishment of the public school system."

Ervin had urged enactment of a proposed state constitutional amendment permitting individual counties to abolish their public schools as a "last resort."

State educational leaders frowned upon this proposal. Thomas D. Bailey, state superintendent of education, said he didn't think "anything could happen that should cause us to destroy our public school system."

Ervin originally had planned to offer his local option amendment to the special session, but after opposition from educators, Collins and the legal committee, he said he wouldn't consider pushing the proposal until the 1957 regular meeting.

Of the committee's recommendations, Bailey had this to say:

"While this may not be a final solution, I am convinced it is the best the committee could do and still stay within the law. I am convinced if the Legislature passes these laws we will have machinery for dealing with the problem for two or three years."

Teacher Backing

But, he frankly admitted, "I don't know what will happen after that."

E. H. Henderson, executive secretary of the Florida Education Association, which numbers more than 22,000 school teachers among its membership, said that "Under the circumstances, the committee came up with the soundest program so far proposed by the state. It may provide a means of alleviating a great many of the apprehensions. We believe the committee has proposed a program which the educators of the state can support."

In its report and recommendations, the legal committee denounced the U.S. Supreme Court for allegedly embarking upon a course of action "designed to destroy the system of dual sovereignty."

It said recent decisions of the high court, affecting not only schools but other fields of activity which should be left to the states, "impel the conclusion that the U.S. Supreme Court has assumed the power, by judicial decree, to change the meaning of the Constitution of the United States and thus to amend the fundamental law of the land by the act of nine men, or a majority of them, rather than by the orderly process set forth in the Constitution."

The committee concluded that "in view of the gravity of the situation the question of segregation or desegregation in public schools actually becomes one of secondary importance."

Committee Member Cody Fowler of Tampa, former president of the American Bar Assn., said many Northern states are "alarmed" at recent decisions by the court which he said invade the rights of the states.

Philosophy, Not Law

The committee said that the Supreme Court based its desegregation decree on social philosophy rather than law and declared this same philosophy could be used by Florida to defeat the court ruling.

Committee members warned against any attempt to go farther at this time than the proposals embodied in their recommendations. They said any hint of outright discrimination could be enough to have all segregation laws declared unconstitutional by the courts.

J. Lewis Hall of Tallahassee, another committee member, said the major item in their recommendations was the school assignment law. In addition to its assignment features, the proposal provides that the State Board of Education may hear appeals from such assignments before they go to the courts.

"This is the law all the Southern states are going to come to sooner or later," Hall said. "It is constitutional and the courts cannot knock it down. There is not a single word, line or paragraph with the implication of race, creed or color."

Washington, D. C.

TALLAHASSEE, Fla., July 17 (AP)—Gov. Leroy Collins indicated today he would summon the Florida Legislature into special session tomorrow for July 23 to adopt a four-point segregation program and other emergency proposals.

The Governor is expected to restrict the segregation phase of his call to the program proposed by a committee of legal experts. The program also provides for initiating a move to clarify states' rights by amendment of the U. S. Constitution.

Passes 4-Point Program to Prevent Integration—North Carolina Legislators Meet

New York

Special to The New York Times.

TALLAHASSEE, Fla., July 23—A four-point program designed to prevent integration of the races in Florida was unanimously passed today by the State Senate. It acted three hours after the State Legislature had convened in special session.

The House did not act on the same bills introduced in that chamber. However, there were indications they would be speedily passed. Committees went to work on the bills.

In fact about the only controversy likely is whether individual legislators can introduce bills of their own relating to the segregation issue.

In a special session, the legislature is limited by the Governor's call to what it can take up, unless there is a two-third majority voting for it. However, some legislators are of the opinion that they can introduce bills if they relate to the same subject even if they were not specified by the Governor. An opinion from the State Attorney General on the subject is expected tomorrow.

The Governor's four-point program was recommended by a special committee of well-known Florida lawyers. In main, the bills provide for assignment of pupils to schools on the basis of ability and sociolological factors, give school boards authority to assigne teachers to schools for which they are best fitted, and increase the Governor's power to deal with disorders and use of public facilities.

Governor Leroy Collins called on the legislators to pass his program. He said it would "give us the legal tools we need to best serve our state's general welfare." The lawmakers also were urged not to resort to legislation of constitutional reform outside the scope of the program offered because it "might weaken it legally."

Governor Collins said, "I pledge to you, through you, to the people of Florida, that if this program is enacted, I shall, as Governor, use the full measure of my abilities to see that it is administered to preserve the sovereignty of our state. To maintain our public school system and to assure peace and order so that our people of all races and creeds can live and progress in peace and harmony."

The legislature also went to work on a number of other matters requested by the governor. They include a $5,000,000 appropriation to fight the Mediterranean fruit fly, measures to provide new facilities at state institutions, a bill to build a highway patrol building and increase the strength of the patrol.

Representative Prentice Pruitt is expected to bring before the House tomorrow some bills of his own, including a proposed emergency amendment to the Constitution that would permit local option to abolish public schools if necessary to prevent integration.

Rather Walk With Dignity Say Leaders

Herald Tribune

Sun. 7-22-56

Tallahassee, Fla. (Special).—The effect of a united bus boycott drive by local Negro citizens became apparent Sunday when operators of the Cities Transit company suspended services.

Faced with the loss of 70 percent of its patrons during the month-long boycott, the company obviously thought it economically wise to halt all bus routes until a settlement has been reached.

It was believed that a near compromise was in sight Friday. However, the Negro Inter-Civic Council refused to back down on its demands for an end to segregated seating on the buses and immediate employment of Negro drivers.

Stetson Coleman, president of the bus company, had announced earlier last month that if no settlement was reached soon the company would suspend operations July 1.

The boycott was launched shortly after the arrest of two Florida A. & M coeds for refusing to move to the rear of the bus after occupying vacant seats in the front. Although charges were dropped, the movement spread to the entire Negro community, estimated around 14,000.

The city indicated that it had little intention of reaching a democratic solution by only agreeing to amend the bus franchise to permit open seating on the predominantly Negro lines except for one three-passenger lateral seat at the front which would have been reserved for whites and to allow employment of Negro drivers at the discretion of the company.

A mass meeting was scheduled by the Inter-Civic Council to discuss possible plans for a transportation system of its own. However, it is believed that stiff opposition may halt any such attempt since a franchise would have to be obtained from the city. And Coleman has said that he will oppose any efforts to set up another transportation service.

World-wide attention continues to be focused on the Southland as the new Negro seeks to bring about decency and fair play, absent for many years in this section of the United States.

The Rev. K. C. Steele, president of the Inter-Civic Council, said that there had been reports that certain leaders influenced the Negro community to stay off the buses, but that it was a spontaneous action by the entire community.

Said the Rev. Steele: "We had rather walk with dignity than ride with humiliation."

Meanwhile, prior to the opening of the 47th annual NAACP convention at San Francisco last week the Rev. Martin L. King, a leader of the Montgomery, Ala. bus boycott, said that "Negro action" like the six-month-old boycott in his state might become the pattern of many areas in the South.

Emphasizing that "a willingness to go to jail for right or righteousness" is an essential part of his program, he urged the convention to advocate wider use of passive resistance.

He went on to suggest that Negroes should boycott segregated Southern schools to force compliance of the Supreme Court's desegregation ruling, if necessary. The minister added that he "had not thought the idea through fully and was not making it as a formal proposal."

Rep. Land Picked as Racial Probe Chief in Bitter Sectional Debate

Herald 7-20-56

JACKSONVILLE — (AP) — A bitter split over who will boss the legislative investigation of the NAACP — and possibly of the Ku Klux Klan — developed at the joint Senate-House committee's organization meeting Tuesday.

Wed. 9-12-56

Rep. Henry Land of Orange County won the chairmanship over Sen. Dewey Johnson of Quincy in a vote decided by the fact that House members outnumber senators on the committee four to three.

Miami, Fla.

The difference obviously went deeper than jealousy between the two chambers, however.

The three senators—Johnson, John Rawls of Marianna and Charley Johns of Starke—are from north Florida sections where segregation sentiment is strongest.

House members Land, Cliff Herrell of Dade County, Jack said that there would be repercussions from the senate as a whole. He said he based his strong feeling on the tradition that a committee chairman comes from the chamber which originates the bill.

House speaker Ted David who sat in on part of the meeting, told newsmen later this tradition has been broken several times; that the more general rule is that the chairmanship of a committee goes to the chamber which has the most members on it.

Sen. Rawls also said he had been told that two House members would refuse to serve if a senator became chairman. House members quickly denied this.

After the dispute was resolved by the election of Land as chairman, the atmosphere calmed and Johnson was unanimously named vice chairman.

Members agreed that Land should consult Atty. Gen. Richard Ervin on rules and procedures the committee can follow and ask if an assistant attorney general can be assigned as committee counsel.

A permanent headquarters was voted for Tallahassee and David said Mrs. Lamar Bledsoe is available as temporary secretary.

Johnson said the committee has no intention of conducting a "witch hunt" but will investigate any organizations or persons who oppose provisions of the constitution and laws, including those decreeing the preservation of segregated schools.

The legislature's intent plainly prescribed an investigation of the National Assn. for the Advancement of Colored People.

Johnson said the committee also can investigate the Ku Klux Klan and is not aimed at only one organization.

DR. S. OLIVER Roberts of Fisk University, one of the members who surveyed Miami Beach, said that for the convention to go there would be to ignore the fact that conditions existing there today were "by no means as good as that in Washington in 1952."

It was at the Washington meeting that the group adopted its resolution banning meetings in places where public facilities were not open to members of race or religion.

Psychological body snubs Fla. as convention site

Afro-American Sat. 9-15-56

Baltimore, Md.

CHICAGO — The State of Florida will not be host to the American Psychological Association convention in 1957 because of its (the state's) segregation policies.

In a third session on whether to meet in Miami Beach or not, the voting body of the group first rescinded its earlier decision not to go. It then took an even more decisive stand not to go.

The association has twice adopted resolutions that it not meet in places where some members might be discriminated against.

* * *

THE CONCLUSION not to meet in Miami Beach was reached after the voting body of the group pondered a whole week over these two questions:

(1) Should the association abide by its two previous resolutions that it not meet in places where some of its members might be discriminated against?

(2) Or would the cause of desegregation best be served by holding a non-segregated meeting in an area where some discriminating might occur, but which has evidenced a desire to change its ways?

* **

THOSE WHO favored meeting in Miami argued that the Miami Beach hotels, with which agreement was being reached, had pledged that full facilities would be available to all members.

Those against the seaside meeting place objected that colored members of the association might be subject to indignities both in the area surrounding Miami Beach, from which no pledge was forthcoming, and in traveling through the South to the meeting.

Fla. Racial Picture Is Said Good

Daily World Atlanta, Ga. 9-7-56

TALLAHASSEE, Fla. —(INS) — Florida Gov. Leroy Collins said Thursday he thinks the state's general racial situation is good compared with other Southern states but added "I just hope and pray we do not let the extremists on both sides thwart our progress."

Collins made the statement at a press conference in Tallahassee following his first meeting with the three-man bi-racial committee he appointed last week.

Also attending the meeting were state adjutant Gen. Mark W. Lance, Florida Highway Patrol Director H. R. Kirk and Ross Anderson, director of the Florida Sheriff's Bureau.

The law enforcement officers were on hand to advise in respect to law enforcement procedures which are available in the event of racial strife. Collins declared: "We don't antiipate having to resort to any extreme means in enforcing law and order in the state as far as segregation is concerned but want to be prepared in the event an emergency should arise."

Tampa Daily Times

The chief executive said he thinks segregation bills passed at the recent special session of the legislature "should give Florida the best legal tools of any state to cope with our problem."

The committee will serve as members of the Governor's staff, not as an independent agency.

The Governor is hopeful that the group can help improve race relations throughout the state. All Florida joins in that hope.

All Florida hopes, too that "extremists on both sides" will never be able to stir up such deplorable incidents as the country has witnessed in Tennessee and Kentucky the last few days.

For The Lessening Of Racial Tensions

Herald Tampa Sat. 9-8-56

GOVERNOR COLLINS factually and calmly warns that the state's booming industrial expansion could be impaired if racial tensions should develop in Florida.

Miami, Fla.

"I feel," said the Governor, "that the situation in Florida generally is good when compared with that of sister states. I think this is substantiated by the quiet and stable manner which marked the opening of our schools."

The tensions agitated in the integration of Negro pupils in high schools at Clinton, Tennessee, and Sturgis, Kentucky are significantly strange. These are small towns. Their populations are inadequate to build "separate but equal" high school facilities for both races, even if the U.S. Supreme Court had not declared that method unconstitutional.

One wonders why villages of their size were picked for the demonstrations which necessitated the presence of the National Guard to keep the situation in hand.

Floridians should carefully weigh the developments and their causes in Clinton and Sturgis.

The Governor holds with his warning of last March that "good will between the races is deteriorating at an alarming rate. Relations once were excellent."

To forestall, and if necessary control a possible "trouble spot," the Governor will rely on the quick collection of facts and timely recommendations of his Bi-Racial Advisory Committee.

But, White Official Fights Back

Eats With Negro, Fired!

Health Officer in Florida Is Calm in Negro Incident

MONTICELLO, Fla. (ANP) —Dr. Deborah Coggins, who was fired from her job as county health officer because she lunched with a Negro nurse, stated that she will fight to hold the job.

The dismissal was agreed upon at a joint conference of the Jefferson, Taylor and Madison commissions in the courthouse of this rural Florida town,, where the three commissions debated Dr. Croggins' fate while a crowd of pro-segregationist shouted, "fire her."

Dr. Coggins, an attractive blond, was the state's only woman health officer.

She has been under fire since Aug. 22 when she had a business conference with Miss Ethel Kirkland, a Negro registered nurse, in a private dining room of a Madison restaurant.

The two women met to discuss a class for Negro midwives being conducted by Miss Kirkland.

Dr. Coggins, a native of Tampa, had held the job since April 9. Her husband, Dr. Wilmer J. Coggins, is a native of nearby Madison where he has a practice.

MADISON, Fla., Oct. 4 (AP).—You never would think to look at blond, youthful Dr. Deborah Coggins that she is the center of a racial controversy which has rocked this area of rural North Florida to its conservative foundations.

The 32-year-old mother of three children seems much more like a trim, attractive suburban housewife than a county health officer who had a storm break about her after she had a business luncheon with a Negro nurse.

Editor T. C. Merchant, jr., of the weekly Enterprise-Recorder here, a staunch supporter of Dr. Coggins, has said she has been subjected to "the most vicious assortment of lies, misrepresentation and slander that I have had occasion to witness in this community."

Air of Detachment

The young physician, however, preserved such an air of serene detachment that it almost seemed as if someone else were involved.

It was unexpected when she blazed up at the Madison County Commission yesterday, calling its members "fools" and "cowards" for refusing to tell her whether she was being fired because of the luncheon with the Negro.

Only a short while later, she was her composed self again—able to discuss with a sort of rueful amusement the multiple firings she has experienced since the August 22 lunch.

Being fired has been almost a part of Dr. Coggins' daily routine of late. Since she served the three North Florida counties of Madison, Jefferson and Taylor as health officer, separate action was required from each.

The first move came from Madison County when it asked the State Board of Health to relieve her of her job. She counts that as her first "firing."

Hears Self Dismissed

Then commissioners of all three counties got together and decided to dismiss her if she didn't resign. Separate actions followed in each county. She went to each county seat to hear herself dismissed.

In Jefferson and Taylor Counties she sat quietly, addressing the commissioners respectfully and not forgetting the "sir" which springs automatically to the lips of a Southerner when speaking to men in authority.

But Dr. Coggins, a native of Tampa, used no respectful title when addressing the members of the commission of her home county of Madison.

When they refused to explain the reason for asking the Board of Health to relieve her, she demanded in a rush of words: "Why are you such cowards? You must be afraid you're not doing the right thing. You're all fools, fools!"

She has no intention of leaving Madison, though. It's the birthplace of her husband and "it's our home."

Job Offered

Home and her children are important to her. She could have taken another job with the Board of Health, offered after the controversy arose. But it would have entailed being away from Madison a good part of the time and she didn't even consider it.

Nor has she considered other job offers which have reached her from Pennsylvania and California, though she is warm in her appreciation for the support implied in the bids for her services.

There is nothing of the crusader or rabble-rouser about Dr. Coggins. She says she had no idea of breaching Southern social custom when she arranged the luncheon conference with Mrs. Ethel Kirkland, Negro midwife consultant for the Board of Health. She says she did it only because a crowded schedule made it impossible to see the nurse at any other time.

But she insists with calmness and conviction that "health knows no color boundaries."

Refuses to "Apologize"

She refused, when questioned at one of her several "firings," to apologize for her action. And both she and her physician husband, soft-spoken Dr. Wilber J. Coggins, have declared the actions against her infringe on her personal freedom as a citizen.

Dr. Coggins, a graduate of the University of Florida and of the Duke University Medical School, plan now to go into private practice here, working in the same office with her husband. She has no fear that they will lack for patients despite bitter feelings voiced against her by some residents of the community.

Ousted Doctor Is Offered Job

REDDING, Calif., Oct. (AP) Shasta County has offered the job of health director to Dr. Deborah Coggins, 32, of Monticello, Fla., fired last week by the County Commissioners in her district for having lunch with a Negro nurse in a restaurant in Monticello.

William G. Minton, Shasta County executive officer, today said he telegraphed Dr. Coggins that the $894 job here is open here and that county officials would like to consider her application. The telegram, Minton said, was authorized by the county board of supervisors.

Negroes Need Aid --Collins

Governor Urges Broad Outlook

(See picture Page 2-A)

By JOHN BOYLES
Herald Staff Writer

Gov. LeRoy Collins urged Floridians Friday not to be so blinded by their desire to preserve segregation that the welfare of the Negro citizens be ignored.

The governor outlined a 12-point program in stressing Florida's needs in keeping with her fast growth in a speech before a crowd of 850 at the Hialeah-Miami Springs Chamber of Commerce banquet at Miami Springs Villas.

"Too many (Negroes) are still living in crime and disease-producing slums," he said. "Too many do not receive adequate medical care. Too many do not receive adequate educational opportunities."

He said the welfare of Florida's Negro population "must be improved."

The governor went on to say, "We must not let our desire to maintain our traditions of segregation blind us to our responsibility to aid the Negro's improvement and advancement."

Other points stressed by Gov. Collins included a new and modern constitution which will allow fair representation in the legislature; traffic safety, and means for aiding the settlement of labor disputes.

"Disputes are certain to arise between labor and management as we continue to industrialize," he said.

New officers installed by the chamber of commerce were: Joseph A. Boyd Jr., president, succeeding Dr. Carl J. Slade; Everett Clay, first vice president; Newt Bollinger, second vice president; Vivan Hoffman, for a fifth term as treasurer, and Verne Barnes, secretary-manager.

The crowd included a galaxy of political dignitaries and business and industrial leaders from the entire Greater Miami area.

It heard a forecast that Hialeah-Miami Springs will have a population of 108,000 in 1976 compared to 60,000 today and an increase from 622 industries to 1,200 in the 10-year period.

Fla. Doctor Who Ate Lunch With Negro Is Under Fire

News & Observer, Raleigh, N.C.

MADISON, Fla., Sept. 19 (AP)—The State Board of Health has been asked to fire Florida's only woman county health officer, apparently because she ate lunch with a Negro nurse during a business discussion.

Herald Thurs. 9-20-56

The Madison County Commission made the request to the state board on Sept. 5. It wants the board to discharge Dr. Deborah Coggins, 32, white mother of three children.

Dr. Coggins, 32, is the wife of Dr. Wilmer J. Coggins, a Madison physician.

The board said it could discharge a health official only for cause and that no reason for discharge was given in the Comission's letter.

Dr. Coggins says she was sent a copy of the letter but never formally advised of any reason she should be ousted. She said she would not resign the $675-a-month job she has held in the tri-county health area of Jefferson, Madison and Taylor since April 9. The three counties pay her salary.

Dr. Wilson T. Sowder, state health officer, said Madison officials had the power to discharge her. He said he offered to discuss the matter with the commission. "a normal procedure. We haven't heard anything further."

The Commission notified Dr. Coggins it would discuss the situation with her Oct. 3 as she had requested.

She gave this account of the matter:

On Aug. 20 Ethel Kirland, a Negro registered nurse who is midwife consultant for the state board, opened a class here for Negro midwives at Dr. Coggins' request.

Two days later Dr. Coggins found it necessary to discuss the class with the nurse. Since Dr. Coggins' morning and afternoon schedules were too full to permit discussions, a luncheon conference was arranged in a private dining room of a Madison restaurant. Three restaurant employes agreed to the luncheon. Ethel Crosley, a white board nurse observing the course, also was present.

Then, on Sept. 5, the Madison Commission voted to send a letter to the board saying it had "voted to request the State Board of Health to relieve Dr. Coggins of her duties."

Dr. Coggins was graduated from the University of Florida in 1947. She obtained her M.D. from Duke University.

Lowry Raps Integration By Bayonet

Herald P. 8-b Thurs. 9-6-56 Miami, Fla.

TAMPA — (AP) — Sumter L. Lowry, unsuccessful candidate for governor on a segregation platform, said Wednesday Gov. LeRoy Collins should say whether he would use guard troops if public protests should develop over Negroes applying for admission to Florida schools.

Lowry, a retired commander of a National Guard division, said:

"The showdown is here! Are the governors of the Southern states going to side with their people or are they going to side with the U.S. Supreme Court and its unconstitutional decrees?

"If a governor has to use tanks and troops with bayonets to force people to recognize the Supreme Court decision, certainly this is proof that this decision is unacceptable to the people, and that it must be reversed and made of no effect."

Lowry referred to a picture made at Clinton, Tenn., of a national guardsman holding a bayonet on a White man. He said this is a "photographic record of integration of the races being rammed down the throats of an unwilling people at the point of a bayonet."

He said he didn't believe in mob rule, but declared "whenever and wherever integration is forced then we will have violence and disorder, and all the troops in North America won't stop it."

To Be Fired For Lunch With Negro

Daily World Thurs. 9-20-56 Atlanta, Ga.

MADISON, Fla. — (INS) — A 32-year-old white nurse will go before the Madison County Commission on Oct. 5 to show cause why she should not be fired for eating lunch with a Negro nurse in a private restaurant last month.

Dr. Deborah Coggins, 32, Health Officer for the District of Madison, Jefferson and Taylor Counties in North Florida requested the meeting "to discuss the situation." Mrs. Coggins, wife of Madison physician Wilmer J. Coggins, has served at her present post since May 1.

She said she arranged the luncheon meeting with Negro nurse Ethel Kirkland on Aug. 20 to discuss a class for Negro midwives which the two were planning. The Kirkland woman has been with the State Health Department for 25 years and is currently serving as State Midwife Consultant.

Dr. Coggins said the two were joined at lunch by another white nurse. She said that on Sept. 5 the Madison County Commission sent a letter to the State Board of Health asking that she be relieved of her duties at once after several townspeople complained.

Dr. Wilson T. Sowder, Florida State Health Officer, said he is "giving the matter very earnest consideration." He added he would "be glad" to confer with the County Commission on the matter.

Sowder pointed out that health officers are employed by the County Commissions with the approval of the State Board of Health and "the same procedure should be required in firing one."

Mrs. Coggins, a native of Tampa, Fla., and the mother of three children, said she has no intention of resigning her position and added she would fight the move to fire her through her attorney, Raeburn C. Horne.

Florida's Collins Urges Ike Call Governors' Racial Meet

Constitution Atlanta, Ga.

TALLAHASSEE, Fla., March 22 (AP)—Gov. Leroy Collins today called on President Eisenhower to convene a conference of Southern governors for a discussion of racial relations.

3-23-56

In his message to the President, Collins said that as a result of the Supreme Court's school integration decision and of activities of extremists on both sides "we are experiencing what well may become a serious deterioration of racial relations.

"We are fearful the progress we have made over many years may be dissipated."

The Florida governor was authorized by a conference of state government leaders and educators here yesterday to call upon the President and Atty. Gen. Brownell to meet with the Southern governors and attorneys general.

"We desire an opporunity to convey to you as our President our sincere impressions of these circumstances and conditions and feel that you and the attorney general of the United States can be helpful not only in Florida but also to all of the Southern states, if you see and understand the problems with which we are confronted," Collins said.

"This understanding we feel you can have though the United States Supreme Court has demonstrated a woeful lack of such insight."

The Florida group took its cue from a second appeal yesterday by Eisenhower for moderation in the school integration issue and a suggestion by Collins that the South go directly to the President with its problem.

Yesterday's conference was called to develop a workable plan to head off integration at the state universities by legal means.

Warren Charges Governor and Lowry Followed Integration Practices

Collins Defends Stand on Segregation: 'I Have Proved We Can Maintain It'

By The Associated Press

Fuller Warren attacked Gov. LeRoy Collins and Sumter L. Lowry on the segregation issue Monday, charging that both followed integration practices prior to the governorship campaign.

Collins also came under attack from another of his opponents, Farris Bryant, for campaign spending.

Bryant charged that Collins proposed to the legislature a plan to limit campaign spending and now leads the field in the amount of money spent during the current campaign.

Collins was occupied with state business in Tallahassee during the morning, but campaigned in Panama City and Pensacola later in the day

Collins defended his position on segregation by saying, "I have proved we can maintain segregation. I will maintain segregation. There is no evidence that the other candidates have done anything to maintain segregation or said anything about it before they became candidates."

In a speech to a pep rally of campaign chairmen from throughout the state at Miami Beach, Warren read from a notarized affidavit in which he pledged that "no Negroes will be admitted to white schools and colleges of this state, if Fuller Warren is governor."

Warren charged that Collins had started integration in the state government through his appointment of Henry Arrington, a Negro, as assistant state attorney of Dade County. Arrington subsequently was suspended from office.

Warren said that Lowry, a retired National Guard lieutenant general, had never spoken out against mixing of the races "until he turned politician and announced for governor a few months ago."

Collins said at Panama City there was a great future for West Florida and the "development commission now is working on proposals to locate new industries in the West Florida area and important announcements may come soon."

The governor bitterly criticized Lowry for for circulating a piece of literature which accused Collins of "riding the Moscow train." Collins described the literature as "filthy and scurrilous" and said "a man of integrity and character would not stoop so low."

Lowry went handshaking in the Miami area and spoke over a Miami television station Monday night.

Bryant at Orlando sought to lay a 25 per cent increase in highway fatalities at Collins' door, saying that although 100 highway patrolmen had been added the administration wasn't making proper use of them.

Warren's campaign director, Bryan Mack charged that the Collins administration as "putting pressure" on road contractors who would normally be for Warren.

And Dean Allen Rasco of the University of Miami law school told the Warren rally there was a large silent vote for Warren which wasn't being heard from now.

Array of Weapons Seized in Delray

Herald Mon. 5-28-56 Miami, Fla. P. 1

DELRAY BEACH — A motley assortment of firearms and fighting tools was seized at roadblocks here Sunday as police imposed near-martial law to prevent racial disorders on the municipal beach.

The weapons were confiscated — at least temporarily — from more than 100 cars entering the mile-long beach area through four roadblocks set up and maintained by 30 law officers throughout the day.

Police Chief R. C. Croft of Delray Beach said the weapons can be claimed "after a cooling off period." He reported no trouble during or after the seizures.

Included in the arsenal were shotguns, pistols, revolvers, machete knives, hatchets, icepicks, hunting knives, switchblades and a bale hook.

Some of the weapons were loaded, police said. In all, about 30 pieces were seized and removed to police headquarters, although no arrests were made.

The roadblocks were set up promptly at 9 a.m. and removed at 5 p.m.

Police were empowered to search cars and seize weapons by the City Commission after last Sunday's tense gathering between 150 White and Negro persons on the beach.

The group was chased off the beach by police to avoid any possible violence.

In addition to Delray Beach officers, members of auxiliary police units, the Florida Highway Patrol, the Palm Beach sheriff's department and constables' offic es were at the roadblocks.

One Negro was held by police after a bolita ticket was found on him after he was frisked.

The roadblocks were maintained at the north and south end of the beach on State Road A1A, and at Atlantic Avenue and Eighth St., the only two bridges across the Intracoastal Waterway, which bisects this city.

At the south end roadblocks, local police Sgt. James Grantham said, "We stopped carloads of kids or men, white or Negro, and searched them and their cars.

"You can just about tell what cars to search."

Besides frisking, police inspected glove compartments and trunks. Many cars from Dade and Broward Counties and vehicles from out of state, Pinellas and Hillsborough Counties passed through the roadblocks.

Three cars of teenagers stopped near last Sunday's 150-foot incident area for over an hour, but dispersed when the area remained devoid of swimmers except for two White girls that appeared to sun themselves.

The municipal pool, also ruled off limits to Negroes in last week's unprecedented segregation ordinance, remained closed because of "mechanical breakdown."

Negroes' Beach Suit Settled by Accord

Tampa, Fla. Washington, D.C.

DEL RAY BEACH, Fla., May 17 (AP).—A suit to win Negroes the freedom of Del Ray Beach was dismissed in Federal Court at West Palm Beach after officials denied the city barred Negroes from the mile-long public coastal strip.

5-17-56

The dismissal by agreement was hailed by counsel for nine Negro plaintiffs as a victory in providing a precedent for segregation cases in Florida. Counsel for Del Ray Beach denied the dismissal constituted a precedent. They said the only thing settled was that the city was falsely accused of segregation. The suit was filed in 1954.

After the disavowal of a city ban on Negroes at the popular resort beach, the dismissal without prejudice was granted by Judge Emmet C. Choate. He complimented both sides on their agreement for dismissal.

Neal MacMillan, counsel for Del Ray Beach, said the dismissal "does not set a precedent because it didn't produce a ruling from the court. . . ." MacMillan said the case showed only that Del Ray Beach had not practiced segregation as charged by the plaintiffs.

Delray Beach Passes Law To Bar Negroes from Pool

Register Des Moines, Iowa Thurs. 5-31-56

Delray Beach, Fla. — The Delray Beach city commission adopted an ordinance May 23 to prohibit Negroes from using the municipal swimming pool or the municipal beach.

The commission called its action an "emergency ordinance to prevent interracial riots within the city."

"Racial tension has increased in this community to the point that the life of one commissioner has been threatened," the commissioners said.

Federal Suit

P. 1

The law was adopted without discussion in a public session.

It came eight days after the dismissal of a suit in federal court at Miami in which 9 Negroes sought use of the facilities.

The city previously has had no law to prevent the "intermingling of the Negro and white races," the commission noted.

This was the basis for dismissing the suit. Representatives of the city had told Judge Emett Choate that "the public beaches always have been open to all people regardless of color."

Little Tension

Little tension had been noted in this south Florida town of some 8,500 persons—including about 2,000 Negroes — before the suit was brought. Four Negro men sunbathed on one section of the beach two days after the decision without incident.

But a group of about 70 Negroes went to the beach last Sunday and met a group of whites of about equal size. They argued several minutes before policemen dispersed them.

There was no violence and no arrests were made.

Penalty for violating the law was set at up to $500 fine and up to 90 days in jail.

The commission said the city has "received a great deal of unfavorable publicity" because it had no law prohibiting racial mingling.

Desegregation Plans Underway in Miami

Post & Times Herald P.30
Thurs. 6-14-56

MIAMI, Fla., June 13 —Miami Negroes sought today to erase the color line in buses and schools.

Washington

The drive against segregated schools is Florida's first court case of its kind. Miami would be the largest city affected by organized efforts to desegregate buses.

N.C.

The National Assn. for the Advancement of Colored People announced plans for a meeting on how to end segregation on buses. City ordinances require Negro passengers to ride in the rear.

Six Negroes filed a Federal suit to enjoin enforcement of Florida's segregation laws and to require Dade County (Miami) to speed racial integration of its schools.

Stirring interest in the bus segregation meeting was the arrest of two Negroes who defied orders to move to the rear of buses.

Rudolph Reid, 19, and Mrs. Bessie Kerbo, 50, were jailed on disorderly conduct charges for court appearances respectively on Thursday and Friday. NAACP leaders said they would explore possibilities of a boycott of buses and court action to do away with segregated seating. Negroes have boycoted buses in desegregation campaigns at Montgomery, Ala., and Tallahassee, Fla. There was some question whether the boycott technique would work in sprawling Miami.

Integration Foes Form Unit in State

OCALA — (UP) — Sixty delegates from all parts of the state, meeting in secret and led by a strong white supremacy advocate, Saturday organized a group pledged to "an unalterable opposition to integration of the races."

A spokesman said it was the first organization of its kind on a statewide basis in Florida.

Known as the Florida Federation for Constitutional Government, the group elected Prentice Pruitt of Monticello as its chairman. Pruitt, running on a segregation platform, was defeated in a race for attorney general in the May 8 election.

B. J. Driver, Clearwater attorney, was chosen vice chairman and Daniel Crisp, Jacksonville advertising executive, was named temporary secretary.

Driver said among the federation's chief aims were "repeal of all unconstitutional laws, reversal of unconstitutional court decisions and the defeat of all unconstitutional proposals which would invade the rights of the sovereign states or their people."

The vice chairman said the group planned to hold an open meeting later this summer or fall.

Delray Beach, Fla., May 23 (AP)—The Delray Beach city commission adopted an ordinance today to prohibit Negroes from using the municipal swimming pool or the municipal beach.

The commission called its action an "emergency ordinance to prevent interracial riots within the city."

"Racial tension has increased in this community to the point that the life of one commisisoner has been theatened," the commissioners said.

No Public Discussion

The law was adopted without discussion in a public session eight days after the dismissal of a suit in federal court at Miami in which nine Negroes sought use of the facilities.

The city previously has had no law to prevent the "intermingling of the Negro and white races," the commission noted. This was the basis for dismissing the suit brought in the United States District court before Judge Emett Choate May 10.

Representatives of the city told the judge then that "the public beaches always have been open to all people regardless of color."

Hits High Court's 'Absolutism'

Ervin Offers Plan To Keep Race Bars

Herald Miami, Fla. Tues. 6-19-56 P.17-A

FORT PIERCE —(UP)— Atty. Gen. Richard Ervin, hitting at the "color blind absolutism" of the U. S. Supreme Court, proposed a five-point program Monday to maintain racial segregation in Florida.

"We feel that the strait-jacket absolutism" of the court must be tempered by reason," Ervin said. "Necessity sometimes forces practical solutions even in the face of the highest judicial authority."

ERVIN

Ervin, speaking to a Rotary Club luncheon here, urged creation of a new advisory state administrative commission with broad powers to "recommend legal solutions to concrete racial problems" and make recommendations to the courts and to the Legislature.

He proposed that a special legislative session on segregation, expected to be called next month by Gov. LeRoy Collins, also consider extending the state's school assignment law, adopting an interposition resolution, giving the governor additional power to prevent "public disorder," and providing for a system whereby public schools might be abolished on a "local option" basis as a last resort.

A special committee of judges and lawyers appointed by Collins is expected to recommend extending the school assignment law which provides that local school boards assign individual pupils to schools. Ervin said this should be broadened to provide "additional administrative processes and sppeals both at grade school and college levels."

The attorney general said that "railing at the U.S. Supreme Court with manifestoes" is without value but that a resolution of interposition such as adopted by some other Southern states would "formally raise the question of usurpation of state sovereignty by action of the U.S. Supreme Court."

He said Negroes should be asked to cooperate in his program "in a realistic adjustment to immutable facts of life despite the innovation of an artificial judicial fiat."

Ervin's 'last resort' remedy of abolition of the schools on a local referendum basis is sure to draw opposition from school officials. He argued that such a move has been successful in converting golf courses, parks, beaches and recreational areas to private operation and "even some bus routes have been abondoned under the aggravation of boycotts."

He said his suggestions constitute a "positive approach" to halt a deterioration of race relations "with each new crisis fraught with racial and community disturbance."

DELRAY BEACH—A mile-long section of private beach, five miles north of here, will be posted against Negro bathers today.

The move was made by owner Phil Phillips, Ocean Ridge, after some 90 Negroes swam in the secluded area most of Wednesday.

Phillips, owner of a sea food restaurant on State Rd. A1A, said that Negroes had been using the beach without permission on weekends for some time.

He said he didn't blame them for swimming in the remote area. "They've got to have some place to swim now they've been kicked out of Delray Beach."

But he said the area was to be posted, "because it's come to the point that I can't even get on my own beach."

He said that bathers have been orderly and that he believed they would respect the signs. The area is off little used Ocean Blvd., near Ocean Ridge.

North of Phillips' beach, is a 150-foot section bought by the city of Delray Beach for use by Negroes, but which Negro leaders say is unacceptable.

Newsmen were invited to the meeting to adopt the law. City Manager William Lawson read the law and the four commissioners voted on it. Mrs. Catherine Strong, a commissioner and a former mayor, was not at the meeting.

Segregation Snags Legislative Recess

Herald P.4-D
Miami, Fla.

By JOHN McDERMOTT
Herald Staff Writer

TALLAHASSEE — Segregation proved to be the fly in the Legislature's ointment Wednesday.

The House and Senate battled all day over technicalities of a long-term recess.

This was highlighted by a late afternoon secret session of the Senate which stayed behind closed doors, with the press and public barred, for more than 40 minutes.

Herald 6-7-56

The final outcome was adjournment until 9 a.m. today, when legislators will resume arguing the question of recessing.

Segregation, which has nothing to do with the current extraordinary session on reapportionment, got into the picture through the back door.

A stubborn House refused to go along with a Senate plan to recess until November unless given assurance by the State Supreme Court that another special session legally could be called during the recess of the present one.

Lawmakers are insistent that the governor call a special session in July to deal with the problem of preserving segregation in public schools despite a U. S. Supreme Court ruling outlawing it.

Appropriating funds to fight the Mediterranean fruit fly invasion also is expected to come up in a special session.

Gov. LeRoy Collins, who has been almost as stubborn as the legislators in evading asking the high court for an advisory opinion, assured a House committee by telephone from Miami that he is certain he has the power to call a special session during the recess of another session.

The governor said he "will accept full and complete responsibility" for such a special session. He urged the House to recede from its demand that the court give an opinion.

But the House refused to back down and reiterated its request for a high court advisory opinion.

Eighty-one members of the 95-member House signed a petition requesting that the governor call a special session for July 17 to deal with segregation.

Also during the day the appointment of Rep. W. C. (Cliff) Herrell, of Miami Springs to the important Legislative Council was announced. He succeeds Rep. George Okell, of Miami, who resigned. Okell will not be returning to the 1957 regular session.

House members were openly fearful that some technicality might develop through recessing the reapportionment session until November which would make it impossible to call the segregation session.

A majority of legislators feel that Florida must line up all possible legal moves to prevent the mixing of the races in schools.

A governor's committee studying this crisis is due to report its recommendations in early July.

The Senate's proposal to recess until November would have carried the reapportionment question over to the new legislature which takes office that month after the general election.

Some large county representatives privately express surprise that Gov. Collins had failed to play a forceful role in this week's three-day reapportionment meeting.

Observers felt, however, that even if Collins had wielded the "Big stick" which as chief executive he could, it would have been a futile gesture.

The Senate's small county majority bloc was so firmly entrenched that its members would not have budged under any circumstances.

Boycott leader's draft status is up to Appeal Board

GRAY WAS long in category 4-D with a ministerial deferment. An issue was made of this registration at the time he was leading Negro efforts to overturn Montgomery bus segregation laws, efforts that ended June 5 in a federal court finding that the laws are unconstitutional.

WEST PALM BEACH — Authorities Saturday night were searching the watershed area west of here for a gang of white youths in swamp buggies who wounded a Mexican, a Puerto Rican and one or more Negro teenagers with shotgun blasts. What was behind the trouble was not clear, but it seemed to stem from racial conflict.

First reports to the sheriff's office indicated that the youths in the swamp buggies first started shooting when they came on the Mexican and his wife and the Puerto Rican and his girl friend who were bathing in Lake Mangonia.

One of the possemen who returned from the area later Saturday night said one of the Negro youths then opened fire on the white youths in the swamp buggies.

The Mexican, taken to Pine Ridge Hospital here and not immediately identified, was struck in the face and neck with shotgun pellets. The Negro youths, reportedly standing nearby, were less seriously injured by the shotgun fire.

A helicopter was summoned from Palm Beach Air Force base in an effort to locate the swamp buggies, which escaped into the brush when police appeared.

Tallahassee Firms Now Facing Boycott

TALLAHASSEE, Fla. — (INS) Negro civic leaders, who have won their boycott of Tallahassee city buses, indicated Monday they may now stop trading with local merchants because of alleged police intimidation.

The Rev. C. K. Steele, leader of the boycott which began May 29 with the arrest of two Florida A. and M. coeds for refusing to sit in the back of a segregated bus and ended Saturday wth suspension of operations by the bus company, declared:

* * *

"I AM BEGINNING to think our city policemen are trying to run us out of town."

Rev. Mr. Steele, president of the Negro Inter-Civic Council, told a mass meeting of more than 500 persons that Negroes are being arrested "for the slightest traffic violation" and are subjected to a "third degree" at police headquarters.

* * *

STEELE SAID that if the police action did not end it might become necessary to "spend what little money we have in other nearby cities." The Negro leader said many Negroes are being arrested while operating car pools. He said that when police "can't find grounds to arrest us they just holler at us and tell us to move on."

Meanwhile, this city of 48,000 people was without bus service. Car pools were being hastily set up and a meeting of the City Commission was scheduled for Monday to discuss ways of providing emergency transportation for white.

The Negroes are planning to operate their own bus if they are allowed to do so under law. The bus is an old vehicle similar to school buses. The group is also calling for more station wagons to provide transportation for the town's estimated 14,000 Negroes.

MAYOR FRED S. Winterle said he had no idea when the city would again have bus service. But he added that "Negroes will never get a franchise to operate a line while I'm on the City Commission."

Five of the city transit company's buses were shipped to Cuba after being sold to a bus company in that country.

Negroes had made up 70 per cent of the passenger load on Tallahassee buses and accounted for 60 per cent of the bus line's revenue. Their leaders have refused a bus company offer which would place Negro drivers on predominately Negro runs and allow free seating on the bus except for three seats in the front which would be reserved for whites.

Meet with Dixie leaders suggested—

Florida asks Ike to take hand in integration issue

News, P. 17
Thurs. 3-22-56

TALLAHASSEE, Fla., March 22—(AP)—A Florida segregation conference took a cue from President Eisenhower's appeal for moderation in the school integration issue and asked him to call a meeting of Southern governors on the problem.

Miami, Fla.

The Florida group, composed of state government leaders and educators proposed the Eisenhower meeting yesterday as one avenue of procedure in trying to head off immediate integration at the state universities.

Gov. Leroy Collins, who suggested that the president get together with Dixie's governors, said it would be a good chance to let him know "of the great concern we in the South have about any efforts to coerce integration."

Collins also recommended that Atty. Gen. Brownell and the attorney general of the Southern states sit in on the meeting.

THE GOVERNOR said he was greatly concerned over "a dangerous deterioration in our racial relations generally" which he said he had noted in recent weeks since the start of the current governorship campaign in which Collins is seeking reelection.

He read to the conference a news dispatch reporting that President Eisenhower had urged the nation not to regard the school integration issue as one which could separate Americans and create a nasty mess.

Florida's approach to the integration problem has been made one of the major issues in the governorship campaign.

Collins said that up to now Florida's strategy in dealing with the U. S. Supreme Court decision banning segregation in the schools has been "to resist its implementation in Florida by every lawful and peaceful means at our command, but at the same time to avoid emotional furor and the disorders which commonly result from the agitation of racial antagonism."

Collins has been charged by one of his opponents of "pussyfooting" on segregation and with being an integrationist.

COLLINS PLEDGED himself conditionally to call a special session of the Legislature if necessary to preserve segregation. But he said he wanted to be assured in advance the proposed legislation would be legal and effective and that the session would not be unduly prolonged.

The governor said a special session wouldn't be called until after the May primaries.

Yesterday's conference was called by the state cabinet to find a way of blocking by constitutional methods the entry of a Negro to the University of Florida law school.

The conference was arranged after a recent decision of the U. S. Supreme Court directing that Virgil Hawkins, 48-year-old Daytona Beach Negro, be admitted without delay to the law school.

Negro assistant state attorney is suspended

TALLAHASSEE, Fla., March 22—(AP)—Florida's only Negro assistant state attorney has been suspended for making "false and untrue statements" in a radio broadcast during which he allegedly said the Dade County State Attorney's Office was completely integrated.

Gov. Leroy Collins issued the ssupension order against Henry H. Arrington whom he said "made public statements in derogation of and repugnant to the duties imposed upon him as assistant state attorney."

The governor said the "false and untrue statements have undermined and detracted from the efficiency of the said office of State Attorney and thereby have resulted in impairment to law enforcement."

Arrington allegedly said the State Attorney's Office was integrated, that white secretaries had been told they could pick up their checks" if they objected to taking dictation from him and that he was subject to assignment to cases involving white persons as well as Negroes.

Dade County State Atty. George Brautigam said the statements attributed to Arrington were untrue.

Race issue no problem in air base schools

TAMPA, Fla., March 22—(AP)—Integration is not one of the problems of federally operated schools which were established at Southern Air Force bases largely because of the segregation issue.

The issue wasn't even mentioned at the first day of a conference here on problems affecting the schools. Meeting here with Air Force officials are school principals and representatives of parent-teacher groups.

One of the main things bothering the school leaders is the difficulty in confirming salaries for next year's teachers because federal appropriations are not approved until July 1.

DELEGATES ATTENDING the conference are here from MacDill Air Force Base, Tampa; Langley (Va.) AFB; Craig (Ala.) AFB; Maxwell AFB at Montgomery, Ala.; Eglin (Fla.) AFB; Tyndal AFB at Panama City; Patrick AFB at Cocoa, and Ramey AFB at Puerto Rico.

LAKE CHARLES, La., March 22—(AP)—An NAACP official denies 53 of the organization's leaders are Communists.

Field Secretary Clarence Laws told the NAACP's Lake Charles chapter last night that the charges by Atty. Gen. Eugene Cook of Georgia were "emotionally irresponsible and fantastic."

Cook told a Citizens Council meeting in New Orleans Tuesday night that 53 officials of the National Assn. for the Advancement of Colored People were listed in House un-American activities committee files as Communist sympathizers.

Laws said the NAACP has had the cooperation of every president since it was formed in 1909.

He also said a suit to ban the NAACP in Louisiana was filed to embarrass the group, but had brought almost a dozen contributions or life memberships from a dozen organizations. The suit is pending in a District Court at Baton Rouge.

Estes Says South Will Accept His Stand Against Segregation

Tall Tennessean Tells Floridians He Expects to Abide by Decision

By CHARLES HESSER

MIAMI, Fla., April 7—Estes Kefauver, who had been accused of taking a stand in midair on segregation, landed when he came to Florida. He made his strongest statement to date on the controversial issue during his three-day tour of the state this week.

The Tennessee senator, questioned about the United States Supreme Court's decision banning segregation, unqualifiedly declared: "I expect to abide by it." Kefauver had been asked about a statement his opponent in Florida's May 29 presidential primary — Adlai Stevenson—had made.

Stevenson had said he didn't "Remember that Sen. Kefauver has ever made a clear-cut statement on segregation."

Questioned Closely

Kefauver was questioned closely on the boiling issue throughout his campaign swing of Florida.

The Democratic presidential aspirant, in effect, said it wasn't true what they say about Dixie—that the South will accept him, and that those who say otherwise are "spreading political propaganda."

"I frequently hear that I am not acceptable to the South," said Kefauver. "I may lose a few votes here and there (on his segregation stand), but in the long run I think I can win. I have said what I believe on the segregation issue and that is all I can do."

Kefauver recalled that when the U.S. Supreme Court issued its integration decree he called it the law of the land.

"What I said then I say now, and what I say now I say wherever I am—in Florida or California, in Minnesota or Alabama. I simply cannot and would not attempt to mislead.

FLORIDA

"Speaking as a Southerner to Southerners, I say that there is no other answer to this problem. We simply must remain a united nation.

"The Supreme Court itself recognized that this is not an easy problem with which to deal. Under the decision the local federal district judges act as referees. It is a decision which will be worked out in thousands of school districts throughout the United States by men and women of good will of both races.

"As the President, sworn to uphold the Constitution, I certainly would do all within my power to assist these men and women in their solution to this very difficult problem. I trust that having said this we can now turn to other issues which are more meaningful actually to the future history of the South."

During Kefauver's Florida drive, Sen. John Sparkman (D-Ala) took the occasion to predict from Washington that Stevenson will win a majority of this state's 28 convention votes. Sparkman, the vice presidential nominee who ran with Stevenson in 1952, is backing the former Illinois governor for the party presidential nomination.

Sparkman said he believes Stevenson "will get a lot of convention votes" from the South because of his segregation stand, and added:

"I think Stevenson will win the majority of the Florida delegates, but I imagine that Sen. Kefauver will get some, too."

Kefauver won five of Florida's 24 delegate votes in 1952 when he opposed Sen. Richard Russell, of Georgia, favorite son of the South.

The Tennessean spoke of many things other than segregation during his three-day stand.

In the rich cattle and citrus belt, he told ranchers he thought they needed federal supports on livestock and perishables, including citrus fruits, to help the small farmer.

"I think that livestock and perishables must be supported and the only way I know how to do it is through production payments," Kefauver said. His farm price support program is based on a sliding scale of parity payments which would benefit chiefly the small farmers.

What his state managers apparently neglected to tell Kefauver was the fact that a majority of Florida growers and cattlemen in the past have frowned upon government controls.

At Miami Beach, largely populated by the people of Jewish faith, Kefauver called for a top level conference among the Arab and Israeli leaders, the United States, Britain and France in an effort to find a peaceful solution to the Middle East crisis.

Repeats Demand

Kefauver repeated an earlier demand that the United States and other Western powers sell arms to Israel to restore the military balance, destroyed, he said, when Communist Czechoslovakia shipped arms to Egypt.

The crowds Kefauver drew to rallies were satisfying to his backers. More than 3,500 attended an evening gathering at the small Florida inland college town of De Land. Almost that many attended meetings at Miami Beach and West Palm Beach.

KEFAUVER PUSHES INTEGRATION PLEA

In Florida Speech, He Asks a 'Grass Roots Dialogue' to Solve the Problem

Wed. 4-4-56

By JOHN N. POPHAM

Special to The New York Times.

WEST PALM BEACH, Fla., April 3—Senator Estes Kefauver called on leaders of both races in the South tonight to start on a "grass-roots dialogue" looking to the solution of the integration problem.

New York

He warned against waiting for implementation policies or the pubulic school issue. He said a wait for policies "to be imposed from the top" would lead to "another" policy of drift, which constantly gets us into trouble, like the policy of drift has done to our foreign relations."

"I think that with peace and spiritual strength we of the South are anxoius to seek sensible solutions, free from harsh emotions," the Tennessee Democrat declared.

"Furthermore," he continued, "I believe that the hard-working, God-fearing people in this twentieth century Southland are anxious to continue the progress that has been everywhere evident in a land that was once laid prostrate by division."

Kefauver Speakes in Park

He spoke to a crowd in Flagler Park in this resort city on Florida's famous Gold Coast. The speech was the highlight of the second day of his four-day stumping campaign. He is seekink to win the support of this state's twenty-eight votes in the Democratic Presidential nominating convention.

The Tennessean took a bold tack in a speech last night in Orlando by urging his native southland to accept the principal of public school desegregation as the law of the land. He bore down even harder on the subject today with his recommendation that fellow southerners 'get together on democratic negotiations."

He again urged the south to recognize that "we would have chaos" if there was not a Supreme Court to render final and authoritative interpretation. On May 17, 1954, the Supreme Court outlawed racial segregation in the public schools.

Senator Kefauver's campaign aides said that his office in Washington had received many "favorable responses" to his Orlando speech from other sections of the country. They also said that before the Senator had left Orlando this morning he had been assured by several local supporters that his views on the race relations problem were "understandable and acceptable to many."

In his speech here, Senator Kefauver said he had decided to speak out asecond time on the school segregation issue and in more detail "to show some critics that I say the same thing wherever I go and do not say different things in different sections."

This was an obvious reference to criticisms reportedly voiced by supporters of Adlai E. Stevenson, former Governor of Illinois, with whom Mr. Kefauver is contesting for the Democratic Presidential nomination. Their conflicting bids will go before the voters in Florida's Presidential primary, on May 29.

Foreign Policy Assailed

Senator Kefauver also attacked today the foreign policy program of the Eisenhower Administration.

He reiterated rectn charges that "this country has suffered some disturbing setbacks in foreign policy" because of the "ineptness" of the Administration in meeting the "Soviet Union's policy of using economic aid to pose as the champions of decreasing world tension."

He charged that the Administration's handling of the "summit conferences" at Geneva had been "so inept" that it had accelerated Communist successes throughout the world.

"The things of which I am critical," Senator Kefauver said, "are not so much the foreign policy of the Administration but the administration of our policy."

He urged that this country send its food surpluses to "hungry populations" in the Far East and "relax many of the trade restrictions that make commerce between the nations of the world so difficult."

During the day Senator Kefauver spoke to some 300 persons at a civic clubs luncheon in Fort Pierce. He also addressed an overflow crowd of about 1,500 at a reception given by the Business and Professional Women's Club in the Civic Center Building in Lake Worth, which adjoins West Palm Beach.

Hear Me on Race Issue, Prevent Trouble -- Collins

Herald Fri. 4-6-56 P. 10-C

Miami, Fla.

WASHINGTON — (AP) — Gov. LeRoy Collins of Florida Thursday asked for permission to appear before the Supreme Court to plead for reconsideration of the court's decision that state universities must admit Negroes to their graduate schools without delay.

A petition filed with the high tribunal said that the governor and Atty. Gen. Richard W. Ervin of Florida wished to appear because they want to "avert, if possible, a disruption in public affairs of statewide and even national importance."

The governor's petition said he and Ervin were prepared to present facts that indicate a strong probability of "a serious disruption" at the University of Florida if Virgil D. Hawkins, a Negro, were admitted at once to the law school of the all-white university.

The Supreme Court, in an order March 12, set aside a Florida Supreme Court ruling that Negroes could not be admitted to the law school until a study was made of "grave and serious problems" involved.

The Supreme Court's order said "there is no reason for delay" in admitting Hawkins.

Pleading for reconsideration of this order, the governor's petition said:

"It is respectfully submitted and with all due deference, that this court did not act in a moderate manner."

The petition added that the Supreme Court's action "interrupted the calm, careful, moderate and equitable approach of the Florida Supreme Court in its study of this problem."

Mentioned was the survey being made of the attitude of the students and their parents.

He said that if evidence obtained in the study were ignored, "the public safety in Florida will be endangered and the administration and operation of institutions of higher learning in Florida will be disrupted."

The petition protested that the Supreme Court's statement that "there is no reason for delay" in the Hawkins' case was an error.

"Candidly," the petition asserted, "the statement is unsupported by any evidence before the court in this or any other case under its jurisdiction.

"This court has reached a premature legal conclusion as to matters of fact, since no facts have been considered by this court and the court has denied Florida an opportunity to present evidence."

FLORIDA PROBLEM

Gov. Collins Promises To Call Legislature On Racial Matter

Herald P. 1-C

Montgomery, Ala.

Thurs. 3-22-56

TALLASSEE, Fla., March 21 (AP) — Gov. Leroy Collins announced conditionally today he would call a special session of the Florida Legislature, if necessary to preserve segregation.

Collins told a conference of government leaders and educators that he wanted to be assured in advance that the proposed legislation would be legal and effective and that legislators would pledge themselves that the session would not be unduly prolonged.

The conference, called by the State Cabinet to find a way of blocking racial integration in the state's universities, authorized Collins and Atty. Gen. Richard Ervin to appoint a commission of judges and attorneys to work out a proposal designed to prevent integration legally in classrooms.

At Collins' suggestion, the conference voted unanimously to request President Eisenhower and Atty. Gen. Brownell to call an immediate conference of Southern governors and attorneys general to discuss the South's critical situation brought about by the integration problem.

Collins said at such a conference the Southern governors could inform the President and attorney general directly "of the great concern we in the South have about any efforts to coerce integration."

The governor said he would get off wires to Washington in the next day or two.

Today's conference stemmed from a recent decision of the U.S. Supreme Court directing that Virgil Hawkins, 49-year-old Negro, be admitted without delay to the University of Florida Law School.

The conference recommended that Collins appear before the U.S. Supreme Court in person if the high court grants a petition for a rehearing in the Hawkins case, and that the State Board of Education adopt regulations setting up added qualifications for admissions to state universities.

Ervin recommended that a special session of the Legislature be called in June or July.

Collins Wants To Plead Bias To High Court

Herald 4-14-56

WASHINGTON — (INS) — Gov. Leroy Collins of Florida told the Supreme Court Friday he wants to appear before it personally and argue against its order for the immediate admission of a Negro to his state's graduate law school.

The governor said he desires to "avert, if possible, a disruption in public affairs of statewide and even national importance." His request was transmitted to the court by Florida Attorney General Richard Ervin.

Ervin formally asked the court for a rehearing on its decision of March 12 ordering the University of Florida law school to admit 48-year-old Virgil Hawkins at once.

The court said its call for "gradual" integration of public schools did not extend to graduate schools.

In his request for a rehearing, the state attorney general complained that the high court "did not act in a moderate manner." He requested "the same latitude" in dealing with segregation on the graduate school level as he is permitted in the case of grade and high schools.

Collins Weighs Sessions On Segregation, Judges

Miami, Fla.

Herald 5-10-56

By JOHN B. McDERMOTT
Herald Political Writer

Gov. LeRoy Collins took under consideration Wednesday proposals for special legislative sessions on segregation and on a Dade County Grand Jury's recommendation that two Circuit judges be impeached.

It may be a week or longer before anything develops on either of these issues.

The governor, jubilant over his landslide victory in Tuesday's Democratic primary election, left Tallahassee for his seaside cottage on the Gulf, where he will rest for five days.

Nearly complete returns indicated that several prominent Old Guard politicians around the state, with a few notable exceptions, took a pasting in the voting.

No race, of course, could come close to capturing the imagination of the public as did the Collins' first primary sweep. And much of that resulted from his almost unbelievable 110,286 votes in Dade County alone.

The Collins statewide majority over the other five combined was something over 40,000 votes, with most precincts counted.

On the Dade County front, one legislative race, three County Commission seats, a Small Claims judgeship pitting Judge Sidney Segall against challenger Tom Youngblood, a Miami Beach constable contest and a Southwest-Coral Gables constable race will have to be run off in the May 29 second Democratic primary.

Veteran Rep. Bernie Papy of Key West, now in his 22nd year in the House of Representatives, won as usual despite biennial opposition claims that "this is the year."

Sen. Verle Pope of St. Augustine faces a runoff but Sen. Douglas Stenstrom of Sanford won handily. Both are strong backers of Gov. LeRoy Collins.

The biggest setbacks for the Old Guard were sustained by the defeats of Fuller Warren in the governor's race — he was a surprisingly poor fourth; Sen. Ed Baker being upset in Lake County by Rep. Tar Boyd; another Collins backer; and the defeat of Harry King; president-designate of the Senate from Winter Haven.

King, under indictment for perjury in a $10,000 bribe payoff case which also involved Rep. Boone Tillett, was swamped by the 28-year-old Scott Kelly, former mayor of Lakeland. Tillett, also in the Senate race, took an even worse beating.

Collins was jubilant over the support given him. At a press conference in Tallahassee he renewed his pledge that he would try to get the legislature to pass a "fair" reapportionment bill.

He also promised Florida four more years of progress "to build a state of which we can be even more proud."

The governor faces Republican opposition in November, but political observers see that as little more than a formality.

There is a strong possibility that the governor will call the legislature into special session on the question of maintaining segregation. He is committed to a firm policy of preserving segregation "by peaceful and lawful means."

Herald

Segregation was the only paramount issue in the campaign. All the major candidates were for it.

Miami, Fla.

Here is what some of the gubernatorial candidates had to say after the vote was in:

COLLINS — It snowed . . . "A reaffirmation of our people's determination to continue on the sound and stable progressive course we have steadfastly pursued for the past 16 months . . . I do not regard the results as a personal triumph for LeRoy Collins. Rather, it is a triumph of the case in which we have labored."

T. 2. H

LOWRY — "We lost the campaign for governor, but I am sure we have accomplished more in the long-range struggle to preserve the Constitutional liberties of the American people."

C. FARRIS BRYANT — In congratulating Collins, Bryant said he looked forward "to cooperating with you in the legislature during the remainder of my term."

FULLER WARREN — "I feel the people have the right to elect anyone they want to any office and I hope they always will have the right."

Sen. George Smathers won another six-year term in Washington without making a serious campaign effort. Reps. James Haley of Sarasota and Billy Matthews of Gainesville were renominated.

Herald 5-10-56

Justices Stephen O'Connell of Fort Lauderdale and Frank Hobson of St. Petersburg were returned to their judicial posts.

Major runoffs in Dade county include:

LEGISLATIVE, Group 1 — George Hollahan, with 49,595, against Harvie DuVal, 38,593. Johnson E. Davis, third-place winner, is expected to support Hollahan. Davis polled 17,419.

COUNTY COMMISSION, Group 1 — Commissioner Jess Yarborough, 42,941, facing an uphill fight against Faris N. Cowart, 43,045. Troy Haigler, who ran fourth with 11,263, announced that he will be urging his supporters to vote for Cowart in the runoff. Robert Rainey, third-place candidate with 20,333, has not made his position known.

Group 3 is a runoff between Commissioner I. D. MacVicar, 41,245, and John McLeod, 43,517. John Cicero, who took third with 28,295, has not indicated a preference in the runoff.

Group 4 pits Ralph Fossey, South Miami realtor with 41,655 votes, against Stacy Rowell, automobile dealer who polled 31,241 in a field of six.

The sweeping victory of former Circuit Judge Joe Eaton over veteran Rep. George Okell for the state Senate was indicative of the "throw-'em-out" sentiment which ran rampant in Dade County and was brought out in the County Commission races.

SEGREGATION BIG ISSUE IN FLORIDA

Times-Picayune

800,000 Democrats Expected to Vote Tuesday

Sun. 5-6-56

By HENDRIX CHANDLER

MIAMI, Fla., May 5 (AP)—A Florida governorship race heated by segregation talk and personality clashes winds up at the polls Tuesday in the Democratic primary election.

New Orleans

An estimated 800,000 Democrats are expected to turnout for the election, in which the battle for governor has completely overshadowed a senatorial contest, four other statewide races and three congressional tilts.

P. 23

Republicans hold a primary the same day but no statewide offices are being contested and a turnout of about 140,000 is expected. Major attractions on the GOP side are two congressional races in south Florida.

The governorship contest is a six-man affair in which incumbent Leroy Collins, 47, is in the rare role of seeking re-election.

Colorful Rivalry

Florida's constitution prohibits a governor from seeking re-election to succeed himself, but the State Supreme Court ruled that the prohibition didn't apply to a part-term governor such as Collins. Collins was elected two years ago to serve out the remainder of the four-year term of Gov. Dan McCarty, who died in office.

This year's race had been heralded as a titanic struggle between Collins, Tallahassee attorney and a tireless salesman of Florida attractions; and silver-haired Fuller Warren, colorful and controversial former governor.

It has turned into a hot four-cornered fight in which former House Speaker Farris Bryant, 41-year-old Ocala attorney, and 63-year-old Sumter L. Lowry of Tampa, also have become major contenders.

Supplies Fireworks

Lowry, plain spoken retired National Guard commander and insurance company head, has supplied some of the campaign's major fireworks by his biting attacks upon his major opponents and on the U. S. Supreme Court.

The two other candidates, Peasley Streets, Lake Park constable; and W. B. Price, Jacksonvile used car salesman, have done comparatively little campaigning.

All of the candidates except Streets have pledged their efforts to preserve segregation, but have differed in their approach.

Streets, who concedes that he has little chance for election, has come out for integration.

Lowry, making his first campaign for public office, has hammered away at the segregation theme, contending it was the only issue.

Attacks Supreme Court

In speech after speech, Lowry has charged that the U. S. Supreme Court acted without any basis in law when it ruled out segregation in the nation's public schools. He has urged that the Florida Legislature be called into special session to adopt an interposition resolution.

Collins and Warren have opposed interposition on the ground that it would be ineffective legally in the fight to preserve segregation, although it might serve as a protest.

The governor said he favored Florida opposing integration "by every lawful and peaceful means" but without emotional furore and disorders which he said would serve to tear down racial relations.

Collins has said Florida was one of three Southern states in which there had been no integration and there would be none. But his opponents repeatedly fired charges that he was "pussyfooting" on the issue.

AME Delegates In 31 Hotels On Miami Beach

Sat. 5-12-56 P. 2

Pittsburgh, Pa.

By AL DUNMORE

MIAMI—Tensions brought on by a gubernatorial campaign which had reached fever heat over the issue of segregation marred the reception of some 15,000 delegates and visitors to the 35th General Conference of the African Methodist Church here at Dinner Key Auditorium.

While some 31 Miami Beach hotels and a number of restaurants and luncheonettes welcomed the delegates and displayed signs indicating their welcome, Sumpter Lowrie, a candidate for Florida Governor, lashed out against the "invasion of Florida's wonderful resort city by Negroes" on a 15-minute television program on Thursday night.

Lowrie had films taken of the visiting delegates frequenting the white hotels, being served by white waitresses and having white bellmen carry their bags.

"Florida sas spent millions of dollars to attract tourists," Lowrie told the audience, "but not this kind of tourist. Negroes were made to wait on white people and here we see white people waiting on Negroes."

Lowrie charged that Governor Collins could have prevented this type of "integration" if he desired.

When questioned by State Hotel Commissioner Richard Edgerton on the matter, Atty. Gen. Richard Ervin said there is no Florida law under which hotels can be forbidden to accommodate Negro guests.

Gov. LeRoy Collins, who found it impossible to deliver an address of welcome to the conference, attempted to explain his position by telling a group of Lions in Allapattah, a section of Miami, that "I was shocked personally by that situation. It was not of my making. As Governor, there was nothing I could do legally to prevent it."

Lowrie had charged that Collins had failed to do anything about the situation because it would "alienate the colored vote."

A check at the Blackstone Hotel, headquarters for the brotherhood of the AME Church, revealed that following the broadcast a number of insulting phone calls had flooded the switchboard, but there had been no overt action to show disfavor to the delegates.

On the opening days of the convention, representatives from various beach spots were on hand at Greater Bethel AME Church, where incomers were assigned to homes and hotels, urging that the delegates register in the hotel. One hotel owner's daughter was on hand to greet the guests, informed the delegates that even if they did not register in the hotel, eating facilities of the hotel were open to them.

Collins to Sit Out Adlai-Estes Fight

Herald Miami, Fla.

Thurs 5-10-56

TALLAHASSEE — (UP) — Gov. LeRoy Collins said Wednesday that he will take no active part in the Kefauver-Stevenson campaign for Florida's 28 presidential delegate votes May 29.

"I've had enough campaigning," Collins said. "I said during my campaign that I would keep hands off in this presidential preferential primary and the fact that my own nomination is settled will make no difference in this policy."

P. 1

Collins must make a token campaign between now and the November general election against former Rep. W. A. Washburne, Republican nominee for governor, but nomination in the Democratic primary is tantamount to election in Florida.

Wearing sports attire and dark circles under his eyes, Collins relaxed with newsmen at "The Grove" and discussed reapportionment, segregation and the planned Howard Hughes aircraft factory—all issues in his campaign. While 5-year-old Darby, the youngest Collins daughter, bounced around with her dolls, the governor's pretty wife, Mary Call, hovered in the background taking care of flowers and hundreds of congratulatory wires that poured in from around the state and nation.

"I am just as determined as ever," Collins said, "that we shall maintain segregation and we will fight to do this by lawful and peaceful means. We are not going to have furor, hate or disorder over the issue."

Collins said one of his first acts after returning from a four-day rest at his beach cottage 40 miles from here will be to confer with legislative leaders on both sides of the reapportionment battle which resumes here June 4.

He said he hasn't analyzed returns from legislative races sufficiently to make a specific statement as to what he might expect in the way of a change of attitude in the Senate over major reshuffle of senatorial districts.

Collins added he hasn't changed his opposition to the proposed constitutional amendment to give every county a senator which will be on the November ballot. He didn't say how vigorously he would campaign against its adoption.

Asked about the proposed Hughes aircraft factory which one campaign opponent called a "political hoax," Collins said he still doesn't know its specific location in Florida "but I know Mr. Hughes' plans are progressing satisfactorily and I am personally confident he will do just exactly what he says."

Town in Florida Bars Negroes From Beach

Evening Star Wash. D.C. Thurs. 5-24-56

Washington D.C. P. 2-A

DELRAY BEACH, Fla., May 24 (AP).—The Delray Beach City Commission adopted an ordinance yesterday to prohibit Negroes from using the municipal swimming pool or the municipal beach.

The commission called its action an "emergency ordinance to prevent interracial riots within the city."

"Racial tension has increased in this community to the point that the life of one commissioner has been threatened," the commissioners said.

W. J. Snow was identified by City Clerk R. D. Wirthing as the city commissioner threatened.

Police said the threat—mentioned in a preamble to the new ordinance—was made by telephone. Mr. Snow, asked about it by newsmen, would say nothing.

The new ordinance was adopted without discussion in a public session. It came eight days after the dismissal of a suit in Federal Court at Miami in which nine Negroes sought use of the facilities.

The city previously has had no law to prevent the "intermingling of the Negro and white races," the commission noted. This was the basis for dismissing the suit brought in the Federal Court before Judge Emett Choate May 10.

Representatives of the city told the judge then that "the public beaches always have been open to all people regardless of color."

Little tension had been noted in this South Florida town of some 8,500 persons—including about 2,000 Negroes—before the suit was brought. Four Negro men sunbathed on one section of the beach two days after the decision without incident.

But a group of about 70 Negroes went to the beach last Sunday and met a group of whites of about equal size. They argued several minutes before policemen dispersed them. There was no violence and no arrests were made.

Penalty for violating the law was set at up to $500 fine and up to 90 days in jail.

Court Dismisses Integration Suit

RALEIGH, N. C., May 24 (AP).—In the first test of North Carolina's new school pupil assignment act, the State Supreme Court yesterday dismissed a McDowell County case aimed at integration of students in the Old Fort School.

The appeal was brought by four Negroes who sought to have their children and other Negro children admitted to the white school at Old Fort. They plan to take the case to Federal Court.

The Supreme Court opinion, written by Associate Justice Emory B. Denny, said the proceeding was brought "pursuant to the provisions of our school enrollment statutes." He added "it is not based on an application for assignment relating to named individuals as contemplated by the enrollment statutes."

The court said in effect that the Negroes should have brought individual suits on behalf of the children instead of collectively.

The 1955 Legislature adopted a law empowering local school boards to assign school pupils. This duty previously had been a State matter.

White Professor Attending State Meet Quizzed by Police

Pittsburgh, Pa.

By ALBERT J. DUNMORE

PENSACOLA, Fla.—Without any apparent reason, a white professor from Bethune-Cookman College, was taken into custody and quizzed by local police officials. He was attending the Florida State Teachers Association meeting when approached by the officers.

Dr. J. H. G. Monane, social studies professor at the Daytona Beach college, was hustled away from the meeting while talking to this reporter. He was later released but advised to "stay away" from the Municipal Auditorium where the meeting was held.

Earlier in the evening extra police were stationed around the auditorium after police and city officials had received threatening phone calls concerning the meeting of the Negro state teachers' organization.

The manager of the auditorium told this reporter that one call had come to him, during which he was asked, "When will the largest number of Negroes be in the auditorium? We want to know so we can drop something in on them."

Four police officers came in and asked Monane to step outside. They hustled him into a waiting police car. A second car filled with plainclothes officers drove off behind the first car.

FUND FOR THE REPUBLIC

Desegregation In North Is Subject Of New Study

World Fri. 5-11-56
Birm. Ala.

NEW YORK—(ANP) —A survey which seeks to establish the number of instances of de-segregation in the North during the last two years and the kinds of institutions or organizations involved, is now being made under a grant from the fund for the Republic, it was announced this week.

The organizer of the survey is David Loth, an author and information executive who served for 17 years on the staff of the New York World and The New York Times. He has been information director for several government and non-profit agents.

SIMILAR SURVEY

He described his project as an "inventory" listing all instances of racial integration in the North which he and his staff of researchers can gather. He added that it is designed to a complement a similar survey which the Southern Regional Council of Atlanta is making of the 17 Southern and Border States.

"We do not propose to comment upon or explain the examples of integration we will list," Loth said. We will include those which came about through voluntary action or court order or the work of pressure groups or even simple shifts in the population of an area. We know we cannot cite every single instance in 31 States, but we do expect to have a representative and comprehensive list of places and groups where Negroes and whites were segregated two years ago but now meet or learn or work or play or worship together.

ALL KINDS

"Our list includes integration in education on all levels, public and private employment, housing, recreation facilities, transportation and accomodations ,religious, health, facilities, official bodies such as juries or school boards and organizations of all kinds -- voluntary agencies and clubs, service groups and professional societies, civic organizations and labor unions.

"A great deal of our material is being collected by our research staff here and in Washington from the files of organizations and publications More is being provided in response to letters we sent to state and local antidiscrimination commissions, church and service organizations, unions and individuals with experience in race relations.

HUNT FOR CASES OF INTEGRATION BEGUN IN NORTH

Daily Tribune
Chicago Ill.
F.M. 4-27-56

New York, April 26 [Special]—A survey to compile a factual inventory of racial integration in the north is under way.

It is being made by a former New York newspaper man and a staff of researchers under a grant from the Fund for the Republic. The fund, set up by the Ford Foundation but now independent of it, says its purpose is to support activities aiming at the elimination of restrictions on freedom.

The organizer of the survey is David Loth, who has also been information director for various government and non-profit agencies.

Aim at Complete List

The aim of the project is to prepare a list of all instances of desegregation in the north where Negroes and whites are separated. The list will include instances resulting from court orders, official mandates, pressure by organized groups, voluntary action, or mere accidents of population shifts.

The survey, Loth said, will match a similar study of the 17 southern and border states being made by the Southern Regional council.

"Ours is strictly a reporting job," Loth said. "We are trying to assemble the bare facts of desegregation without any comment or explanation."

Search Files for Data

Researchers are collecting data from the files of publications and national organizations here and in Washing-

In addition, letters have been sent to several hundred state and local civic and anti-discrimination groups.

"It is expeeted," Loth said, "that both studies, north and south, will be published together to provide as complete a picture as possible of just what has been happening in this highly controversial area of American life."

National attention has been focused on the south and border states, Loth noted, "but segregation is no less unjust because it is practiced in the north."

SURVEY FINDS INTEGRATION EVEN IN SOUTH

No Longer Solid Front on Segregation

[Reprinted from yesterday's late editions]

New York, Oct. 28 (AP)—The Fund for the Republic said today a two year survey of integration in north and south shows that "there is no longer a solid south of segregation."

A detailed report of the findings of the study was made public by the fund. The studies of desegregation in the north and in the southern and border states were carried out separately by David Loth and Harold Fleming, respectively, under grants from the fund.

The Fund for the Republic receives funds from the Ford Foundation, but operates independently.

Both studies dealt with incidents of desegregation in education, private and public employment, housing, transportation, religion, organizations, recreation, and other public facilities.

Find 1,100 Instances

The period covered is from May, 1954 — when the United States Supreme court ruled that segregation in schools is unconstitutional — to May, 1956.

In a foreword to his report on the 12 "solid south" states and the border states of Oklahoma, Missouri, West Virginia, Maryland, and Delaware, Fleming said:

"The common notion that 'desegregation just can't work' in the south is plainly contradicted by the findings.

"The nearly 1,100 instances of desegregation discoyered were almost evenly divided between the five 'border' states, on the one hand, and the 12 'southern' states on the other. Virtually all of them took place smoothly and harmoniously."

Fleming said the survey showed that the Supreme court decision of 1954 was "simply the most far-reaching in a long series of developments" and desegregation incidents of the last two years "were additions to a substantial list of southern precedents."

Just "Opening Wedges"

Loth, commenting on his findings, said most northern instances of integration were accomplished "without ill will or protests," but added:

"The study should not lead to complacency. Many of the instances cited are no more than opening wedges in breaking down discriminatory practices, particularly in the key fields of employment and housing."

In the field of education, Loth's report showed that four nonsouthern states which authorized segregation in schools before 1954 — Arizona, New Mexico, Kansas, and Wyoming —all had practically eliminated it during the last two years.

Fleming's study showed that more than 350 school districts in nine of the 17 southern and border states had integrated schools to some degree, while in a number of areas where schools were still segregated, school buses were carrying white and Negro children together.

He said only five states—Alabama, Florida, Georgia, Mississippi, and South Carolina — still enforce complete segregation in state supported colleges, and all of those but South Carolina had at least one private college admitting both white and Negro students.

30 Billion Dollars A Year

Afro-American Sat. 9-15

That's what racial discrimination costs the American public each and every year, according to Elmo Roper, business analyst and public opinion expert.

Baltimore Md. P.3

By JACK MOBLEY

38a

Intolerance is expensive.

Elmo Roper, nationally known analyst of business and public opinion, reached an estimate after 12 years of research that the yearly cost of discrimination to American business and industry is $30,000,000,000!

The cost of discrimination? Suppose we reimposed the racial barriers that existed in professional sports just a decade ago.

Sat. 9-15-56

What could it cost the world champion Brooklyn Dodgers? Newcombe, Campanella, Gilliam, Robinson, and Amoros, to name front-line players.

The Chicago Cubs would be barred from using Ernie Banks a man for whom they recently turned down an offer of $300,000 cash.

Willie Mays, another player whose dollar value to his team is judged in the hundreds of thousands, would be unable to play. The Chicago White Sox would lose two-thirds of their outfield.

* * *

IF DISCRIMINATION were imposed on the professional football league, a dozen of the best backs and ends would be lost and the entire league would have to be reshuffled.

Wherever discrimination exists, it is costly. A foreman, or an executive, scientist, doctor or even a good worker is not a chattel who is bought and sold and traded for a set price, as baseball players are.

The financially tiny industry of baseball found that it lost literally millions of dollars worth of manpower by practicing discrimination.

Imagine how astronomical the sum becomes when you apply the same figures to all the businesses that discriminate in employment.

Discrimination is most expensive, of course, to the member of the minority against whom the discrimination is practiced, whether he finds it in a factory hiring $1-an-hour labor or in a university which establishes religious quotas.

Some businesses hire a few colored people or members of other minority groups as a token to show they do not practice discrimination. Some set up quotas.

Some hire many members of minorities but set a ceiling above which they cannot rise.

This is about as realistic as the Baltimore Colts' hiring Buddy Young, one of the fastest ball carriers in football, and telling him he will be used for punting, and will be paid proportionately.

Companies which follow discriminatory practices in promoting workers not only lose directly by forfeiting the executive or supervisory abilities of the minority group, but they suffer in loss of production because of morale.

Discrimination scars an employee, kills his initiative, makes him resentful. It breeds ill feeling among groups of employees.

* * *

ROPER FIGURES these factors in arriving at his 30 billion figure:

— Loss of purchasing power denied min[illegible]roups by low wages.

— Loss of the contribution to society by workers who could move into high-paying vocations where there are manpower shortages, such as medicine, chemistry, engineering.

— The cost of crime, delinquency, and social maladjustment which can be traced directly to discrimination and prejudice.

— The cost of segregation which is the direct result of discriminatory practices.

* * *

THERE ARE OTHER costs, which come right out of our pockets.

The costs of government services in minority group areas of cities, such as a colored section, are 2½ times greater than in the non-minority group areas.

This figures out to between 1½ and 2 billion more in local taxes every year.

When you look over the whole problem, you find that the worst intolerance is usually, but not invariably, found where there is least contact with the minority group.

This has been proved in surveys of community groups, where the groups having no contact with Jews showed more undesirable attitudes than those which did have contact. But a psychologist who made an extensive analysis of white children's behavior toward colored people in both the North and South, concluded: "It seems that attitudes toward colored people are now chiefly determined not by contacts with colored people but by contact with the prevelant attitude toward colored people."

* * *

WHAT CAN AN individual do to combat racial and religious intolerance? Every American who sits in a grandstand and cheers for a player regardless of his skin color is helping to tear down intolerance.

We know that ignorance kept colored players out of baseball. It's safe to say that where ignorance disappears, so does intolerance.

The first step, therefore, in overcoming ignorance about people is to know people of races and religions other than one's own.

There is no better way to achieve this than to get acquainted with your fellow men. Sometimes it is easy — at the shop or office, at a club or union meeting, or in the grandstand at a ball game. Sometimes it is through a church group which takes fellowship seriously.

* * *

THERE ARE OTHER ways an individual can help.

It is important to try to eliminate prejudice at home, so that children don't grow up in an atmosphere of bigotry. Children are not born prejudiced—they have to be taught.

A man should examine himself, and determine what, if any, prejudice exists, and why.

Facts about racial problems can be learned by visiting the library, or by talking with clergymen.

Disapproval of segregation should be shown by refusal to participate in restrictive covenants.

A good citizen can help interracial organizations by letting them know about cases of discrimination in schools, hospitals, parks, or other public places.

* * *

ALL OF THE thousand things in the thousand places will come naturally after a man has discovered in his own mind that discrimination is costly and inhumane.

He may make this discovery at home or in church, at the library, while watching television —or he may find it sitting—in a grandstand shouting his head off for a colored batter on his own team to pound the ball over the fence.

Brains not limited by race, say 18

NEW YORK — Eighteen prominent social scientists from the staffs of universities and research institutions throughout the nation Tuesday issued a joint statement attacking as "scientifically unjustified" theories that the intellectual potential of colored persons is inferior to that of whites.

P. 1

The signers, most of them members of the American Psychological Association, include: Prof. Otto Klineberg, Columbia University; Prof. Theodore Newcomb, University of Michigan; Dr. Gardner Murphy, Menninger Foundation;

Also Prof. Nevitt Sanford, Vassar College; Prof. Robin Williams Jr., Cornell University; Prof. David Krech, University of California; Prof. Jerome Bruner, Harvard University;

Also Prof. Allison Davis, University of Chicago; Prof. Daniel Katz, University of Michigan; Prof. Anne Nnastasi, Fordham University; Prof. Stuart Cook, New York University; Prof. Isidor Chein, New York University; Prof. Marie Jahoda, New York University;

Also Prof. Kenneth Clark, College of the City of New York; Prof. Bingham Dai, Duke University School of Medicine; Prof. Irving Lorge Teacher's College, Columbia University; Prof. Solomon Asch, Swarthmore College; and Dr. David Rapaport, Austen Riggs Foundation.

* * *

THE JOINT statement supported its argument by citing positions taken in the past by leading scientific organizations which have "opposed the conclusion that race was a determiner of innate psychological characteristics."

After quoting excerpts from findings of these groups, the statement declared that "we know of no new research which would reverse these conclusions."

The statement criticized the position of "a few specialists" that colored/white differences in intelligence test scores persist even when the two groups are "equated" for social and educational opportunities.

Afro-American

"TO THIS we would point out that such 'equation' is exceedingly difficult to achieve, since the opportunities related to test performance are by no means easy to assess in human terms."

The statement said that intelligence quotients of Southern colored children improve markedly after a period of years in unsegregated schools available to them in New York or Philadelphia.

P. 2

The joint statement also attacked the theory that differences in the intelligence quotients persists even when 'noncultural' questions are used.

Sat. 10-20-56

"We would deny the possibility of devising a 'noncultural' test in the light of our present understanding of the problem."

* * *

"NO ONE can deny that at the present time the intellectual achievement of colored children, particularly those who are from segregated schools, is lower on the average than that of white children," the statement said, but it ascribed these differences in achievement to inferior educational opportunities "which may affect both the physical and mental development of the child."

Despite educational and environmental differences, the statement declared, there is "overlapping" between the two racial groups, which means that many colored children do better than the average white child "in spite of all of the handicaps to which the former have in the past been subjected."

"The conclusion is inescapable that any decision to use differences in the average achievement of the two racial groups as a basis for classifying in advance any individual child, colored or white, is scientifically unjustified."

Survey Shows South No Longer Stands Solid For Segregation

News + Observer Sun. 9-16-56

Raleigh N.C.

WASHINGTON, Sept. 15 (AP)—After turning up 1,100 examples of racial barriers dropped in all walks of life in Dixie over the past two years, a Southerner concludes: "There is no longer a solid South of segregation."

Reporting on a carefully documented survey of 17 Southern and border states where segregation has been the historic pattern, Harold C. Fleming said:

"The common notion that desegregation just can't work in the South is plainly contradicted by the findings."

The survey turned up examples, by specific location, of desegrgation in schools, housing, public health and welfare, private enterprise, government, public transportation and public accommodations.

Fleming, a native of Georgia and assistant director of the Southern Regional Council at Atlanta, said the survey was by no means complete and that the examples cited must be taken as merely representations.

The council is an interracial group devoted "to equal opportunity for all." Its membership is confined to Southerners.

Fleming's findings—all 1,100 of them—are to be published shortly in book form by the Fund for the Republic, which provided the money for the survey, along with a companion study on the removal of racial barriers in the 31 states outside the South.

The study, now in the hands of the printers, was made available in the aftermath of recent disturbances in the South over the admission of Negroes to public schools in Mansfield, Tex., Clinton, Tenn., Texarkana, Tex., and Sturgis and Clay Ky.

In assessing his state-by-state survey Fleming, a student of his region for 10 years, wrote:

"The 1,100 instances of desegregation discovered were almost evenly divided between the five 'border' states on the one hand and the 12 'Southern' states on the other. Virtually all of them took place smoothly and harmoniously.

"Obviously, a large reservoir of good will and capacity for change exists among private citizens, even in states where the official climate is harsh. There is no longer a solid South of segregation."

The survey covers the period from May 17, 1954—date of the U.S. Supreme Court decision holding school segregation unconstitutional—to May of this year.

It is the first regionwide attempt to find out what movements toward integration have taken place in the wake of the court's opinion among all segments of Southern life.

The survey did not deal with what was expected to take place but what has actually happened. More than 350 school districts in 9 of the 17 states had integrated to some degree. There were no integrated public elementary or secondary schools in Alabama, Florida, Georgia, Louisiana, Mississippi, Virginia or North or South Carolina.

Negro children were attending previously all-white Catholic parochial schools in 21 Southern cities located in Arkansas, Kentucky, Maryland, North Carolina, Oklahoma, South Carolina, Tennessee, Texas and Virginia.

Since 1935 some 164 accredited colleges and universities in Southern and border states and the District of Columbia have opened their doors to Negroes. Of these 164 now open to Negroes, 95 have newly desegregated at some level since May 1954.

As of May this year, Alabama, Florida, Georgia, Mississippi and South Carolina enforced complete segregation in state-supported institutions. However, all but South Carolina had at least one private college which admitted students of both races.

In the field of public service, Maryland stood at the top of the list in the number of Negroes appointed or elected in the two years inventoried. At least 11 Maryland Negroes were named, all but one for the first time, to city and state posts.

Fleming noted here that developments in this field are not a reliable measure of the extent of Negro representation. For example, he said, in 1954 Negroes already were serving on city councils in at least 11 Southern cities and held elective or appointive office in more than 20 others.

Public Housing.

In public housing, Fleming found "segregation not only deeply entrenched but virtually unchallenged in the South."

Even so, this field was not without its exceptions. Negroes were living in public housing projects occupied by whites in Taylor and Crystal City, Tex.; Baltimore; Charleston, W. Va.; St. Louis; and Rayne, La.

As for transportation, Fleming reported that "local transit systems known to have dropped segregation were found in Texas, Virginia, North Carolina, Alabama, Tennessee, Oklahoma and Arkansas.

Among religious groups 20 newly integrated ministerial associations were counted — four with elected Negro officers. Fleming noted, however, "the overwhelming majority of churches continue to serve either white or Negro congregations, although at least 10 formerly white churches accepted Negro members."

As for hotels, restaurants and theaters, Fleming observed, "desegregation in public accommodations and theaters has been confined so far mainly to cities in the border states, chiefly St. Louis and Louisville.

"Instances of new desegregated seating in motion picture theaters were found in five border states cities, and some eating places began serving both races in a like number of communities."

Why did the council undertake the survey at this time? Fleming explained in his summary: "It is universally recognized that this is a time of trouble in the South . . . In recent months dissension and conflict have dominated the news from the region. The danger is that Southerners themselves, to say nothing of people elsewhere, will be blinded to the constructive evidence and will surrender to fear and discouragement."

President Says U. S. Leaves Racial Control Up to States

Herald Tribune Thurs. 9-6-56

By Joseph R. Slevin

WASHINGTON, Sept. 5.—President Eisenhower today said the Federal government must be "very careful" not to use its police powers in school desegregation disputes until the states have shown that they can't keep order.

New York

The local authorities "have moved promptly to stop the violence" in each disturbance that has arisen since the schools began reopening for the fall term, he declared.

"Under the law, the Federal government cannot—in the ordinary normal case of keeping order and preventing rioting—cannot move into a state until the state is not able to handle the matter," Mr. Eisenhower told his news conference.

There has been no proof as yet that the states have shown "their inability or their refusal to grapple with this question properly," he said.

The President voiced his opposition to hasty Federal intervention in local conflicts when asked specifically about recent disorders in Mansfield, Tex., and more generally about "several instances of violence and near-violence."

Two racial disturbances have come to national attention during the past week: the attempts of white mobs to block the registration of Negro students at Mansfield and at Clinton, Tenn.

Mr. Eisenhower stressed, as he has before, that it will take time to carry out the two-year-old Supreme Court school desegregation ruling.

"It is difficult through law and through force, to change a man's heart," he said. "But I do believe that we must all, regardless of our calling in this world, help to bring about a change in spirit so that extremists on both sides do not defeat what we know is a reasonable, logical conclusion to this whole affair—which is recognition of equality of men.

"Now there, the South is full of people of good will, but they are not the ones we now hear. We hear the people that are adamant and are so filled with prejudice that they . . . even resort to violence; and the same way on the other side of the thing, the people who want to have the whole matter settled today.

Herald Tribune

"This is a question of leading and training and teaching people, and it takes some time, unfortunately."

Must Uphold Constitution

At that point he avoided giving a direct answer when asked whether he indorses the Supreme Court ruling or merely accepts it.

He said his attitude "makes no difference." The President must conform to the Constitution as interpreted by the Supreme Court and do his "very best" to see that it is carried out, he said.

Democratic Presidential nominee Adlai E. Stevenson has indorsed the Supreme Court decision. He urged that an "unequivocal" indorsement be included in the 1956 Democratic platform.

A reporter asked Mr. Eisenhower whether he has talked to the Justice Department about the stand taken by Gov. Allan Shivers of Texas while restoring order in Mansfield. The reporter said Gov. Shivers had ordered the Texas Rangers to reassign Negro pupils to schools outside of Mansfield and had declared: "I defy the Federal government."

Lacks Facts on Texas

The President said he has not discussed the Texas events because he is not familiar with either the order or the Shivers statement. He added that the government has sent for a copy of a Federal District Court order that calls for integration of the Mansfield schools.

Asked whether he believes Gov. Shivers surrendered to mob rule by barring the Negro students from Mansfield, he said he does not know whether the Governor ordered the Negroes transferred permanently or "until the situation is under control."

The President said he wants to emphasize this: "Certainly, every liberal will be jealous of protecting the locality's right to execute the police power in this country. When police power is exercised habitually . . . by the Federal government, we are in a bad way."

Can't Trust South With Desegregation

NEW YORK—Colored Southerners do not seriously expect much change in their civil rights status if white Southerners are permitted to work out the present crisis over desegregation in their own way.

Dr. Charles S. Johnson, president of Fisk University, issues a plea that desegregation not be left up to the South in a copyrighted magazine article.

Writing in the New York Times Magazine, the noted sociologist declares that the most significant improvements in the southern status of southern colored people have come as a result of Federal insistence and world opinion.

DR. CHARLES S. JOHNSON, president of Fisk University, writes that state governments in the South are dominated by rural legislators whose overall attitude is "anti-labor, anti-capital, anti-race, anti-liberal, anti-civil rights, anti-education, anti-intellectual, anti-technology and anti-Federal Government."

"It is a tragic pity," he writes, "that while the rest of the world is giving new attention and respect to basic human rights, every device from subversion of law to violence is being employed to defeat the Constitution, and with such frantic desperation that no voice of stern national statesmanship dares defy, without apology and compromise, this organized retreat from freedom to tyranny and feudalism."

THE MIDDLE - OF - THE ROAD philosophy that seems to dominate much of the nation's thinking in matters pertaining to race is due to a confusion of the "moral imperatives," according to the article.

The arguments being advanced in defense of the "southern way of life" are "illusory" and "reckless" and completely ignore the views of southern colored people. This, Dr. Johnson states, is part of the "southern way."

He cites as an example efforts to discredit integration by "proving" that colored children are not as intellectually capable as white children. "It is a tortuous logic that would use the tragic results of inequality to establish the need of continuing it."

* * *

DR. JOHNSON OBSERVES, in this connection, that in the comprehensive intelligence tests for army recruits, colored recruits from Ohio, where better schools are available, scored higher than white recruits from every state of the South except Florida, where there has been an appreciable northern migration.

He concludes with the observation that this is not basically a struggle between white and colored, or the North and the South, or between the national and international points of view, but a struggle between those who believe in democracy and those who do not.

Fisk U. President Flays The South

382 P. 9

President Charles S. Johnson of Fisk University came out of his (Southern) corner literally swinging both fists at Dixie in a devastating attack which has left the South groggy. Chicago Ill.

Dr. Johnson, as every one knows, is given to considerable patience and forbearance. But, the violence with which many of the states below the Mason and Dixie line greeted the Court's school decree, has stirred the ire of the learned Fisk President.

Writing in a recent issue of the New York Times magazine, Johnson was unsparing in his criticism of the South's backward agrarian economy, its medieval mores and politics.

In his view, one which every enlightened person shares, the South is so busy defeating "civil rights" that scarcely any attention is given to such matters as health, welfare and the economy of the region. Moreover, it was pointed out that those who invest themselves with the authority to speak for the South and preserve its idiotic "way of life," are in truth the "greatest present danger to American democracy."

By holding down nearly 10 million solely for the purpose of perpetuating an indefensible system, the South is not only a danger to American democracy, it is also its own worse enemy. For, its social policy has not only retarded the Negro, it has impoverished an economy that has all the warrants of productivity.

With impeccable logic, Dr. Johnson observed that the most obvious and immediate outlet for an expanding economy is the increased purchasing power of the underdeveloped markets at home. But, argued Johnson that is impossible in a social economy that artificially limits earning power through a restrictive social system.

"We cannot escape the fact," Johnson declared, "that the Negro minority market alone, even when held down by unequal opportunity and limited education to one half its potential, is equal to the total wealth of Canada or to our total foreign exports."

Johnson is of the opinion that basically, the struggle for human rights is not between North and South or whites and Negroes, or between the national and international points of view. It is a struggle, he said, between those who believe in democracy and those who do not.

To-date, Dr. Johnson has the distinction of being the lone educator North or South, white or black with the moral courage and conviction to speak above whisper and in broad daylight concerning the South's negative philosophy in the context of American democracy. In so doing he is rendering a service to humanity at large.

On segregation coverage—

South's protest letters apparently having effect

News Wash. 3-29-56 P. 12

BY JAMES FREE, News Washington correspondent

WASHINGTON, March 29—Those Southern letters of protest to big national magazines about their coverage of the segregation issue in the South are having a good effect.

Birm, Ala.

"I think you will find that Time and Life and Look are less harsh in their articles about the South and about Southerners in Congress than they were only a few weeks ago," said Courtney Pace, administrative assistant to Sen. James O. Eastland.

"A number of times in the past Time magazine has made nasty comment about Sen. Eastland," said Mr. Pace. "And we were looking for the worst when the magazine did a cover piece on the senator last week. But it was a lot better than we thought it would be. On the whole, they were much more fair than in the past."

AND PACE knows that the big magazines have been getting protest letters from Dixie. "A lot of people in Mississippi and Alabama and other states have sent us carbon copies of their letters," he explained.

In the week after Time's cover picture and story on Eastland, Pace said that only a few dozen communications about it had been received.

"Everything that's come in so far has been favorable to the senator and what he stands for," said Pace. "I guess one reason why the other side has not been heard from is that the article was on the temperate side.

"It's those one-sided, nasty articles that stir up the poison pen people."

PACE SAID he hoped that this change for the better in national magazine coverage of the segregation issue in the South will continue.

"Those letters from the South seem to have shown those publishers that it is a short-sighted policy to print slanted stories about what happens in Mississippi and Alabama," he said. "Nobody will object if they carry both sides of the story.

Fund for Republic Finances Survey—Report Without Comment Is the Aim

A survey to compile a factual inventory of racial integration in the North is under way.

It is being made by a former New York newspaper man and a staff of researchers under a grant from the Fund for the Republic. The fund was set up by the Ford Foundation but is now independent of it. The Fund for the Republic says its purpose is to support activities aiming at the elimination of restrictions on freedom.
